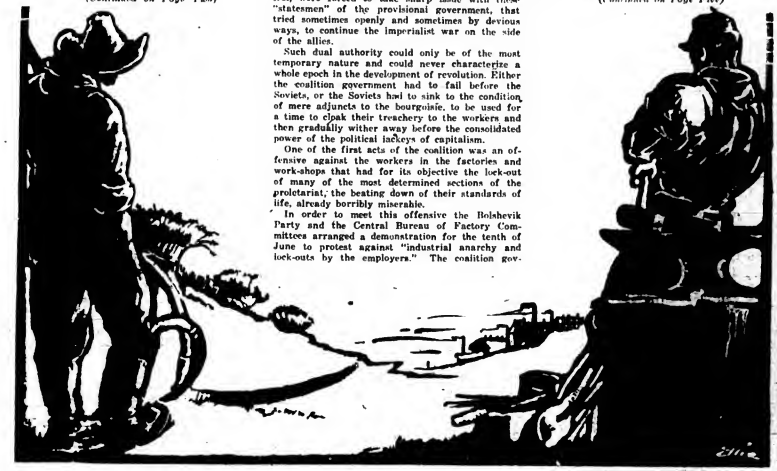
One of the first acts of the coalition was an offensive against the workers in the factories and work-shops that had for its objective the lock-out of many of the most determined sections of the proletariat, the beating down of their standards of life, already horribly miserable.



In order to meet this offensive the Bolshevik Party and the Central Bureau of Factory Committees arranged a demonstration for the tenth of June to protest against "industrial anarchy and lock-outs by the employers." The coalition government was desperately afraid that such a demonstration would develop into a rising and so appealed to its agents in the Soviets to take action against it. The Soviet Congress debased itself before the contemptible scoundrels of the coalition ministry and issued a denunciation of the proposed demonstration, using revolutionary slogans to conceal its counter-revolutionary character. The Bolshevik Party was denounced and the workers and soldiers were exhorted to "remember that demonstrations these days may hurt the cause of the revolution. At this dangerous moment," continued the manifesto, "you are called out into the streets to demand the overthrow of the provisional government to which the All-Russian Congress has just found it necessary to give support. And those who are calling you out cannot but know that out of your peaceful demonstration chaos and bloodshed may result."

This shameful and provocative manifesto, issued by the Council of the Soviets, dominated by the Mensheviks, on behalf of the coalition government, caused the Bolshevik leaders to abandon the demonstration because they were aware that the proposed peaceful demonstration would probably be turned into a slaughter of workers by mercenaries, criminals, former black-hundreds and other elements whose historical destiny it is to play the part of bribed tools of reaction in such situations.

In spite of the fact that the Mensheviks controlled the Soviets and were using their power to break the effectiveness of these revolutionary organs of the masses, the Bolsheviks realized that a deep-laid plot was on foot to utilize the demonstrations as an excuse for fierce excesses against the workers and the eventual dispersing of the Soviets. The Petrograd Soviet was the revolutionary core of the whole movement, but an All-Russian Executive Committee had been set up that tried to cripple the work of the local Soviet.

Determined to carry out the plots against the workers and to crush at one stroke the opposition to the bourgeois government, the reactionaries, the

EDITOR'S NOTES

It must also be remembered that the menace of American imperialism, with its inevitable consequences of heavy taxation, war, militarism, abolition of the remnants of civil liberties, increased exploitation for the working masses, further ruination of agriculture, etc., that this menace must be looked not only from the exploits of American imperialism in China or against the Soviet Union, but also from its outrageous performances in Latin-America. It is here—in the Philippines, Haiti, Santo Domingo, Nicaragua, Mexico, etc.—that American imperialism is exhibiting its ugliest face. And it is the sharpening of American imperialist policies in Latin America that is pregnant with the most immediate dangers.

The peoples of the colonies oppressed by American imperialism, as well as the nations of Latin-America generally, are becoming ever more resentful of American imperialist exploitation. They cannot and will not make peace with a situation which degrades them to disgrace and slavery. They cannot and will not surrender their national independence, their freedom and their self-respect for the glory and profits of the big capitalists of the United States. And the question is: Where are we heading to? What is bound to be the outcome?

American labor must give thought to this situation. The American farmers, exploited and ignored and insulted by big capital and its government, must also wake up to these dangers. And so should the truly liberal, anti-war and anti-imperialist sections of the poorer middle classes. Big capital and its political servants are proceeding full speed ahead and their will not be stopped on their disastrous course by sweet sounding phrases and pious wishes from the opposition. An organized, militant and powerful anti-war and anti-imperialist movement, backed by large masses of workers and farmers, this is the first condition for the beginning of a successful struggle against the war danger. No time must be lost for developing such a movement.

THE efforts of the American section of the All-American Anti-Imperialist League should be given all possible support. First, because this organization submits a clear program and a definite practical policy for launching a real anti-imperialist campaign in the United States. Second, it has proven in actual deeds its ability to arouse and organize sentiment in favor of the peoples oppressed by American and world imperialism. Third, it has a broad national basis, as is demonstrated in the present call by several prominent leaders for a truly anti-war and anti-fascist conference on a national scale. It was one of the American organizations represented at the recent Amsterdam Congress held recently in Brussels, Belgium. Fourth, it is a militant organization and it has a clear conception of the importance of labor and farmer unity, their organized support and participation as a condition for the effective power of any American anti-imperialist movement. And, fifth, it is not sectarian. It proposes and fights for a real united front of all truly anti-imperialist organizations and groups by one powerful, determined against American imperialism and against the war danger.

We call the above considerations to the particular attention of the delegates that are or have been present at the Conference of the People's Relief of the workers, farmers and poorer sections of the middle classes which alone can offer effective resistance to the imperialist machinations of the big capitalists of the United States.

It is for these reasons that we again ask the question: Is Lowden the candidate to wage a real struggle and defeat the imperialism of the Coolidge administration? Is he, and his backers, to be relied upon to organize and lead a real fight against Big Capital and for the interests of the workers and farmers?

Words are cheap, particularly for capitalist politicians previous to parliamentary elections. The masses have been fooled by words more than once. The masses want to see a REAL defeat of Coolidge and not the mere substitution of one agent of Big Capital for another one. The masses are interested in a REAL defeat of American imperialism which can be accomplished by their own political struggles independent of and in opposition to the political agents of Big Capital—the Republican and Democratic parties. How much of SUCH a struggle is Lowden and his organization able and willing to wage?

COOLIDGE must be defeated. And so must Coolidgism. During his term in office President Coolidge has proven himself the most loyal defender of the interests of Big Capital and the most consistent enemy of the workers and farmers. But a struggle against Coolidge, if it is to benefit the toiling masses must be a struggle against Big Capital and a struggle against the Republican and Democratic parties. This requires a United Front of Labor on the political field. This requires a Labor Party backed by the trade unions and the workers generally. This also requires a firm political alliance between labor and the working farmers. And towards these ends must be directed the efforts of all progressive and militant elements in the workers and farmer organizations.

THE DAILY WORKER is again in danger. This time the situation is more serious than ever before. The present attempt is clearly directed towards the destruction of the militant voice of American Labor.

It is part of the present general attack upon the progressive and militant elements in the labor movement. It is part of the capitalist campaign to fortify its rear before launching more decisively on its militant imperialist exploits abroad. The attack upon the Daily Worker is motivated by one desire: to silence the most militant spokesman of anti-war and anti-imperialist sentiment in the United States.

The progressives and militants in the labor movement cannot and will not permit this to happen. Nor will the true anti-imperialists stand by and see the Daily Worker silenced. The appeal of the Daily Worker will be received and answered in such a way as to insure its continued existence and struggle against war, against imperialism and for the liberation of the toiling masses from the oppression of American capitalism.

Organizing the Chinese Workers

The League of Women's Rights is a middle-class organization, not touching the workers or the peasants, with a membership of 200 to 300 at Canton. The Organization of Women Revolutionaries is said to be a sort of rival of the League of Women's Rights and has 50 members.

The Women's Freedom League, which receives help from the Kuomintang (the People's National Party), has 35,000 members, of whom 18,000 are in Canton. Of the members 40 per cent are students, 45 per cent workers and 15 per cent peasants. They have 29 circles in the town of Canton and 26 clubs in the province. They have held their first congress —which is claimed to be the first women's congress to be held in China—at which 24 delegates represented 12 districts all over the province of Kwangtung. At this congress a resolution was passed urging the formation of a women's organization for all China. They have also held three elections for their executive committee, which changes every six months. A monthly paper is published in Chinese called the "Ray." The Women's Freedom League claim that they have aroused much interest among the workers, as they were the first body to occupy themselves with questions affecting working women. They realize how much there is to be done, how far behind the Chinese women are in education, customs, and their mode of life.

Some organisation, no doubt of a political nature, is being established in all girls' schools. There are organisations of feminists in several provinces of China; at — Peking there is a body, calling itself the Central Organization of All Women's Organizations in China, which is nearly dead.

COMRADE VOIKOFF A REVOLUTIONIST

Comrade Voikoff, Soviet minister to Poland was shot to death by a czarist plotter in Poland. Comrade Voikoff was walking to the railroad station in Warsaw (capital of Poland) with Comrade A. P. Rosengolz, when the murderer ran up and emptied his revolver into the body of the representative of the Russian workers.

Comrade M. Voikoff was a revolutionary fighter who had given his whole life to the cause of the workers. He took part in the great Russian revolution and later occupied high posts in the Workers' Government. In 1924 he was named minister to Poland.

It is quite clear that this act is a result of a united campaign of attack on the Workers' Soviet Government by their, as well as our enemies, the capitalists powers led by England and America. The British government is directly responsible for the murder of our comrade because they have given money, incited and protected these assassins.

The workers all over the world, but especially the Polish and Russian workers are wild with anger over the murder of their comrade. Big protest meetings are being held all over the world. We, the workers' children of America, also protest with all our might against the murder of Comrade Voikoff which we see as a part of the big attack against the Soviet Union. We, at all times stand ready to support and defend the only workers' government.

Organizing the Chinese Workers

Canton is also the headquarters of the Canton Federation of Peasants' Unions. This organization was in the early part of 1926 more or less confined to the provinces of Kwangtung and Kwangsi, but its influence was extending to other provinces.

The organization of the Peasants' Unions is as follows: The peasants and small farmers in a village are organized in one unit. These units are grouped in towns, districts and provinces. If more than one-third of the farmers join the union, then they form a branch. In small villages where there are less than 30 members, they cooperate with an adjoining village. Larger areas are sometimes divided into arrondissements.

Mr. Fung, secretary and member of the executive of the Federation of Peasant's Unions, informed me that there are 60 districts comprising 20,000 members. The villagers hold mass meetings, the larger organizations have delegate meetings. On the central executive committee there are 13 members. There is also a standing committee of five and in the districts standing committees of three. Provincial congresses are held annually, district congresses every six months, congresses in sections smaller than districts every three months and village meetings every month. Members of the central executive committee hold office for one year, officials of district committees for six months and others for three months.

The conditions for membership are as follows:

Members

1.—Must own less than 100 mow of land (roughly less than 17 acres of land).

2.—Must not be farmers whose interests conflict with the peasants.

3.—Must not be moneylenders who mortgage farms.

4.—Must not be "merchamen."

5.—Must not have connections with imperialists.

The entrance fee is $1 (I was told sometimes less). There is a maximum monthly fee of 10 cents. Those who smoke opium or gamble are excluded. I asked Mr. Wang, the secretary, how they could know this. He replied that it was easily known to the village circle if, for instance, anyone was an habitual gambler. Persons who do not attend three meetings or those who refuse to obey the orders of the party, are expelled.

The chief points in the program of the Peasants' Union are:

1.—To obtain better conditions for the peasants and small farmers.

2.—To improve village organizations, which are now in the hands of the landlords.

3.—To raise the social status of the peasants and small farmers.

The farmers in Kwangtung, the province in which Canton is situated, are divided in two: those who are landowners and those who are tenants of the landlords. Their condition is very bad on account of the bandits who infest the territory and also as a result of the fighting.

The organizers of the Peasants' Union stated, as regards the economic status of the peasants and small farmers, that the average size of the small farm belonging to an independent farmer was from 2 to 3 mow (one-third to one and one-third acres). One mow is said to produce about $30 per annum, so that the independent peasant farmer may get between $60 and $360, that is between £6 and £24 from his farm per year. The rent of these small farms often swallows up as much as one-half to two-thirds of the revenue.

Not very long ago the provincial office of the peasant organizations had just two old tables covered with papers in disorder, some rickety chairs, a poor desk and a poorly paid copyist who, having too much to do, could finish nothing. When I visited the headquarters of the Peasants' Union in May 1926, there were five departments working regularly, organization, propaganda, economic and military departments and the secretariat. Besides voluntary workers, there are twelve paid clerks. Four booklets and forty-three pictorial bulletins and slogans have been published. A weekly paper, the "Plough" appears regularly in twenty to thirty sheets and 10,000 copies are distributed.

The Peasants' Organization has undoubtedly been of considerable military value to the Cantonese in assisting their advance in their Northern Expedition.

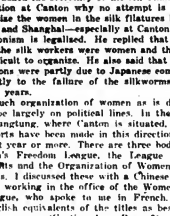
ORGANIZATION OF WOMEN.

The organization of women workers is one of the most pressing of China's industrial problems. Women and children are now more and more entering industry, in order to supplement the insufficient earnings of the father of the family; and the fact that in general they receive even lower wages helps to depress the rates of the men workers.

At present, where they are organized at all, they appear to be organized with the man workers—and that is chiefly in the textile industry in Shanghai! True, in Canton, I was told of a trade union which had been in existence for two months which organized the women in a match factory together with the men; and of a women's union in a stocking factory, claiming 200 members, which is said to have been in existence for three years. But these are tiny numbers compared with the women employed in the cotton mills and silk filatures. In Shanghai, there are said to be 125,000 workers employed in textile factories, of whom 57,700 were stated to be organised in the cotton unions affiliated to the Shanghai Federation of Labor Unions. As more than 60 per cent of these cotton workers were said to be women, it is to be presumed that some of the organized workers are women, but I could not obtain any figures.

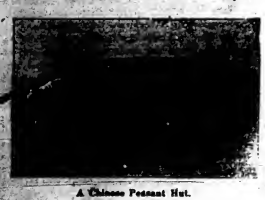
Probably, also, some of the women employed by the Chinese-owned Nanyang Bros. Tobacco Co. are among those who are organized in Yellow unions in Shanghai, as about 70 per cent of the 5,000 workers employed by this company in Shanghai are apparently women.

In Shanghai the secretaries of both the Red and Yellow Union Federations stated that there was no organization at all among the silk workers, of whom there are 75,000, mostly women and girls. I was told that at one time a trade union was organized in the silk filatures by a Chinese woman worker. She was soon taken over by the Chinese employers as a sort of welfare worker. All trade disputes went through her hands and in the opinion of the workers she looked after the employers' interests and not theirs. She became an official safety-valve instead of a workers' organizer—a much safer person. When I met her she appeared to be in very prosperous circumstances. Her volte face had rather disheartened the silk workers in Shanghai and discouraged any further attempts at organisation.



There were, however, in June 1926, a number of strikes, one of them affecting as many as 30 silk filatures, in which 13,400 workers were involved, which indicate considerable solidarity among the women workers. Two of the strikes, according to the reports which I have seen, complained of the formation of a new Silk Filature Workers' Union, charged the union with being in conspiracy with the owners to delay the payment of the workers' wages and demanded the closing down of the union; which was done by order of the chief of the Wonsung and Shanghai Constabulary. All this is difficult to understand unless the new union was held by the workers to be a bogus organization set up by the employers, in order to forestall any other movement. Quite recently in Shanghai some women social workers have gone to reside in the chief silk filature area, in order to get into touch with the women workers, study their needs and help them to improve their conditions.

The majority of the silk filature workers in China appear to be employed in the neighborhood of Canton. I was told that out of the 300,000 silk workers in factories in the whole country there were 200,000 workers, almost entirely women and children, employed in 170 silk filatures at Shundak, about four hours by boat from Canton up the Pearl River. They have no organisation at all, although their conditions of work appear to be just as bad as elsewhere in China.



I asked the secretary of the All China Labor Federation at Canton why no attempt is made to organise the women in the silk filatures both at Canton and Shanghai—especially at Canton where trade unionism is legalised. He replied that 95 per cent of the silk workers were women and therefore very difficult to organize. He also said that the bad conditions were partly due to Japanese competition and partly to the failure of the silkworms in the last two years.

Such organization of women as is done appears to be largely on political lines. In the province of Kwangtung, where Canton is situated, considerable efforts have been made in this direction during the past year or more. There are three bodies, the Women's Freedom League, the League of Women's Rights and the Organization of Women Revolutionaries. I discussed these with a Chinese woman who was working in the office of the Women's Freedom League, who spoke to me in French. I give the English equivalents of the titles as best I can.

The Stevedore

When ships come in from Glasgow, Singapore
Or Java, stevedores have their work to do
Unloading kapok, spices, wool or glue,
Or from the Straits a cargo of tin ore,
Or Madagasgar rubber's to the fore,
Or then again it's cotton from Peru,
Or burlap from Calcutta or a slew
Of hides from Argentine to get ashore.

And then come precious silks from far Japan
And gold from Africa to please the plutes.
And though such cargoes nearly break a man
I think of those who toil— mere beaten brutes—
Beyond the seas producing all these things
To swell the coffers of their lords and kings!

Dark Days for the Knights of the Night Shirt

By T. J. O'FLAHERTY

THE political atmosphere of Indiana, once the stronghold of the Ku Klux Klan, is again livid with the lightning of scandal, charges, innendoes, and threats of jail for men in high places in the state and city governments of the Hoosier stronghold that has contributed several leading lights to the U. O. P., several convicted political grafters to Atlanta penitentiary and scores of thousands to hang night-shirts on, inside the invisible empire of the K. K. K.

The lid is now being lifted off the political cesspool and the miasma that has been held down by strong pressure for several years is breaking thru the barriers in great odoriferous gusts.

D. C. Stephenson, former grand dragon of the K. K. K. in the "realm of Indiana" a man from "god knows where" is sojourning in prison, convicted on the charge of causing the death of a young girl, after mistreating her. The former dragon did not exhibit much excitement after the deed was committed. He believed that the G. O. P. politicians who owed their election to the support of his organization would soothe the irate nerves of justice and drop enough dough in the scales to bring down the verdict in his favor

But a ruined, raped and murdered girl is a hot potato even in the hardboiled klan-dominated state of Indiana and before Stephenson was many days older, the once powerful dictator found his erstwhile friends everywhere But where he needed them. Still there were whisperings that a pardon would be sneaked for him : ter a while, as soon as things quieted down. But Stephenson was tried and sulked and hoped, but the hoped-for deliverance did not materialize. Pitting his faith against the indifference shown by his former political friends he helped to nip in few budding anti-klan exposes and saw the suds of expectation dry on the greedy lips of Senator James A. Reed, of Missouri, who hawked his one-man slush fund committee to Indianapolis, seeking whom he might devour. Reed, democratic aspirant for the presidential nomination on the donkey ticket left the Hoosier capital without anything hanging from his belt except a latchkey and a corkscrew.

For saving the hides of his friends, Stephenson, the former grand dragon, all-raufid patriot, protector of pure womanhood and slayer of the demon rum, expected to return speedily to his old haunts, where amid wine and wassail and the cheering company of the fair sex, he could relieve the tension of protracted excursions among the social wilds where lived the untamed citizenry who did violence to the Nordic conscience in remaining outside the pillowed brotherhood of the K. K. K. But alas for Stephenson. When it came to making sacrifices, the Indiana politicians were not unwilling to offer up an appeasing subject to the gods but they were lonthe to jeopardize one of their votes even the Stephenson might stay in jail until his klan uniform had turned into rehes. So Stephenson stayed and brooded.

Who is this man Stephenson and how did he acquire the power that made and unmade politicians in the state of Indiana?

He arrived in the state while the klan boom was on the upgrade and thousands of ex-socialists, insurance agents and ex-hartenders found a lucrative employment roping in members into the hooded order and doing a brisk business on the side selling shirts, pillowslips and other pieces of haberdashery that went to accoutre the richly eparisioned morons that peopled the K. K. K. Stephenson was a go-getter, had a deep booming voice and a smart appearance.

This crusader for 100 per cent Americanism hopped into the fight to save the nation from Negroes, Irish, Jews, and radicals and before long occupied a high position in the tar and feather society. He became a big mine owner and indirectly led a faction of the United Mine Workers of America at the 1924 convention in Indianapolis. The writer attended a klan meeting in that city during the convention and listened to a local kleagle read an order from this same Stephenson instructing his followers in the union to beware of strikes and to cooperate with the employers in increasing production. The object of this policy was to save the country from the most Nordic elements that were poisoning its political and social blood-stream.

The this group of kluxers openly avowed their intention of capturing the U. M. W. of A. and were supported by the union officials of the Indiana district, John L. Lewis, the red baiter did not have a word to say in criticism of the K. K. K. policy of boring from within. Those were the heydays of the K. K. K. in Indiana. Stephenson lived in a mansion and owned a palatial yacht on board which he and his friends revelled.

He ruled an organization that extended thruout the state and into neighboring states. His spy system kept tabs on the doings of politicians and those of them that are not like Caesar's wife was supposed to be, lived in dread of Stephenson's blackmail threats. An organization for the detection and apprehension of horse thieves—a lost art since horse flesh lost out to gasoline — was turned into an armed K. K. K. force at the service of the grand dragon. When his downfall took place it was reported that he had the ambition to become president of the United States. However that may be, he did not become president and is not likely to.

This was the character whose word was law with the senators from the Hoosier state who made the welkins ring with their patriotic effusions in the oil-stained capital of the nation. When Senator Ralston, democrat, was gathered into the rustless arms of his fathers, Stephenson compelled Governor Jackson to appoint Arthur Robinson in his place. Senator James E. Watson, one of the wheel horses of the G. O. P. machine, was alleged to have a membership card in the klan. He denied the allegation. Now it may be told.

Weiry unto irrepressible indignation over the scurvy treatment accorded him, Stephenson has decided to squeal. There are many vacant chairs in the prison chair factory he says. He wants to see them occupied during working hours by some of his former political friends. But those fellows have ears as keenly attuned to warning noises as the wild curlews on the hills of Scotland. The governor discovered that he had an appointment in Kansas City and others made themselves scarce in places where they used to hang out.

When Thomas Adams, the Indiana publisher tried to pry the lid off the klan cesspool a few years ago he was almost ruined. Enemies sniped at him from every corner and loop hole and it looked for a while as if he could thank his stars if he escaped jail or an early grave for his pains. But Adams is now chuckling. Stephenson is going to spill the dirt and the hidden documents that Senator Reed tried to unearth when he held his session in Indiana are now about to be brought forth, laden with facts that "will rock the state and shock the nation."

The bottom has fallen out of the Ku Klux Klan. The deluded petty bourgeois and proletarians who were led to believe that the Negro, the Jew and the non-Nordic alien were responsible for their misery have removed the rheum from their eyes and now see things more realistically. Perhaps they do not yet realize that the conditions that suggest a shortening of the belt can be laid at the door of the capitalist system which takes toll off the toil of alien and native, Jew and gentile, black and white with unstulled partiality. The charlatans that once fatted on their folly have now retired on a competence or have entered some other line of legitimate graft.

The misguided workers who joined the K. K. K. thinking that it offered a solution for their economic problems should now be in a receptive mood to listen to the program of Communism which alone points the way toward the goal which all workers desire to reach, namely, freedom from all kinds of slavery and economic security for all those who contribute to the social sustaining fund.

THE POET AND HIS SONG

Within my head a little song
Keeps singing, singing all day long.
I cannot make it stop, you see,
It sings and sings in spite of me
And so the song I'll have to keep
Until it sings itself to sleep;
And then, when it is still, quite still,
I'll take my pen and quickly kill
This little song, compressing it
Into a casket fine and fit—
Some form of trite and pretty verse
Where it will lie, wrapped in a curse.
I'll send it to a publisher
Who'll print it, paying so much per!

CABARET AT DAWN

A jazz band blared to call the yokels in
And lewd songs rose above the raucous din.
Anemic clerks and florid plutocrats
Came here in noisy sexarms and checked their hats
And drank bad liquor, joined by painted drabs,
And stiffly danced with many jolts and jabs
Of knees and elbows in the sweating crush
Upon the tiny floor. And then a rush
For taxies homeward or to cheap hotels—
And now it is a place of whiskey smells
And stale tobacco smoke. The door is shut
And gone each blear-eyed hanger-on and slut,
A sleepy watchman pounds the nearby pave,
Scrub-women hurry by, each one a slave
Who cringes at the taxies' rush and roar
Along the startled street. And now no more
The music and the laughter. Gone is sight
And all its garish gaiety and light,
And dawn creep pallid as a ghost to mock
The workers coming down to punch the clock.

Uncle Sam's Wage Slaves

By ELLEN WETHERELL

ON the dank, unwashed floors of the great press room of the government's "bureau of printing and engraving" at Washington, there are deep depressions made by the foot-steps of the women wageslaves as they move forward and backward in a steady, monotonous tread about the presses at their work as printer's assistants. The men and women in this room are employed by the U. S. government to make its paper money. There are a few windows on one side of the room, but the light is insufficient and over each printing press there are electric burners whose heat vibrates the close, degressing air in which ink, oil and foul dust mingle with the breaths and sweat from the bodies of seven hundred men and women at work.

The clothing worn by the printers is caked with ink, while the dresses of the women drip with grease which flies from the presses in their revolutions. A girl's dress is ruined by a day's wear. Said one woman worker to me: "We went to Superintendent Ralph to ask if shields of zinc or some other substance could not be placed around the presses to protect the clothes of the women." With a satirical smile he replied, "Oh, yes, a bow of pink ribbon on every press if you say so."

Two years ago Alice Roosevelt and other society women declared that they "wanted to do some good." They said that they wanted to help improve the sanitary conditions of the bureau. One day these women drove down. Mr. Ralph knew of their intended visit, and he was ready for them. All the new wing of the building a dressing room was made clean and fine that these idle dames of society might see for themselves just how well the U. S. government at Washington took care of its workers. These ladies were not shown any of the work-rooms, nor did they see the dressing rooms in actual use.

Last week, following a guide, I went thru the bureau. I stood upon an elevated platform in the press room, where, as the guide said, "You can get a better view of the place." What I saw was a long, low room having a dozen windows or less at one side. An open iron grating higher than the head of the tallest man in the room, encircled all sides. Within this grating I saw a mass of men and women, and machines so huddled together that it would have been dangerous for a visitor to have attempted to move around among them. The noise of the presses drowned our speech, but a woman, from the open spaces of the far west, who stood beside me, said in my ears "How awful!" Then, apologetic for her government, she added, "But those men and women work only four hours a day." "You are mistaken, madam," I called back to the woman, "some workers here go on duty at eight in the morning, they have half an hour at noon for lunch, and they quit work at four-thirty at night." There is a night force at work in this bureau at Washington, and on this force over 200 women are employed. One pale faced worker said to me: "I prefer to work at night. Of course I get no evenings for recreation of any kind; but at night the bureau is less crowded, the air is better, and I am not so tired. I get home about one o'clock in the morning."

Alice Roosevelt has said that the Bureau of Printing and Engraving was no place for a woman to work, but she didn't say by what means the dependent bureau girls were to make a living.

We have all heard of the ingenious remark of the famous French queen, when told at the time of the great revolution that the people were starving for bread—"But why do they not eat cake," said she. This is the logic of the idle rich.

Unsanitary Conditions.

Most of the workers in the bureau eat their lunches in the building. They bring them in the morning and put them in the lockers provided for their clothes. Every man and woman in the press room is compelled to make a complete change of clothing before they go home. One girl worker said to me: "The lockers are but eighteen inches long and into this go my soiled clothes, my dirty shoes and my lunch. When we shake our clothes at night red nuts and mice run from them in all directions." The dressing rooms of the bureau women are taken care of by a charwoman, but they are never clean. If a girl wants her locker to be decent she must scrub it herself. Her towels a day are allowed for three hundred women.

A. F. of L. Falls Down.

The superintendent of the bureau claims that the women workers receive sufficient wages, but strange to say, the women think differently. Three years ago a handful of bureau girls came together to talk union. The men printers were willing to assist them in organizing. Mr. Ralph, the superintendent, said he had no objection, but the idea seemed to worry him. In a few months 200 women rallied to the organization under the A. F. of L. This union held meetings every two weeks. Frank Morrison, national secretary of the A. F. of L. spoke for the women and urged them to petition for a fifty-cent increase in wages. But his talk seemed half-hearted; scant was the help the bureau girls got from the national body of the A. F. of L. and either the headquarters of the A. F. of L. are located in Washington and Mr. Gompers and Mr. Morrison were well aware of the working conditions at the bureau, and the low wages of the women workers, nothing has been substantially done in aid of these exploited wage-slaves of the government by the national body of the American Federation of Labor.

The United States government workers in Washington cannot strike, they cannot vote, neither can they petition congress save thru the chief next higher in power.

It was by the help of a young radical some three years ago, and the determination of the bureau girls in their small union, that twenty-five cents increase in wages per day for women beginning their apprenticeship in the department, was wrung from Superintendent Ralph. Ralph boasts of his power to cut down expenses on behalf of the government. In 1910 he claimed that from the appropriations made that year he turned back into the U. S. treasury $500,000. Today the union of the bureau girls is at low ebb. I am told that those girls who have a married life in view are not friendly to the union. But there are good union women and good stuff to make class-conscious union women among the 3,000 workers in the bureau.

Girl Experts Get Pauper Wages.

Boys over sixteen years are employed as printers' assistants, but they are clumsy compared with the girls at work. To the well drilled girl, the work has become an art, and the printer who has become accustomed to his assistant's method of work likes to retain her in his employ. Printer's assistants receive $1.25 per day from the printer, and 25 cents from the U. S. government—the printers claim that the rakes in wages must come from the government. There are printer's assistants who can handle 2,000 sheets of bills a day, while a little over 500 is a big day's work for a boy. The printed sheets of money usually contain eight bills ranging in denomination from $1.00 to $10,000, the presses register the number of sheets printed. A printer's assistant takes a blank sheet of paper which has been wet with water to make it pliable and lays it on the press made ready with chemicals by the printer; then by a most laborious effort of his body and arms the printer turns the revolving press once. The assistant is at hand to take the stamped sheet from the engraved plates and to lay on another wet one. To do this she is compelled to step backward to a table for the wet sheet and then forward to the press. There are no seats for these girls and women to drop into even for a moment. They are always moving forward and backward, first with the wet sheet then with the printed bill in a confusing noise of machinery in the midst of dirt and grease.

I have been thru the notorious cotton mills of North and South Carolina; I have stood with the workers at the machines in the great shoe shops of Massachusetts. I know what it means to breath and work in the phosphorous laden air in the corporation match factories of New England, but I have yet to find a more congested, or foul workshop than that of the great press room at the Government Bureau of Printing and Engraving at Washington. An expert shoe-stitcher commands $25 to $30 a week. The government bureau women are obliged to pay for housing, food and clothes on a $9 a week wage.

Let those socialists who are clamoring for government ownership study the work conditions and wages of those industries in Washington over which the stars and stripes wave so proudly. Let them talk with these government wage-slaves and hear from their own lips how fine a thing it is to work for the United States government.

Hand Presses Superseded.

A bank note is not finished in the press room, but it has to pass thru the hands of 54 men and women and 20 machines before it becomes United States money. A printer is allowed to spoil one sheet in every one hundred, but if the sheet is lost the printer is obliged to pay the face value of the note. Today most of the printing of bills is done by hand presses; the printers claim that the work done by the hand press is of superior finish over that done by the power press. Superintendent Ralph favors power presses. It is said that he is to receive a bonus on each press introduced into the bureau. We know that Ralph was urgent at the late hearing before the congressional committee to prove that the power press was an improvement in every way over the hand press. "And there is the economy to the government," he pleaded. But Ralph said nothing about the money he could put into his own pocket by the introduction of power presses introduced into the bureau—and the discharge of a large number of printers and their assistants.

Of course the printers are against the power presses. The Printers' Union took action on the matter at the hearing, but, as the evolution of industry takes no account of the individual, neither does the capitalist, nor the capitalist government. There was a compromise and a small number of power presses are to be installed in the bureau. The Glass Blowers' Union claimed that never a machine could be invented to displace their high-grade hand labor. They were kings of the craft. But, evolution, so careful of the type is she, so careless of the single man, produced a glass blowing-machine which enabled six men to do the work of 600. No man or woman wants the bread taken from their mouths—nor is willing to starve for the sake of scientifically developed machinery, and the plate printers and their assistants in the bureau of printing and engraving are no royal exception.

Dangerous Work.

I was taken into the room where postage stamps are made, and into the revenue stamp room. The latter contains a new power press invented by Superintendent Ralph. This press does the work of five men at the old hand presses. Two girls run one press. The machine numbers, trims, places the seal, and separates the stamps. One million sheets were spoiled in testing the machine. There are revolving machine presses for printing postage stamps, 24 stamps on a sheet. The engraved plates are polished by the bare hand of the printer, each plate must be polished as it comes around, after the sheet has been removed by the assistant. This is dangerous work: the bare hand of the printer is in constant contact with the chemically prepared metal. Only one sheet at a time can be laid on a postage stamp press. One press can print 10,000 sheets of stamps a day. There are over 50,000 postage stamps sent out of the bureau each day. The noise made by the presses is deafening.

I passed on into the room where the stamps are examined and counted. A girl expert can count 15,000 stamps a day. About to leave the building I said to the guide: "There is one room we have not been into." I had heard that this room was particularly dangerous for visitors to enter because of its crowded spaces, and the fumes from the chemicals. The guide's answer came quickly. "You will not be allowed to go into that room." Capitalism is stronger than craft unions.

Craft Unionism Outgrown.

Class unions are needed for government wage-slaves as well as for all wage-slaves. The evolution of the machine in driving the craft union to bay. The demand today is for the uniting of all unions into a class union, and also demanding for each worker the full equivalent of his or her special product. This must be the program of all government employes at Washington and elsewhere. Industrial unionism thruout the world. A Workers' Government. Today the leaders of craft unions are of the "pure and simple" kind. Said one of the union men to me in Washington: "Politically I am a democrat—the democratic party first, last and always."

Washington's streets and avenues are spacious and beautiful. Its trees and parks and sparkling fountains are a source of delight. Its marble buildings command the admiration of the world, and, over and above these stately piles of marble, against the blue of the heavens, floats the stars and stripes, but beneath, liberty lies low and bleeding; and justice is a thing of scorn.

THE VICTIM

The wheels, flying like fiery steeds,
Stopped only for two minutes
When his body crushed and breathless
Fell down on the concrete floor
From the top of the whirling belt.

And now when two sturdy workingmen putting his bleeding body on a blue stretcher sadly take it out,
The fat-headed boss brings in a new led
Who since three days was waiting on the door of the factory for a job. . . .

Housing in the Soviet Union

By NIK. POGODIN (Baku)

FOREIGNERS visiting the U. S. S. R. are invariably surprised at the changes which have taken place within the last few years in the country which they formerly knew as Russia.

They are accustomed to think of Russia as an ignorant, barbaric country. This they learned from books on old pre-revolutionary Russia.

During the war with Germany I lived with an Austrian prisoner of war. He was an excellent locksmith and the Russian officials forced him, therefore, to work in a munition factory. He received very little wages as he was an "enemy." What always surprised me was how that man could live in a cultured and clean manner on his meagre earnings. He bought neck-ties and white shirts. After work he used to wash and dress up and take a walk out of town. Later on he made me teach him Russian and he read the daily press.

That surprised me at that time, and it surprised many others. We used to say, "here is a cultured man."

Twelve years have elapsed since then. Not so long ago (only a month ago, I lived in Ivanovo-Voznesensk) I travelled again through the oil districts of Baku and Grozny. I often thought of my Austrian friend. If I knew where he was I should write him a cheerful letter saying:

"Friend, we have caught up with you, in fact, we will soon be ahead of you. At any rate you would not surprise me any more with your neck-ties, white shirts and cultured manners."

Housing In Czarist Days.

It is very interesting to observe how our working man changes. He is not to be recognized.

Here is an oil pumper, a Persian from the Baku oil fields. Pumping oil is tedious and monotonous work. The Persian is ignorant; he has a poor knowledge of the Russian language. He recently left his native country as he was threatened with death from starvation. The only aim in life of that Musselman is to have enough to eat.

The "enlightened" bourgeoisie says about such people:

"He is despicable; he is just like an animal."

Perhaps in their eyes he does resemble a beast; for them every man should possess a dinner jacket.

The eyes of a Russian proletarian are somewhat different. An ignorant, filthy, ragged man is a brother at work and a class-relative. When the millionaire bosses had charge of him, he lived under horrible conditions, his domicile could not even be compared with a stable. One must know the dark, low, stuffy, over-crowded barracks in the oil-districts to realize the significance of house construction for the Russian workers.

The Persian knew his filthy corner in the barrack. To this corner he brought his wife, there she bore him his children; there he lay ill in filth and darkness. He knew no other life. He could not imagine anything better. He saw the large European Baku with the masters' palaces, their fast trotting horses and automobiles, but that was all for them; for him these were things beyond reach.

And suddenly the Persian is given an apartment. He is no longer in a corner, no longer in filth; he has a light apartment—three whitewashed rooms. He is bewildered. He, the down-trodden, ignorant, Persian is ready to cry. In his apartment there is a gas-stove, a bath with hot water. He comes home from his work, washes, eats hot food, and everywhere around him is light and cleanliness. What should he do now? Somehow he must arrange his life differently. He must now spend his after-working hours differently. And here we see a man becoming transformed. He is cleaner, he has bought himself a neck-tie and a shirt. He goes to the club; he is learning to read; the Persian is becoming a cultured worker.

That is the essence of home construction in the U. S. S. R. That is its enormous significance. I saw hundreds of such houses in Baku scattered in small towns near the oil fields. Architecturally they are beautiful. They are light and comfortable. There is the village and the club, flower-beds and electric railways which take one to work. The local administration took it upon itself to build houses for the workers. It spent more than was allotted for housing and the centre raised objections, but when people from Moscow came around and saw the difference between the old horrible barracks and the new villages, they said smilingly:

"Fine!"

This is also the case in Grozny. The Grozny works can truly be called Soviet works as everything was burned down by the bandits during the civil war. Now the powerful works have been restored, and they are known on the world market for the benzine they produce. Railways have been constructed. New villages are being built which resemble the small towns of Switzerland. Windows glisten in the sunshine, woman and children promenade the cheerful, sunny streets.

Here is the local Ivanovo-Voznessensk Soviet. We are taken out to see a new workers' town. It is built on European lines; the streets are cut straight, rows of trees are planted. In about two years the town will be like a garden. Further, we went from Orekhovo-Zuevo back to Donbas, the mining district, and the Urals, the metallurgical district. Everywhere new, light, workers' towns are in construction and a new cultured Soviet worker is developing.

Ideas are determined by environment.

Light and rest which give a good home to the worker bring forth new desires for knowledge and for a rational, cultured, organized life.

Housing Under the Soviets.

opportunists, arranged a demonstration of their own. But the masses, coming more and more under the influence of the Bolsheviks, changed it into a triumphal demand for the Bolshevik slogans against the coalition: All Power to the Soviets! Down With the Capitalist Ministers! Down with the Political Offensive!

This was an attempt to force the moderates in the Soviets to act against the coalition government. But on the next day, after careful preparations, a counter-demonstration of the bourgeoisie took place.

In order to stem the rising tide of discontent with and fury against the coalition the bourgeois (constitutional democratic) ministers resigned from the government. This act was a public admission of the instability of the coalition and convinced the revolutionary workers of Petrograd and the seething masses in the rest of the country that their demands were proper. It was apparent that a great spontaneous movement was about to break in Petrograd. The situation was tense. One false move might jeopardize the whole revolution. Kerensky, foreign minister in the coalition government, was now made premier while still retaining his portfolio as foreign minister. He and Tseretelli began frantic preparations to deliver the revolution into the hands of capitalism. He was waiting for time to mobilize the "loyal" regiments against the masses.

The Bolsheviks, along with every other working class group, advised against demonstrations, did everything within their power to persuade the workers of Petrograd that such outbreaks would be futile. The leaders of the revolutionary proletariat were aware of the fact that the masses outside Petrograd, although profoundly affected by the events of the preceding months, were not ready for the decisive struggle. But the masses poured into the streets anyway. When the July action took place and the masses were in the streets and face to face with the enemy it was no longer a question of debating. It was the imperative duty of the Bolshevik party to try to take the lead and impart a more peaceful character to the demonstrations and to give organized expression to their demands. The question of armed uprising could not yet be placed on the order of the day.

The July days constituted the turning point of the revolution. The Social-Revolutionaries (who afterwards became paid agents of the Allied military missions in an attempt to overthrow the victorious workers' and peasants' government) and Menshevicks exposed their true role as would-be hangmen of the revolution. They completely identified themselves with the Cadets and other bourgeois reactionaries and aided the massacres of the Bolsheviks, the suppression of the Pravda, the arrest of Trotsky, orders for the arrests of Lenin and Zinoviev, who were forced to flee for their lives, only to return on the wave of the November revolution.

In assailing the Bolsheviks the members of the government put into circulation the most infamous slanders, repeating and elaborating the fabrications to the effect that Lenin was a German agent in an effort to arouse, as they boasted, "the savagery of the troops."

During the frightful reaction that set in the Kerensky government was eclipsed by the general staff of the army which was officered by junkers and agents of the allies. The Soviets likewise, with the exception of the Petrograd Soviet disappeared from the scene. The reaction proceeded with the disarming of the revolutionary regiments that had refused to participate in the pogroms against the workers who turned into the streets to vent their fury against the betrayers of the revolution.

July Days in Russia clarified the party lines; no longer was there any doubt regarding the role of the Mensheviks as lackeys of the reaction and enemies of the proletariat. Kerensky tried to divert the lightning-flashes of revolution by constantly promising to call for elections for the constituent assembly, only to continuously postpone it. The Bolsheviks kept before the masses the slogan "All Power to the Soviets," as a rallying cry for the masses in an effort to overcome the effects of the counter-revolution, and assure the revival and the final triumph of the revolution, which was realized in a few short months.

GENEVA

The powers round a table sit
And play with loaded dice.
A pistol's hidden in each mit-
And yet they smile so nice.

They sit upon their mighty seats
And talk of guns and speed,
Of ration and merchant fleets
And such like things, I read.

They play for mastery of the sea
And speak with bloated lips
They give no thought to you and me
We build and man their ships.

Then let us say: "Kind sirs, attend!
This game has gone too far.
To all your navies make an end—
We'll have no more of war!"

Current Events

By T. J. O'FLAHERTY.

GOVERNOR Jackson of Indiana is wise in hitching the charge of graft levelled against him by ex-dry-czar Stephenson onto a horse. A steed may langh but it never tells. And nobody loves a tattler. "Woe unto the vanquished!" And woe unto the organization that depends on the favor of a capitalist politician when it falls on evil days. While the K. K. K. was riding the waves the politicians were willing to close the jail gates from the inside to its leaders. Now they are closing them from the outside.

AT the risk of repeating, we wish to call attention for the 20th time to the fiasco of the naval parley at Geneva. Instead of coming nearer an accord, the representatives of the three powers are progressively going in the other direction. The conflict between the Britons and the Yankees is nearing the physical force stage. Until now no blows have been exchanged, but we would not be surprised at any moment to hear of monocles clashing with wads of chewing tobacco. Then our movie patrons may well look forward to seeing British soldiers eating the babies that were devoured by the Germans several years ago.

COOLIDGE did not go to the Black Hills of South Dakota to escape the sticky heat of midsummer, we are informed. It is reported that his garters are giving him as much trouble as those of lesser and humbler mortals and that his socks sour as rapidly as delicatessen potato salad. But our self-sacrificing chief executive is really doing it trying to substitute beams for frowns on the belted brows and tired visages of the embattled farmers of the wide open spaces. Coolidge is one of those rare souls who regrets that he has only one soul to sell to Wall Street.

LADY Astor, the Virginia dollar aristocrat who brought a bag of dough and the tongue of a fish monger into a noble British family in return for a title, has distinguished herself on many occasions in her adopted country for her vicious attacks on every effort that spells human progress. Her latest publicity stunt was to heckle a radical preacher at a street meeting. The speaker happened to be a clergyman who was throwing a harpoon into the capitalist system. Lady Astor was appalled that a minister of the christian gospel should represent Jesus as a friend of the masses instead of a forerunner of the blood-thirsty bishops and priests of modern christianity.

AS those lines are written the news ticker is clicking out merrily a story of revolution in the city of Vienna, Austria, the Mecca of international social democracy. The socialists control the city politically, but as in every other instance they are playing the role of trained rams and keeping the workers in the chamber of exploitation. Here as elsewhere in Europe the fascists have been petted by the government and have abused and murdered workers with impunity. Against a recent flagrant example of judicial favoratism toward Fascism, the workers revolted and are now surging thru the streets in what appears from this distance to be a formidable mass movement aimed at the government.

WHETHER the revolution will spread or is headed off by the socialist traitors depends on the strength and discipline of the left wing and Communist elements among the masses. The Communist Party of Austria is weak numerically. The main reason for this is the clever opportunistic methods employed by the socialist leaders who used left phrases in order to fool the masses who are farther to the left than any socialist membership in Europe.

STRANGE isn't it that revolutions insist on following rather ungentlemanly methods despite the polita admonitions of liberals, pacifists and socialists against violence. Our socialist friends cannot very well blame the Communist International for this revolt. Vienna is the home town of Mr. Adler, the secretary of the Socialist and Labor International, that international auxiliary of the league of nations. We will watch Mr. Adler trying to ride the storm and trying to bring the wild proletariat ship back safely into the capitalist haven. Vienna may now have to What is Your Answer to the Charge of the Federal Court!

The Federal indictment against the Daily Worker and the members of the staff is not against these individuals as such. It is a charge against the working class of America and particularly, against its most militant section. The charges are levelled against these comrades as the direct representatives of the most militant and advanced section of the labor movement.

In this sense, not Alex Bittelman, William F. Dunne, J. Louis Engdahl, David Gordon, Joseph Kalar and Bert Miller are on trial. YOU ARE ON TRIAL. It is your fighting spirit which the Federal government and the Dollar Patriots wish to crush. It is your militant resistance to the Open Shop Drive and to the War Preparations, which they seek to destroy. It is your fighting organ, the DAILY WORKER, which they seek to suppress.

What is your answer to this charge? Will you meekly submit or will you resist with the fighting spirit of a real militant? We know you will not submit. We know you will fight. We know that you will show your colors by your active and vigorous support of the GUARD THE DAILY WORKER FUND. WATCH FOR YOUR CERTIFICATES.

"ALL OR NONE" IS CRY OF U. S. AT GENEVA TALK

Demand Britain Yield Naval Strength Forever

WASHINGTON, July 15.—"All or none."

This was the answer given by administration officials today to reports from Geneva that, failing to reach an agreement over the cruiser controversy, the tri-partite naval conference might conclude a treaty limiting other classes of auxiliary vessels, principally destroyers and submarines.

Great Britain, it was pointed out, was an enormous preponderance in cruiser strength, she has laid down twelve new cruisers since the war of the 10,000-ton type, giving her a superiority that the British Admiralty delegates at Geneva have persistently refused to yield.

U. S. Has Superiority.

The United States, while it has launched no new cruisers since the war, has superiority over both Britain and Japan in the matter of submarines and destroyers—a superiority which the American delegates have scornfully and insultingly refused to yield unless Britain accepts parity with the U. S. in cruisers as well as battleships. In that case, the American naval experts believe, the American fleet can hold the British armada in check until the greater economic strength of the U. S. A. outbuilds and outnumbers the British on the sea.

"Why should we agree to limit classes of ships in which we have superiority when we cannot obtain limitation in classes in which we are away behind," impatiently asked a State Department official, and added: "For us it is all or none."

And as evidently England, with her economic front crumbling, is absolutely determined that some at least of her naval superiority in one class of ships shall continue, and the prospects of successful "arms limitation" at Geneva seem remote.

Hunger Strike of Irish Free State Prisoners

LONDON, July 1 (By Mail).—It is reported here that the political prisoners in Maryboro Jail, Ireland, have gone on hunger strike. They demand to be transferred from this prison, to be released from enforced labor and prison clothing. They also protest against the bad food and conditions of the prison.

Government of Mexico Releases Dupes of the Priestly Riot Leaders

MEXICO CITY, July 15.—All Catholic lay leaders of the clerical rebellion against the Mexican government have been ordered released by President Calles. In the announcement of the amnesty, the president states that the rebellion is completely crushed, and the imprisoned men no longer dangerous. Furthermore, investigation has proved, says Calles, that they are largely tools of the Catholic hierarchy, acting out of fear of the priests, and therefore to be more pitied than punished.

OHIO MINERS END PLOT OF TRAITOR TO BREAK RANKS

Relief Committee Sends Appeal from Pittsburgh

BELLAIRE, Ohio, July 15.—The accounts appearing in the press here of an impending settlement of the lockout in Ohio on a basis of wage reductions have been repudiated by the scale committee of Sub-district 5 of Ohio, United Mine Workers of America.

Traitor Expelled.

The committee called a special session to investigate the reports in the papers, and found that one of their number, a certain James Kunik, always a reactionary, had taken the responsibility of giving out a public statement, pretending to involve the scale committee in a wage cutting contract with the operators, and intended to start a stampede of miners back to work and to break the union morale.

Kunik was expelled by the scale committee and a resolution adopted condemning his action, which says, in part:

Kunik Disloyal.

"We, the constituted Scale Committee, with the Executive Board, brand such actions of James Kunik to be disloyal and contrary to the policy outlined by the International Convention and later endorsed by the Sub-District Convention of which James Kunik himself was a party, such action upon the part of James Kunik is a gross betrayal to the policy of the International Organization and to the members of the Sub-District Scale Committee to which he had the honor of being elected.

"Therefore, we deplore the action

White Collar Mob Howl Glee as Men Die Before Crowd of 700 at Joliet

JOLIET, Ill., July 15. — Three men were legally strangled to death on the gallows here yesterday for participation in a jail break in which Deputy Warden Peter M. Kiely was killed.

A carnival spirit prevailed in the courtyard of the prison as more than 700 spectators witnessed the hanging. Members of the jury were led to reserved seats in front of the others.

The mob clamored and fought for vantage points to view the killings. Its blood lust was slaked at 7.15 when the three men dropped to their doom, writhing and kicking. During the execution the crowd laughed and joked.

As the hanging was being let out of the courtyard an usher shouted, "All out, folks, that's all—there isn't any more to see. Move out now so we can close the gate. All out. Don't crowd the aisles."

"Please don't be too optimistic. The forces of darkness and tyranny are exceedingly malicious, steadfast, implacable."

So write Sacco and Vanzetti as the days of their brief respite from execution slip away. Their warning comes in a letter to the Student Sacco-Vanzetti Committee and is published in the Sacco-Vanzetti Dawn.

"Without distrusting anyone in particular, or making judgments on the secret of any man's conscience, we know that the magistrates and the legislature of Massachusetts have not been with us—not only that, but what they have done to us," write the condemned Italian workers. "Massachusetts seems to be willing to do with and to give us everything except a new trial, or an open, public investigation and hearing of the case—because, everyone knows, that it would have vindicated us and indicted our persecutors."

Hearings Are Secret.

Reliable reports from Boston seem to bear out the beliefs of Sacco and Vanzetti. Defense attorney William G. Thompson has failed in his efforts to have governor Fuller's advisory commission open its sessions to the public. Feverishly the governor and his advisors, separately are in reviewing the streams of witnesses for and against the men, the jurors, Judge Webster Thayer, and former prosecutor Frederick G. Katzmann.

Hostile to Defense.

No one who has gone before Fuller or the commissioners will comment publicly, but some of the defense witnesses have complained of the hostility with which they were met. Former Judge Robert Grant of the commission has never hidden his animosity, and said months before his appointment by Fuller that Sacco and Vanzetti were guilty beyond question. His place on the commission now to question their guilt is considered anomalous by friends of the defense.

Lowell Not Yet Committed.

President Samuel Stratton of Mass. Institute of Technology has not spoken so plainly against the two Italians, but is known to have been unfriendly before his appointment by Fuller. President A. Lawrence Lowell of Harvard is considered the most open-minded of the three advisors. But behind him are some of the country's wealthiest and most conservative men —overseers of the university.

Friends of Sacco and Vanzetti closest to the situation are scarcely hopeful. They look on the secret proceedings with suspicion.

Waiting to Gloat Over Deaths.

If the week of August 10 brings electrocution to Sacco and Vanzetti as their sentence calls for, supporters of the men in their seven-year fight expect to hear smug justifications around the country. Rotary clubs, Kiwanis, chambers of commerce and others will brag of the many chances to prove their innocence given Sacco and Vanzetti.

Socialist Leaders Strenuously Attempt to Hinder Demonstration in the Streets

Industry at Standstill; Official Government Newspaper Captured; Machine Gun Fighting

BULLETIN

VIENNA, Austria, July 15.—"Traitors! Disloyal to the working class! You are finished! Our day has come! You have cold feet!" These and similar shouts greeted the Socialist leaders, prominent in the second international, who attempted to "plead for order" before the crowds of workers attacking government buildings in Vienna.

VIENNA, July 15. — Revolutionary conditions prevailed in Vienna today, when the workers' organizations enraged at the acquittal of fascists charged with the death of Socialists, captured the ministry of justice and police stations and raised the demand for a workers' government.

The Workers' Committee is reported to have sent an ultimatum to the government demanding the resignation of the cabinet and the police chief, threatening a general strike otherwise.

The police have withdrawn and worker guards and troops, equally divided, are assuming responsibility for order.

Effigies of ministers of the government have been strung up before the government buildings and burned. Ambulance stations have been established in the parliament buildings and the wounded are streaming in. Hundreds of police have suffered injuries and many of them have been virtually shorn of their uniforms.

Several police stations have been stormed and no reliable news is reaching police headquarters.

Hundred Fifty Casualties.

Nine persons are reported dead and 150 wounded as the result of the fighting so far.

Fighting prevailed throughout the city with police and troops attacking the workers who set up barricades.

Municipal workers have gone on strike and other trades are threatening to follow with the possibility of a general strike tieing up the city. Printers have walked out leaving the city without newspapers.

Storm Ministry.

VIENNA, July 15.—Furious fighting between the police and working class demonstrators broke out here today, during demonstrations of protest against the acquittal of fascists who had killed three workers and wounded several others.

More than 150 persons have been wounded in the fighting, in which workers stormed the ministry of justice and made their way into the building, burning a picture of the ex-

Police and troops were summoned and prepared to attack the workers who had taken refuge behind barricades.

The entire fire department was called out and the greatest excitement prevailed in the city.

Two Railroad Workers Killed Instantly as the Express Strikes Them

JERSEY CITY, July 15. — Two workers were killed and two others narrowly escaped today in the Croxton yards of the Erie Railroad when they were trapped between two passenger express trains near the Black Bridge tunnel.

The two dead men, John Johnson and John Countee, together with Frank Johnson and Peter Lace were on their way to a lumber pile. They were walking along track 3 when they saw a train approaching. They leaped to track 4 in the path of an eastbound express. The other two made a second leap and cleared the track. The victims were struck and hurled 20 feet and died instantly.

DENOUNCE WUHAN GOVERNMENT AS WORKERS' ENEMY

Third International Demands Action

MOSCOW, July 15.—There has been released for publication the official resolution of the Communist International dealing with the present phase of the Chinese revolution. The resolution states that the Communist International deems it imperative for the leadership of the Communist Party of China immediately to correct its mistakes of compromising with the wavering and treacherous elements within the Wuhan government. They must demonstratively and without hesitation leave the Hankow government and issue a fierce denunciation of that government.

Demand Punishment of Guilty.

In the most decisive manner the hostile attitude of the Hankow government toward the agrarian revolution and the labor movement must be denounced. It must be explained that this hostility to the elementary needs of the movement in China is the reason for the Communists leaving and denouncing Hankow. The most summary punishment must be meted out to those guilty of repressive measures against the workers and peasants and the treacherous policy of the Hankow government must be fully exposed.

Remain in Kuomintang.

While denouncing the Hankow government as traitors to the revolution, the Communist International insists that the Chinese Communist Party remain within the Kuomintang Party, in spite of the fact that the reactionary leaders of the Kuomintang are insistently demanding their expulsion. The nationalist liberation movement has gone forward thus far under the Kuomintang and the Central Committee of the Kuomintang must not be permitted to use the traditions of that organization and of Sun Yat Sen for purposes of stopping the revolution at a stage satisfactory to the big capitalists and the imperialists.

Through remaining within the Kuomintang as an opposition to the Central Committee, the Communists will strive to establish closer contact with the great masses of workers and peasants and ruthlessly expose the duplicity of the Central Committee, demand its expulsion and prepare for a congress of the Kuomintang in order to reorganize it without the counterrevolutionary elements.

Strengthen Labor Movement.

In addition to the fight within the Kuomintang, a maximum of effort must be devoted to building up and strengthening the labor and peasant movement. Work among the proletarian masses must be intensified in every way possible; mass labor organizations should be organized and masses should be prepared for decisive struggle; the leadership in

Brief Sketch of the Background of the Huge Struggles in Austria

In the last Austrian election held on March 24 of this year the social-democratic party polled 1,500,000 votes out of a total of 3,200,000 votes cast. This means that with the exception of 18,000 votes registered for the Communist Party list, the social-democratic ticket and program were supported by practically the whole working-class of a country of approximately 6,000,000 population. In addition to the workers, many thousands of middle class elements supported the social-democrats.

The capitalist parties have 94 parliamentary seats and the social-democrats 71.

Austria is a creature of the League of Nations.

The industrial and financial machinery is in a chronic collapse and the burdens placed upon the workers have been growing heavier steadily. The latest figures show that there are more than 300,000 unemployed workers and, that with their families, one-third of the industrial population is affected by this condition.

The social-democrats have allowed the social welfare measures to be stripped down constantly in response to the allied pressure for "stabilization" and in Vienna alone there were recently thousands of working-class families without shelter of any kind. Modifications have been made in the rent laws in favor of the landlords and by raising the famous sliding scale of "sacrifices by all classes alike," Otto Bauer, with other leaders of the social-democrats, aided the capitalists in their efforts to squeeze more from the masses.

With 600,000 members of the party—12 per cent of the total population—and with the huge popular support shown in the recent elections the social-democratic leaders could easily take over the government by decisive action in the present crisis. That they are trying instead to turn the struggle into harmless channels is shown by our dispatches and that this has made their role of defenders of Austrian capitalism clear to many workers is likewise shown by the accusations hurled at them by the workers yesterday in the fight with government forces.

Whatever the immediate result of the strike and civil war—may be in forcing concessions from the government, it is certain that there is a great swing to the left of the masses of the social-democratic party in Austria which will bring thousands of them much closer to the Communist Party. Nicaraguan Liberal Refuses to Disarm at U. S. Ultimatum

MANAGUA, Nicaragua, July 15.—General Sandino, in possession of a considerable section of the country, which he holds as the successor to the liberal administration of General Zacasa, has refused to disarm and will fight for the independence of his country. This is his answer to an ultimatum sent by Major G. D. Hatfield of the U. S. Marine Corps, who informed him that if he persisted in his defiance of President Diaz, supported by the U. S., Diaz' troops and U. S. marines would co-operate to attack him.

HAVANA, Cuba, July 15.—Admiral Julian P. Latimer, U. S. Navy, the man that Wall Street sent to crush out the independence of Nicaragua and place the puppet president Diaz firmly in his office, is returning as a passenger on board the United Fruit Liner Ulula, to New York. United Fruit is one of the companies whose exploitations in Central America Diaz is expected to defend.

PETITION SMITH TO TAKE ACTION ON MASS ARRESTS

Similar Letters Will Be Sent Mayor

Thousands of workers are signing petitions that will be presented to Governor Alfred E. Smith urging him to take steps to "see that the right of peaceful picketing, guaranteed by decision of our state supreme court, is not unlawfully denied."

A similar letter of petition is being prepared for Mayor Walker, and all workers are urged to distribute them widely. Copies may be obtained at the office of the Furriers' Joint Board, and at Local 22 of the I. L. G. W. U. These letters will help bring home to the authorities the problems of the fur strikers, and the fact that all workers are determined that the right of peaceful picketing shall not be taken away from them.

Letter to Governor.

The petition reads as follows:

"I, the undersigned citizen residing in New York City, call upon you as Governor to make an investigation of conditions in the fur workers strike of our city.

"I urge that you take steps to see that the right of peaceful picketing, guaranteed by decision of our State Supreme Court, is not unlawfully denied, nor workers arrested by hundreds, as they have been, for exercising this right; that you see that striking workers are protected from the attacks of gangsters, and from the brutalities of police officers; and that you initiate an investigation into the heavy fines and jail sentences being given to pickets by our magistrates courts whose systematic conviction of innocent strikers would seem to indicate a yielding to the pressure of interests hostile to the workers.

"I respectfully petition that your action in this matter be taken as quickly as possible."

Right Wing Tactics.

The gangster tactics of the right wing of the International were introduced at an election in Local 58, Brooklyn Thursday night, and the result was that the meeting broke up in disorder and several active workers were badly beaten by thugs.

The meeting, held at the Brooklyn Labor Lyceum, was called to elect a business agent and local officers. The notorious Moe Harris, who had charge of counting ballots, was one of those running for office and of course he won the one elected. There were two other candidates—M. Lipnar, a left wing worker for whom Harris counted 66 votes; and Charles Weiss, a non-partisan candidate for whom 28 votes were announced. For himself, Harris counted 94 votes.

L. Bricker, a progressive, was elected president and he was not opposed for the office. John Peterson, a non-partisan candidate, was elected treasurer. H. Meltzer, one of the Harris clique, was elected secretary.

Raise Objection.

Immediately after the result of the elections was announced, several workers raised the objection that there was a false count, that the whole election for business agent was a betrayal of the workers, and they demanded that a new election be held in place of this fraudulent one. But Harris was all prepared for this objection, just as he was to steal the election. He at once led on to the floor a squad of his strong arm hirelings and a fight followed. Many workers were badly beaten, especially a member of Local 58, M. Galoshing, who was severely injured.

In the course of the fray, several of Harris' gangsters were beaten by him when they tried to hold him back from his slugging work. The workers are now considering further steps to bring about a new and legal election in the local.

The seven gangsters caught on June 24 after they had assaulted James Metaxis, Frank Weiss, Stephen Sergiades and Harry Steinhardt, were arraigned in Jefferson Market Court yesterday morning but their attorney Leonard A. Snitkin pleaded that the case was not ready, so it was postponed by Magistrate Brodsky until July 26.

S. Kushner, a worker who was arrested last week on complaint of some right wing workers, was dismissed in Jefferson Market Court yesterday.

A large picketing demonstration was held in the market yesterday morning. Arrangements are now being made to picket on a large scale Monday morning.

REVOKE CHARTER OF SHOE UNION WITHOUT CAUSE

General Council Tries to Smash Opponents

The charter of the New York District Council of the Shoe Workers' Protective Union has been revoked by the reactionary general council of that organization.

This action was taken last Monday evening at a joint meeting of both the local and national councils, at which the chairman of the general council usurped the chair and then proceeded to revoke the charter of the local organization. Delegates of five of the six locals affiliated with the council then walked out in protest, as no charges had been filed against the New York unions.

The Real Issue.

This is only the surface of the story. The real issue is that the general council was acting against the best interests of the New York organization for quite some time in the past.

The fight really started at the time that the American Shoe Workers' Union decided to affiliate with the New York organization of the protective, and the general council suspected that the votes of these additional members would be cast against them in the then coming elections. They obstructed by all means this amalgamation and nothing came of it. The local district council elected one of its organizers, Pascal Cosgrove, against the present incumbent for general president. Evar since then the general organization has withdrawn all financial support from the N. Y. council.

The controversy came to a head recantly dna to the attack that the bosses were making against the union to impose wage reduction. The general organization has been shamefully involved but dus to the very bad situation in the New York shoe industry could not fully defeat the employers and in the case of the B. & S. Shoe Co. decided to leave the mattee to the workers employed in the shop. The workers decided to compromise on the demand of the boss for a 15 per cent wage reduction by accepting 5 per cent. The administration of the cutters' local ordered the seven cutters employed in the shop not to accept the reduction, although in all other cases previous to that the cutters were the most compromising.

In another case the Unity Shoe Co., 22 workers were arbitrarily discharged by the firm. The union in this case confronted the wholesale discharge, decided to strike the shop. The general president however, told the cutters to stay on the job, while in the case of the 5 per cent compromise he told the cutters to strike in addition to the rest of the shop. It was evident to all that the general officials were playing a game to destroy the local organization as they could not attempt it to sustain them in office by forcing the union into fights with the employers that were unwarranted and which the general council refused to support financially.

Troops, armed with machine-guns and under orders to fire on the workers have taken up strategic posts in the center of the city.

The workers have erected barricades in some quartars and automobiles and trucks have been drawn up to afford them protection.

Many officials, judges and attaches of the ministry of justice, were roughly handled.

Parliament has suspended its meetings and the parliament building, which is serving as a temporary hospital, is crowded with injured.

"We Take Justice."

Posters displayed by the workers said:

"We protest against the shameful sentence. We take justice in our own hands."

Socialist leaders are among the demonstrators striving to quiet the mob leaders, but Communists are reported actively endeavoring to extend the struggle against the government.

Police headquarters announced this afternoon that three policemen are known to be dead and the civilian deaths are not known.

The University of Vienna was stormed. Valuable documents to the landlords and profiteers, including many real estate titles, deeds, were lost when the ministry of justice burned.

Several persons were injured when workers tore down the scaffolding of a new building near the parliament building, to use the lumber to reinforce their barricades. The scaffolding collapsed and buried several policemen and a score of civilians beneath it.

Organize Miner Relief; Thirty-four Locals in Appeal to Labor Groups.

PITTSBURGH, Pa., July 15.—The Miners Relief Conference, office in Pittsburgh is in action and is sending out an appeal to all unions, fraternal societies and friendly organizations calling attention to the menace to the working class of the present drive against the miners' standards of living and asking for support for the 150,000 locked out miners.

Their appeal, mailed from their headquarters, 807 McGeah Building, Pittsburgh, Pa., says:

"We, the coal miners, are going into the fourth month of our strike with a large number of local unions with no money in their treasuries. Local union after local union asks for relief and not a week passes without such requests coming in. In some camps large numbers of families are without food. In a great number of camps families are forced to leave the coal mining industry, never to come back again. This leaves the loyal, fighting, militant union men to carry on the fight to the bitter end against the coal operators.

"Brothers, we cannot ask the coal operators and the steel magnates to help us win the strike, therefore, we are forced to ask your assistance in this life and death struggle against this hard boss. We have one of the best weapons in our hands, if you help us, that is relief. Relief will keep our brothers at the mining camps. Relief will feed our starving babies and families. Relief will give us courage to continue the fight to its bitter end."

The miners relief conference was organized July 1 by delegates from 34 local unions of the United Mine Workers of America, District 6.

Delegates of 50,000,000 Cooperators to Meet in Stockholm Thru August

(Federated Press)

Cooperators from 36 countries and representing organizations with a total membership of about 50,000,000 each, meet in Stockholm, Sweden in mid-August. The Cooperative League tells of this International Cooperative Alliance meeting in its current issue of the magazine Cooperation.

There will soon be established a central international office for cooperators wholesaling, the League predicts. Later there will be international cooperative banking and insurance. International Alliance committees are working on the details preliminary to the promotion of these new enterprises.

"The widely heralded League of Nations fathered by Woodrow Wilson might well look with envy at this non-political international cooperative federation," states the League, "for not only does it include many of the peoples who have refused to enter the League of Nations, but it is also functioning in an atmosphere of harmony and mutual good will which is quite unknown to the political assemblies at Geneva."

Denounce Wuhan Ruler As Anti-Labor

tha every day struggle of the workers must be taken by the Communists.

Unleash Agrarian Revolution.

The agrarian revolution that is now rising throughout many provinces in China must be broadened and deepened. The struggle for achieving the bourgeois democratic revolution in "plebian" manner, namely, tha revolutionary offensive of tha bloc of workers, peasants and urban poor, under the hegemony of the proletariat must be continued.

The workers and peasants must be systematically armed and the reactionary elements must be disarmed and crushed. The reply to repressions and executions of Communists and revolutionary workers fighting under the leadership of the Communists must be met by tho setting up of a militant, underground party apparatus to direct the revolution.

Must Rectify Blunders.

Measures must also be immediately taken toward rectification of the opportunist blunders of the Central Committee of the Communist Party of China and toward creating a politically sound leadership of the Party.

The Executive Committee of the Communist International considers the question of Party policy generally and the leadership of the Party in particular as assuming the most important role. The Executive of the Comintern therefore appeals to all Party members to start a decisive struggle against all opportunist deviations of Community Party leadership.

Lauds Young Communists.

The Executive of the Communist International also records satisfaction because of the correct policy pursued by the Young Communist League in China and the heroic struggle of the Party masses and firmly believes that the Party in China will find enough energy to change its own leadership and to disavow those cowardly leaders who violated the international discipline of the Comintern by maintaining a united front with elements after their actions had proved them traitors to the revolution and enemies of the workers and peasants.

Leaders Steeled in Struggle.

The new Party leaders must be largely composed of worker and peasant elements who have gone through the fire of civil war, have been steeled in the actual struggle. They must get the controling influence in the Party and within the Central Committee. These workers from the rank and file will be able to maintain close contact with whole Party mass and will in that manner overcome opportunism.

Victory Is Assured.

The Executive Committee of the Communist International holds that the world of the great Chinese revolution has aroused such broad masses of workers and peasants to political action that no power in the world can crush the movement.

Under proper leadership the victory of the Chinese workers and peasants is assured and it is the Communist Party alone that can furnish this leadership.

What 5000 New Readers Means

Five Thousand New Readers for the Daily Worker is the goal we have set for August 30. Five Thousand New Readers for the Daily Worker means the enlistment of five thousand new fighters in the Daily Worker Red Army. It means that Five Thousand additional soldiers on the battlefront of the class struggle will be securing daily the latest news of the struggle.

It means that they will be fully informed from day to day as to the strategy and general plan of our attack against the enemy.

It means that these Five Thousand will reach an additional 25,000 workers with the information they secure through the Daily Worker. It means the training of Five Thousand new leaders for the working class in their struggle against the army of the exploiters.

Small wonder then that American capitalism views the new drive of the Daily Worker Army, grimly and with manifest disapproval. The goal we have set is conservative. With the energy and devotion which our Red Army has shown in the past, we shall go over the top.

MME. MARKIEVICZ IRISH REPUBLIC LEADER, IS DEAD

Fought With Connolly In Easter Revolt

DUBLIN, July 15.—Countess Markievicz, famous woman leader of the Irish Republicans, died early today here.

Countess Markievicz was stricken several weeks ago with appendicitis. Complications developed which resulted in her death.

The Countess, whose life was one of the most adventurous of any woman in history, was sentenced to death in 1916 for a part she played in an Irish rebellion. Her sentence was commuted to life imprisonment, but she was released from prison after serving one year.

Her Early Life.

The countess whose maiden name was Constance Georgine Gore-Booth, was the daughter of Sir Henry Gore-Booth, fifth baronet of Lissadell, County Sligo. Her mother was English. She was born in 1868.

Her father was a landlord and her youth she engaged in the pastimes of that class in Ireland, among them being hunting. While studying painting in Paris she met and married Count Casimir Dunin Markievicz, a Polish painter. She differed with her husband over the world war and they separated. The Count favored the allied cause while the countess favored any power that threatened to lick England.

Helped Big Strike.

The countess first became internationally famous when she stepped into the great Dublin strike of 1913 with James Larkin and James Connolly and sided the strike leaders openly. After Larkin's departure for the United States she helped Connolly organize the Irish Citizen Army.

When the Easter Week rebellion broke out Countess Markievicz led an armed group and held Stephen's Green in the center of the city for a few days. She was finally arrested and sentenced to death, the sentence being afterwards commuted to life imprisonment. With thousands of others she was afterwards released and immediately resumed her activity in the nationalist revolutionary movement.

Risked Life Often.

She risked her life scores of times during the Black and Tan reign of terror, and when the Free State treaty was accepted by Collins, Griffith and Cosgrave, she lined up with the anti-treaty Republicans. During the bitter controversy that preceded the civil war she was often reminded by Michael Collins of her British and aristocratic parentage, and contrasted her origin with that of men like himself who favored the treaty.

The countess did not wish to be given her title. She wanted to be known as "madame." In her death the workers and peasants and the nationalist revolutionary movement have lost a powerful and sincere protagonist. She was a great admirer of the Soviet Union and never failed to say a good word for the heroic work of the workers and peasants who established the first proletarian government in history. Madame Markievicz often referred with pride to her connection with the Irish Citizen Army whose members took an oath to lay down their lives if necessary for the establishment of a Workers Republic in Ireland.

Her death will be mourned by all rebels the world over and her life will be an inspiration for millions of exploited men and women in all lands.

Bare Political Clubs, Elks in Gambling Orgy

MINEOLA, N. Y., July 15.—District Attorney Elvin N. Edwards told the police chiefs of Nassau County at a conference here today that if they did not enforce the laws against gambling, "I shall present you to the Grand Jury for failing to do your duty."

The district attorney said that all games of chance in the county should be stopped immediately, not only in gambling houses, carnivals and along the boardwalks of the beaches, but also "in all fraternal, political and other clubs and organizations."

District Attorney Edwards cited the case of the Elks Club at Lynbrook which was recently visited by Sheriff William R. Strohson, who confiscated a gambling wheel said to be valued at $900. Edwards said that a delegation from the lodge had visited him and had told him that there would be no more gambling at the club.

White Terror Unabated Against Polish Workers

WARSAW, July 1. (By Mail)—At the trial of 36 workers in Lutsk, for alleged illegal conspiracy, Zaderej, one of the accused prisoners charged with being a Communist, denied ever belonging to the party.

He stated that the "military instructions" and revolver found in his lodgings by the police had been planted there by the notorious agent-provocateur, Natwistchuk.

Three of the defendants were sentenced to penal servitude for life, and the remaining 27 to a total of 166 years imprisonment.

Negro Labor Congress Classed as Potential Force Among Workers

BALTIMORE, July 15 (FP).—Attacks on the American Negro Labor Congress are closely related to the exodus of Negro workers from the south, in the opinion of Afro-American, most influential of the Atlantic seaboard Negro papers. These attacks have been featured in a New York daily which declares the congress is promoted by Communists.

"If labor agents could actually strip the south of labor and the Labor Congress actually organize 51 per cent of the colored workers," asserts Afro-American, "tremendous progress would necessarily result. Under the circumstances we can't help the conclusion that the white man is as really 'scairt' as the Negro is lynched."

The Baltimore paper, which declares the Negro Labor Congress supporters are "all workers and union organizers," minimizes its accomplishments but believes it can achieve results if it stirs the Negroes "as much as it has the whites."

FRISCO WELCOME TO FLYERS WAS FLAT FAILURE

War Character of Flight Revealed

SAN FRANCISCO, July 15.—San Francisco's attempt to emulate the welcome given New York to the returning Charles Lindbergh, in staging a mass-demonstration to the returning army fliers, Lieuts. Albert Hegenberger and Lester Maitland, was a total frost. To be sure much flag-waving was carried on, but all that the parade up Market St. to the city hall consisted of was a detachment of soldiers from the Presidio, half of the city's police force, the inevitable mayor, the usual gang of politicians and a representation from the Chamber of Commerce. The general public seemed to be conspicuous only by their absence.

Exposes War Aims.

Speaking to some newspapermen, Hegenberger led the cat out of the bag as to the purpose of the flying adventure by stating: "This flight of ours meant more from the point of military operation than from commercial aviation. The fuel weight is so heavy at present that it is not possible to carry a pay-load so long a distance. But what can be done is to carry a ton of ammo 1000 miles to sea, drop it on an approaching ship and return. That means a big radius for the coast defense."

Affair a Failure.

As befitting such advance guards of destruction, the two "heroes" were bolstered up in a swell automobile, given a military and police escort, and sent up Market St. on the jingoistic propaganda trip. Patriotic music and military marches were shrieking through the streets. Everything was provided for to make the return of these two men the event of the day, but the thing was a failure.

Chamber of Commerce Dinner.

A dinner in honor of these two fliers, which was served during the latter part of the day by the Chamber of Commerce, was reported later on to be the "cheapest affair that I have ever seen" in the words of one of the participants, to your correspondent.

Failing to create a sensation in San Francisco, the fliers were rushed to Oakland, where, under the "protection" of Lieutenant Governor Buren Fitts, Senator Samuel Shortridge and the president of the Oakland Chamber of Commerce, the whole show will be started over again.

Boston Workers Back N. Y. Needle Trades in Mass Demonstration

BOSTON, July 15.—A monster mass meeting of nearly a thousand workers was held today in the big auditorium as a demonstration of solidarity with the striking New York needle trades workers. The meeting was one of the most enthusiastic ever held in this city. J. Miller, of the Boston cap makers, presided.

The peak of enthusiasm was reached when Ben Gold, courageous young leader of the thousands of striking fur workers in New York spoke. He kept the audience spellbound for two hours in a speech full of vigor, and a clear-cut analysis of the New York situation that won his audience completely.

The meeting was arranged by the Boston Defense Committee and a good collection was made for defense work.

FIGHT DUBINSKY IS CUTTER CALL AT MASS MEET

Welfare League Rallies Against Wreckers

"Dubinsky must go!" With that as their slogan several hundred cutters meeting at Stuyvesant Casino, Second Ave. and Ninth St., Thursday at the call of the Welfare League, went on record to fight "with new vigor to liberate our Local 10 from the self-styled leaders" who have brot destruction to the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union.

Harry Berlin, who presided, said that "the machine of the International and Local 10 has not stopped at anything. Business Agent Ansil recently went to an open shop and said, 'It is true you have an open shop but if you don't fire him (a certain militant worker) he will organize your shop. I will, if necessary, give you the name of the shop I refer to and the name of the worker.

Bosses Take Advantage.

"The bosses never took advantage as they do now, because never did they have union officials to deal with as they have now. In the past, cutters were able to quit work at five o'clock, but now they have to work after work."

Louis Hyman, manager of the Joint Board, told of the latest developments in the union struggle, referring to Dubinsky as one of the stalwarts of the right wing machine.

Other speakers were Samuel Liebowitz, of the furriers' union, Martin Feldman, who is the Dubinsky clique recently attempted to railroad to jail; A. Hornwitz, Max Cooperman and others.

Cutters' Resolution.

The resolution adopted, reads in part as follows:

"Resolved that we, the cutters assembled at a mass meeting at Stuyvesant Casino on Thursday, July 14th, 1927, rallied by the Cutters' Welfare League of Local 10, emphatically repudiate Dubinsky and condemn the entire Executive Board of Local 10 for allowing Dubinsky to continue his evil deeds towards the members of Local 10, and be it further

"Resolved that we rebuke Dubinsky and pledge ourselves to renew the fight with new vigor to liberate our Local 10 and the entire I. L. G. W. U. from these self-styled leaders. Sigman, Dubinsky and the others, who have proven themselves to be the destructors of our union and the betrayers of the workers," and be it further

"Resolved that in order to rebuild our local and the entire union into a real working class organization we demand the resignation of Dubinsky and the entire Executive Board of Local 10, and we pledge ourselves not to recognize them as officers of our union any longer."

Black Shirts Torture Communists in Frenzy Of Barbarous Cruelty

LONDON, July 1. (By Mail) A story of the revolting brutality of fascist militia in Brescia against Communist workers is trickling through the iron-bound Italian censorship.

Two Communists, Betti and Melega were recently arrested in Milan and taken to the barracks of the fascist militia in Brescia. There they were subjected to terrible maltreatment for the purpose of extorting "confessions." Betti was whipped until all skin was stripped from his body. His hands were put into boiling water.

Both workers are still in the hands of the fascists of Brescia, and are held incommunicado. Their relatives have not seen them and support. No one knows in what way to help unfortunate prisoners are and there is general fear for their lives and sanity. Their laundry was sent out of the prison covered with blood.

Some days ago 20 workers were arrested in Varese, a small provincial town in Italy, because they were small metal badges in the shape of a rat. The police concluded that they must be members of the illegal Communist Party, and that therefore they must have also been distributing Communist literature. They are accused of "conspiracy against the security of the state."

Aged Couple Burn.

CAMDEN, N. J., July 15.—Mrs. Lulu Andrews, 67, of La Grange, Ga., was burned to death and her husband, Michael, 69, badly burned while she was preparing a meal in a cabin at Deer Park, near here today.

Armed only with a knife, Captain Ole Eliasen has emerged victorious from a 20-minute battle for his life with a huge devil fish, whose snake-like tentacles grasped him when he descended into the submerged hold of a wrecked ship at Balboa, Calif. Eliasen had descended into the hulk to salvage valuables. After subduing the octopus he brought it to the surface where it was found to measure 18 feet from the tip of one tentacle to the tip of another. Captain Eliasen is shown above with the devil fish.

ENGINEERS FROM SOVIET UNION ARRIVE IN U. S.

May Invest Millions in Machinery

Plans are being drawn for a marked development of the Soviet metal industry during the next five years through the erection of new plants, mainly along American lines, to cost $300,000,000, according to an announcement made late yesterday by a delegation of six Soviet engineers representing the "Gipromez," the Metal Institute at Leningrad. The announcement was made at the office of the Amtorg Trading Corporation, 165 Broadway, New York, which handles exports of machinery and metals from the United States to the Soviet Union.

To Remain Several Months.

The Soviet engineers will remain in the United States for three or four months, visiting American plants and consulting American engineering authorities. It is probable that one or more American engineering firms may be engaged to act as consultants for the new construction under an arrangement similar to that made with Col. Hugh L. Cooper for the Dnieper hydroelectric development and with several American firms for developing the Soviet coal fields.

Will Invest Millions.

"Our executives and technicians realize fully that of all the countries in the world the United States has the greatest experience in the development of metal industries," said Mr. E. A. Rottenberg, spokesman for the delegation. "Our visit is in connection with plans now under preparation by the Metal Institute for the construction during the next five years of metal works of various kinds involving an expenditure of about $300,000,000. It is natural that the Institute should be interested in extending the industry along American lines."

Mr. Rottenberg stated that construction of the new tractor plant at Stalingrad, to have a yearly output of 10,000 tractors, was now under way. Machinery valued at $6,000,000 may be purchased here for the plant.

Other Industry Above Pre-War.

The metal industry is the only manufacturing industry in the Soviet Union with an output still below the pre-war level. During the first six months of the current Soviet fiscal year (October 1 to March 31) the output showed an increase of about 40 per cent over the same period last year, and was about 76 per cent of the figure for 1913. During the current year about $120,000,000 will be spent on major construction in the industry.

New Zealand in Panic Over Labor Agitation

LONDON, July 1 (By Mail).—The New Zealand Government is in the clutches of a new "Red" scare. It has brought in a bill making it possible to deport foreigners even when they have long been settled in the country. The New Zealand Foreign Minister hopes that in this way the "harmful agitation of certain Europeans in Samoa" may be counteracted.

The Communist Party has been banned, and all revolutionary literature prohibited.

Soviet Workers Active In Collecting Funds For New Air Flotilla

MOSCOW, July 15.—The campaign for the organization of voluntary collections, through the trade unions, for the fund for construction of the air flotilla "Our Reply to Chamberlain," is meeting with full cooperation from the workers.

The Central Committee of the Metal Workers' Union has appropriated 100,000 rubles, and the Central Committees of the Chemical Workers' and Communal Workers' Unions 10,000 roubles each.

Farm Elements Will Fight Eugene Mayer On Farm Loan Board

WASHINGTON, (FP) July 15.—"Farmers are preparing for a real fight next winter when they expect to prevent the confirmation of Eugene Mayer and his newly appointed associates on the Federal Farm Loan Board, as a first step in regaining control of the farm loan system which with the aid of Andrew Mellon and Calvin Coolidge has now been turned over to Wall Street."

So thundered Carl S. Vrooman, former assistant secretary of agriculture, as he let loose another broadside in the bloody verbal warfare that is being directed on the administration by the Lowden farm forces of Illinois and the middle west. Vrooman, through the national association of federal farm loan borrowers, threatened July 14th to continue the war into the Coolidge-Mellon territory until his forces "bring another upheaval in the farm loan board and discredit upon those who forced the recent changes in personnel," when they gave Governor Sproul's action a disapproving frown.

Mayer, financial handy man for the administration who rushed in last fall to "save" the cotton growers from 9-cent cotton and build up Coolidge sentiment among southern business men, is the center of Vrooman's attack. "Mr. Coolidge," he says, "could scarcely have chosen a man who more nearly typifies the sort of 'Wall Street financial domination' so much feared by farmers, than does Mr. Mayer. Political leaders are still wondering how President Coolidge could have been induced to make such a dangerous move in the very face of his veto of the McNary-Haugen bill."

When Mellon grabbed control of the board last spring, he announced that there would be a tightening of the credit machinery, higher interest rates and greater severity in dispossessing farmers who could not afford to make payments on their debt burdens."

Woman Pilot on Way.

TULSA, Okla., July 15.—Miss flyer, who will attempt to hop from San Francisco to Honolulu, landed safely here today shortly after 3 o'clock. Her flight from St. Louis, from which city she left at 8:45 o'clock this morning, was described as "perfect."

FUR WORKERS TO SUE FORWARD FOR $1,000,000 LIBEL

Will Prove That Its Charges Are False

Papers are now being drawn up by Louis B. Boudin, attorney for the Joint Board of the Furriers' Union, to bring suit for $1,000,000 against the Jewish Daily Forward, right wing newspaper, on the charge of libel.

Fifty workers who have been called gangsters and guerrillas in the Forward will bring the case jointly before the Supreme Court and will prove that the irresponsible statements of that newspaper are issued only for propaganda purposes and are not based upon facts.

Worked For Many Years.

The Forward has been calling many workers who have been working in the fur trade "a scow of years of "gangsters" because they have gone on strike to preserve their union and improve their working conditions. The Forward, being the organ of the strikebreaking opposition, has been trying to discredit those workers hoping in that way to break the present strike. It is confidently stated that when the cases to court and witnesses are heard, a complete vindication of the workers' position will be shown.

Isidor Muschnick, right winger, was held for the grand jury on a charge of felonious assault when his case came up in the Seventh District Court, Bronx.

On the evening of June 29 he attacked Max Bloom, a worker loyal to the Joint Board, in front of his home on Southern Boulevard, near 173rd St. the Bronx. Waiting until Bloom appeared, he jumped upon him, cutting his chest so severely that many stitches were necessary to close the wound. Muschnick was released on $2,500 bail which will be continued until his case comes up in a higher court.

Max Wallman, who was arrested June 6 after he was beaten up by members of the industrial squad, had his case postponed until August 5 when it came up in Jefferson Market Court yesterday. He is charged with felonious assault and disorderly conduct.

Mass Picketing Today.

The Joint Board issued a call yesterday for a monster picket demonstration in the market this morning to show the right wing-boss-police department combine, that the workers are in the present struggle to win, and intend to continue fighting until victory is achieved.

While the furriers are on the picket line here, activities in other cities continue. Montreal is arranging a big meeting for July 17, and although Ben Gold will not be able to speak, a well attended meeting is expected. Last night Gold spoke in Boston, no report of the meeting being received at press time.

Ben Gold, manager of the Furriers' Joint Board, and Louis Hyman, manager of the Cloakmakers' Joint Board, will delivar speeches on the situation and latest developments of the needle trades struggle Saturday night, in the open air arena of the Coney Island Stadium, 6th St. and Surf Ave. This will be in conjunction with a concert, which is being sponsored by the Joint Defense and Relief Committee, for the benefit of the wives and children of the imprisoned furriers and cloakmakers.

Leon Rapee will conduct the New York Symphony Orchestra of 100 pieces, and Alexis Kosloff, premier dansuer of the Metropolitan Opera House, will personally appear in and stage a pantomjmic version of "Prince Igor," the opera by A. Borodine.

Donate Money To Defense Fund.

Production Standards Price Capmakers Must Pay for 40 Hour Week

Conferences between the capmakers union and bosses were held last week and another meeting will be held today, it was reported at a meeting of the union held last night at Beethoven Hall, East Fifth St.

The administration spokesmen told the assembled workers that the bosses are willing to consider the 40 hour week provided the union installed standards of production. From all indications the right wing leaders are willing to give the bosses their demands.

BERLIN, July 15.—Otto Koennicke, German flyer has made definite arrangements to start his projected trans-oceanic airplane flight from Berlin to New York, within a month, it was learned yesterday.

A. F. L. ENDORSES PROPOSED STRIKE ON INTERBOROUGH

Growing Sentiment for Action Among Workers

William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, speaking to the Longshoremen's convention yesterday said that the organization is behind the coming I. R. T. strike. He urged his hearers to support the subway workers in their fight.

Speaking of the yellow dog contract which the I. R. T. is forcing its workers to sign, Green said that it was invalid and illegal and no one who signed it could be made to live up to his so-called agreement.

Frank Hedley, president and general manager of the I. R. T. in a statement issued yesterday said that all of the subway workers on duty have signed the company union agreement. He said that 611 more employes signed yesterday bringing the total up to 12,320.

Used Force.

In reply to this J. H Coleman, local organizer for the Amalgamated Association, said that he did not question that many subway workers had signed the "agreement" as the signing was accomplished under duress. "When you point a gun at a man and tell him to sign he may do so," Coleman added.

He said that the preamble to the so-called contract stated that all signers declared that they had read the 5,000-word document. This would require each employe to read for at least an hour and the sixty-one company agents would be canvassing the subway workers at that rate until a few days before the contract expired in 1929.

Contract Illegal.

Senator Robert F Wagner and Representative Henry D. Perlman, counsel for the Amalgamated formed William Green that the I. R. T. contracts were of no legal value.

After the last traction strike, last year, Hedley threntened that he would institute suit against the property of the ex-strikers for "violation" of the so-called contract.

A canvass among the subway workers confirms the statement that the rank and file are infuriated with the methods used in forcing them to sign the company union contract. A majority of the workers favor a strike at this time and it is expected that the Amalgamated will take action in a very short time.

Soviet Workers Flock To Vacation Homes in Caucasus and Crimea

SEBASTOPOL, July 15.—Crimea and Caucasus, in southern Russia are the happy hunting ground of Soviet holiday seekers now on vacation leave. The Crimean coast is dotted with palaces, formerly belonging to members of the Czarist family and the nobility which have been converted into workers' and peasants' sanitoriums and "houses of rest" attached to the various state departments and institutions.

The workers of each department or institution are assigned to the various vacation homes, where for a monthly charge of $25 to $35 they are provided with comfortable quarters, good food, and facilities for sport, rest and recreation.

The most preferred places are Yalta, Alupka, Livadia, Semeis and Sudak, and so great is the eagerness of the workers to avail themselves of the chance for a happy vacation that they wait in long, patient queues before the ticket agencies for the chance of a seat on the wooden benchas of the third class trains. For workers who are ill, the trip and treatment at the sanitoriums are free; for those who go on vacation, a discount of 25 to 75 per cent is allowed for "hard seats."

The Nepmen and the foreign concessionaires, who travel "soft" in the upholstered cars of the first and second class, pay full fare and seek their accommodation where they can get it.

Orthodox Jews Reject Henry Ford's Apology

WASHINGTON, July 14.—Orthodox Jews assembled in a national convention here yesterday refused to accept Henry Ford's apology.

The convention which was attended by representatives of hundreds of orthodox congregations from all parts of the country rejected a resolution, that the motor magnate's retraction be accepted. The vote was 37 to 33.

The Shadow of the Electric Chair Grows Deeper.

Meagre reports that leak through the portals behind which Governor Fuller's "advisory committee" holds its secret sessions are far from reassuring to the workers who for seven years have fought to obtain freedom for Sacco and Vanzetti, innocent victims of one of the foulest frame-ups in the annals of industrial and political despotism in this country. Defense witnesses, although sworn not to reveal anything that transpires within the room in which hearings are conducted, have expressed deep resentment at the hostile manner in which they were treated. Observers note that the defense witnesses emerging from the room invariably seem depressed while witnesses for the would-be executioners of Sacco and Vanzetti appear jubilant. The fact alone is striking confirmation of the just suspicions of labor regarding the character of the investigation.

One of the men on the commission, former judge Robert Grant, is known to be an enemy of the accused workers and has never made the slightest effort to conceal the fact. Samuel Stratton of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology was a recognized enemy of the victims and of foreign-born workers generally before his appointment and nothing he has since done has indicated any change of opinion on his part.

The "official" investigation conducted separately by Fuller's political associates is, like the hearings of the "advisory commission," also conducted secretly. This very secrecy, the conspiracy to conceal from the public evidence that every worker knows will vindicate Sacco and Vanzetti and place in the pillory the hirelings of capitalism who framed them, is most ominous. As the days rapidly pass and the hour draws nearer the expiration of the respite, the shadow of the electric chair grows deeper and more grim and ghastly.

The militant sections of labor that have steadfastly fought for Sacco and Vanzetti long before the moderate elements were forced by the mass pressure to speak in defense of the victims of the Massachusetts frame-up must not place confidence in these commissions or in Governor Fuller, the millionaire exploiter of scab labor and guiding spirit of the Packard Motor Car Company. We must be alert to the danger of a quick move to murder these two victims of class vengeance who already have suffered seven years of living death for their loyalty to the working class.

Great demonstrations must be held everywhere and the masses aroused to fury against the cynical conduct of the Boston investigations, who are either paving the way for their execution or commutation of sentence to life imprisonment. Sacco and Vanzetti must be unconditionally freed.

Law and Order in the United States

The progress of American democracy—the triumph of the tradition of the Anglo-Saxon devotion to peacable settlement of political questions—proof positive that our enlightened countrymen, unlike the "backward" Lutin Americans, Negros, Filipinos and Chinese, are able to set up and maintain those republican institutions and methods which make any other weapon than the ballot unnecessary.

(Republished from the New York Times, without alteration at the hands of a Communist editor, its pristine beauty untarnished by those who seek to undermine the American Constitution.)

WESTMONT, N. J., July 15.—One citizen is in the hospital today, five or six others are wearing court-plaster, the furniture of the Council Chamber is battered and bloodstained and the chief of police facing charges.

The cause of these effects was an argument before the Council last night as to whether invisible government and inside politics had enabled a local political leader to connect his premises with the sewer main by means of an illegal pipe.

Matthew Morris, a heating contractor, started the trouble. He alleged that Thomas R. Edwards, who runs the filling station, could get anything he wanted from the Councilmen. In a voice shaking with passion, Morris alluded to the pipe.

"It's an unlawful pipe," he said.

"How did it get there? I say, 'Favoritism,' "

Edwards sprang to his feet and rushed for Morris, demanding an apology. The two men clinched. Councilmen and citizens tried to part them. Chief of Police Whitehead drew a blackjack and hit Edwards on the head.

There were cries of "Stop them," "Let 'em fight it out," "Kill him!" and "Save him!" The fight became general. Men and women were knocked down.

At the end Edwards was unconscious on the floor. Chief Whitehead was badly battered. Charles W. Kaeser, the plumbing inspector, was under arrest for knocking the police chief down and jumping on his back.

Edwards was taken to the West Jersey Homeopathic Hospital with a possible fracture of the skull. Eighteen stitches were taken in his scalp.

There is violent feeling between the two political factions and preparations are being made to bring charges against Chief Whitehead on the ground that he used his blackjack unnecessarily and that he struck Edwards several times after he had ceased to resist.

The Traction Workers Can Be Organized

By WILLIAM F. DUNNE.

ORGANIZATION of the traction workers of New York City is a question that will not down. At present it centers directly around the organization of the workers employed by the Interborough Rapid Transit Company.

Support by the whole labor movement of the efforts of the Amalgamated Association of Street and Electric Railway Employes to organize those workers has been pledged by President Green of the American Federation of Labor. Formal support will be given without doubt but more, much more, than this is needed.

ANYONE who believes that these workers will be allowed to organize without a bitter struggle by the I. R. T., whose preparations to prevent establishment of an affective union in the industry are perhaps the most elaborate on record, will easily believe that the moon is made of green cheese.

The I. R. T. workers will be unable to organize without a strike. In the whole struggle of which the strike will be the center the union will be built. This has been the history of the Amalgamated Association which includes approximately 100,000 traction workers.

TO proceed on any other theory than that a strike alone can free these traction workers from the "yellow dog" contract and the utter denial of the right to belong to any organization other than the I. R. T.'s personally conducted "brotherhood," is to assure the I. R. T. that the Amalgamated will remain impotent in the face of a permanent injunction combined with a steel espionage system which stirs up and maintains a continual atmosphere of suspicion among the workers themselves.

From the very beginning, all organization work must be directed to one end—that of preparing and calling a strike which will bring every subway train to a standstill.

Any other plan of action is simply self-deception and still worse, deception of the traction workers. This does not mean that all other means of weakening the position of the traction barons should not be used. They should and must be utilized but the strike weapon is the one which will be decisive.

THE political and moral pressure which the New York labor movement will be able to exert will have to be strengthened by the pressure of the labor movement nationally. To look upon the struggle against the New York traction barons as a local matter is a grave mistake. The struggle is something far more than this. The sweeping character of the injunction against the Amalgamated Association and the I. R. T. workers is a challenge to the whole American working class.

Second, the extremely rigid and dangerous form in which company unionism, the spy system and the system of individual contracts, which the I. R. T. forces the workers to sign, appears in the traction industry, make it absolutely necessary that the struggle should be against all these instruments of oppression, make it necessary that they be destroyed and scattered to the four winds before, encouraged by their success in New York, the bosses institute this same damnable system thruout the United States.

TO defeat the traction barons is no child's play. They have already shown in the strike of last year that they can command the police and courts. They have shown a merciless attitude toward workers who dare to strike and they defy the labor movement openly.

It follows then that the unions must support the Amalgamated Association and the traction workers to the limit of their ability—financially, politically and organizationally. The labor movement must be prepared to put its whole strength into the fight from the start and particularly must it act sharply and decisively at the first appearance of police and gangster terrorism against the traction workers.

THE permanent injunction must be disregarded en masse and the authorities made to understand that they face the problem not of jailing a few unsupported traction workers but the united resistance of the whole union membership in New York City, prepared to fill the jails to overflowing to smash the slave writ obtained from the bosses' courts.

The I. R. T. injunction is a part of the drive against the American labor movement. The I. R. T.'s individual contract system is likewise part of the bosses' offensive. It is futile to argue as to whether these contracts, which workers must sign or lose their jobs, are "legal." They are become useless to the company only when a union strong enough to break them and protect the workers is organized.

THE ordinary organization methods are not sufficient for the big job of organizing the traction workers. Resolutions and ordinary trade union routine will not defeat the traction barons. There are some preparations that are indispensable and they can be begun at once.

First, there can be organized a delegate conference at which all local unions would be represented and where the sole order of business would be the organization of traction workers.

Second, this conference would elect a representative committee which would have as its first task the mobilization of the New York labor movement for support of the Amalgamated Association campaign.

This committee on part of its work would organize huge mass meetings in the various sections of the city for the purpose of stimulating support for the traction workers and familiarizing the subway riders with the issues of the struggle.

THIRD, there should be started at once a drive for financial support—for the strike itself and for defense of the many workers that inevitably will be arrested.

Fourth, a publicity committee should be organized whose main job would be to acquaint the whole labor movement with the importance of the struggle and enlist nationwide support.

Fifth, there should be formed among the sympathisers of the labor movement—liberal professional elements, etc.—an auxiliary committee to reach those sections of the population unions cannot reach directly.

THE adherents to old methods which, based in turn on outworn policies, have served to greatly weaken the labor movement even during the last four years of great employment, will say that such elaborate preparations are unnecessary. But such a statement serves only to show that the power of the traction barons, based on the dominant position of their class, is either underestimated or that there is no serious intention in official labor circles to organize the traction workers.

IT is first class tactics to answer and attack with a counter offensive providing one has the resources and one's forces are not demoralised.

In this instance, when the most important union in the labor movement—the United Mine Workers—is the target of attack, there is need for a decisive effort on the part of the trade union movement which will give the whole capitalist class something else to think about.

It cannot be said that the rank and file of the organized workers is demoralised. They are ready to fight and to support a fight if given the right kind of a lead.

NOT only would mass support of an organization campaign culminating in a strike and the formation of a powerful union in the New York traction industry dramatize the whole struggle of labor before the masses but it would give new impetus to the whole labor movement.

Both from the standpoint of the local and national movement it is necessary that such a united effort be made. Let the whole world know that the traction workers who are entrusted with the lives of millions every day are forced to work under feudal conditions and that they are fighting for freedom.

THE traction workers can be organized and the traction barons defeated if the pledge of support given by President Green is expressed in terms of union mobilization, organization and dollars.

Get behind the traction workers with deeds.

The traction workers themselves in their last strike proved that they are willing to fight against tremendous odds. They fought then without the united support of the labor movement. With the concrete proofs of this support shown by the application of the program outlined the traction workers will put up a struggle which will make all labor history in the United States, defeat the traction barons and greatly strengthen the labor movement.

Pickets At Welfare Island

By PHYLLIS FENINGSTON.

"Every worker ought to have a term in the Workhouse," said Sam Broad, one of the five furriers released yesterday on $1,000 bail each when they won their appeal for a retrial in the supreme court—"for it will make them more revolutionary when they get out." He then proceeded to tell of the cruelty, corruption and viciousness which prevail at the workhouse, under which hapless victims of a labor-hating judge are forced to work out their excessive sentences.

The prisoners, Max Shusterman and Ethel Shusterman, Ida Ishman, Sam Broad and Frank Jeane are the famous five who were given 6 months for having disturbed the august court when, outraged at the vicious sentences given their fellow picksters, they expressed indignation and horror. One of the prisoners, a boy of 19 was brought up on three charges, one for smiling, one for making a face at the judge and the third for having booed!

Put to work in the dump yards on Welfare Island, the prisoners were driven and persecuted on the slightest provocation. Sam Broad tells how, unaccustomed to walking along the uneven ground of the dump yard, where the buried refuse makes mounds and cavities in the earth, he fell. Whereupon his guard threatened to break his neck if he did it again.

Then there are plenty of barbers on the island, the boys were given hot one shave or hair-cut a week, and were forced to appear in court, in spite of their pleas to be cleaned up, with unshaven faces, unkempt hair and soiled clothes.

One prisoner, for passing a package of cigarettes to a friend in the prison hall, was denied the remission of five days from his sentence, and was placed, standing, in the "cooler" for 24 hours.

All the guards and wardens, as long as they are bribed, are a little more human, but most of these prisoners, having no money, had to suffer unheard-of hardships from the malice of the scum of the earth that form the personnel of the prison regime.

The food is insufficient, tasteless and vile. Even water was denied one prisoner for a whole day, the he had committed no breach of discipline.

It is a splendid proof of the contentions of revolutionaries that our so-called "law and order" is a fraud. Instead of intimidating these workers who know they are innocent of any wrong-doing or crime, yet are herded into the unspeakable dens of malefactors and criminals—nothing could better serve to develop in them a contempt for the whole process of capitalist "justice," and disgust for the hypocritical preachments of the upholders of this system of non-existent democracy.

That is why these prisoners urge on their fellow-workers the experience of a term in the workhouse.

choose between a proletarian government and a fascist dictatorship. The activa sympathy of the workers of the world must be with their Austrian comrades at this time.

THE Irish masses have suffered a real loss in the death of countess Marckievics, militant Republican and sincere sympathiser with the workingclass movement. The born of aristocratic parents, the countess, whose maiden name was Constance Georgine Gore-Booth, early showed her sympathy for the workers and during the Boer War she urged her father's retainers to strike for better conditions. She came into international prominence during the great Dublin strike of 1913 when she aided James Connolly and James Larkin in the conduct of that struggle. Afterwards she assisted James Connolly in organizing the Irish Citizens Army, which played a leading role in the Easter Week rebellion. This splendid woman will be honored and her memory revered by the Irish people

THE white house menagerie is to have an increase. This was learned last Thursday when a three months' old coyote was presented to Mrs. Coolidge. It appears that the leading lady of the land at first entertained a suspicion that the animal was animated since she suggested it be given an ammonia bath, but on closer examination she learned that it did not have to be approached with a nose protector. With an electric horse, an artificial worm, a coyote and an automatic Wall Street executive in the white house, the menagerie needs only a synthetic cider still to make a full house.

New Soviet Film Nearing Completion

The newest Sovie film "Ten Days That Moved the World" is the history of the 1917 Revolution and which is now nearing completion in Leningrad, is causing much comment among those who have been privileged to witness the film-ing. M. Eisenstein, the director who was responsible for the "Potemkin" film, and who is directing this one has expressed the opinion that "Ten Days" is a work of infinitely higher standing. This film, which will be released on the tenth anniversary of the storming of the Winter Palace in October, 1917, will be historically accurate down to the most insignificant detail. Men have been found, in a search throughout Russia, who resemble Lenin, Kerenski, and the other figures of the October revolution, so exactly as to be their living images when dressed for the part.

In street scenes the various party committees have been called upon to provide exact details of where the various divisions of soldiers, sailors, and working men were stationed. The identical cruiser Aurora, that fired upon the city, was towed up the river, and bombarded Leningrad in the same way as Petrograd was bombarded, the only difference being that real time blank cartridges were used.

Eisenstein's methods are so realistic that the days were spent in the various Soviet bureaus of Leningrad collecting scraps of paper and pieces of chalk of the kind which witnesses declare to have strewn the floors of the Smolna Institute when the new Government moved into it.

Current Events

By T. J. O'FLAHERTY.

At these lines are written (Saturday) the revolt of the Vienna workers has assumed serious proportions. The meager reports coming from that city bear out the prediction frequently made in The DAILY WORKER that the official leaders of the socialist movement everywhere would be the most efficient policemen of the capitalists in holding the workers in check. The Vienna revolt has again proved the truth of this charge. Socialist leaders in uniform are reported to have tried to call off the demonstration and the socialist mayor is said to have ordered the police to fire on the workers just as August Chasens and other New York socialists called on the police to club the militant workers at the Sacco-Vanzetti rally a week or so ago.

THINGS are moving all over the world with kaleidoscopic rapidity. The Chinese revolution quickly passes from one stage of development to another and the policy that was correct only a few months ago may be wrong today. Leaders who were fighting on the side of the revolution a few months ago are today fighting against it, the deadly protesting their devotion to the program and principles of Sun Yat Sen. On the other hand the social elements that will provide the man-power and the future leadership for the Chinese revolution, i.e; the workers and peasants, are developing their collective power rapidly.

WE have been told many times recently that the workers of western Europe would have nothing to do with Bolshevism or revolution. How perfectly beastly of the Austrian workers to kick this respectable and hoary old gag in the slats! While the blasted agents of imperialism are snuffaking at Geneva in a fake naval limitation conference the serfs of the league of nations and the international bankers in Vienna gave sudden and violent proof that the spirit of revolution is not dead. The capitalist bandits may now decide that there are times when even thieves must get together.

THE boasted stabilization of capitalism is very much of a false alarm. It is well not to underestimate it of course. But if there is any choice between those two errors, it is on the side of under-estimation. Some people are quite incapable of forming a decision based on realities for the reason that they ignore all facts that do not happen to jibe with their fancies. The truth is that capitalist stabilization, in so far as it went, is the war, has been at the expense of the workers. This in its turn makes for instability since it is only a question of time when this added exploitation of the workers produces revolts and revolution.

ALREADY the Vienna revolt is blamed on the Communist International and on the U. S. S. R. This is not surprising. There would not be any trouble if the Soviet Union could be wiped off the face of the earth! Indeed, it is true that there would be much less trouble for the imperialists for the time being, but even such a miracle would not eliminate strikers, and rebellions. Those will continue as long as capitalism exists.

IT IS too soon to predict with any degree of accuracy the development of the Vienna revolt. As we have already said, the workers are handicapped by the traitorous leadership of the socialists and because of the numerical weakness of the Communist Party. Unless the Viennese workers receive support from the proletariat in neighboring countries there is little likelihood that they will succeed in establishing a proletarian government. The fascist governments of Italy and Hungary are offering aid to the Austrian government and every imperialist government in Europe will be ready to jump at the throat of the Austrian workers. How vigorously will the European workers rally to the defense of their comrades in Austria? How strong is the grip of the leaders of the socialist International on their followers? Those are two questions that will be answered within the present week.

FROM Europe to America is a long jump. Out in the wild and woolly state of Illinois, William Hale Thompson, is still waging war on King George and amusing himself by threatening to kick the King's superintendent of schools out of Chicago. Free State Government Denies Markievicz Her Funeral; Fear Sympathy

DUBLIN, July 17.—The city commissioners of Dublin, fearful that the funeral of Countess Markiewicz will excite sympathy for the opposition and prevent the government from capitalizing the death of O'Higgins, has done everything possible to interfere with the obsequies. Their latest step is to refuse to allow the use of Dublin City Hall or the Mansion House for the lying in state of the body.

BIG PICKET LINE IN FUR DISTRICT STARTS 7TH WEEK

Negotiations With Right Wing Broken Off

The seventh week of the furriers' strike starts this morning with arrangements being made for a large picketing demonstration. It is believed that thousands of workers will crowd the market and give evidence to their determination to continue the struggle to preserve the Furriers' union.

The petition that will be presented to Governor Smith, urging him to take action on the mass arrests and police brutality towards the strikers, is eagerly being signed by thousands of workers throughout New York City. Many workers, when they see the petitions, ask for a quantity of them to take to their shops and obtain the signatures of all the workers.

Break Off Negotiations.

Negotiations entered into between the New York Joint Board of the Furriers Union and the Woll-Fraynе-McGrady committee appointed by President Green of the American Federation of Labor, at the request of the aforementioned committee, have been broken off as a result of the refusal of the committee to agree to the reinstatement of the expelled local unions which include 80 per cent of the total membership of the Furriers International Union.

Conference Result of Pressure.

The conference, according to statements made in official labor circles, was the result of pressure upon the A. F. of L. executive council from various unions designed to establish unity in the needle trades organizations and liquidate a situation which, because of the right wing policice, injunctions and prosecutions by the Woll-Fraynе-McGrady committee and the right wing in the needle trades, is bringing great discredit upon the whole labor movement and making it possible for the bosses to safely violate agreements.

Minimum Proposals.

In a number of sessions the members of the New York Joint Board, headed by Ben Gold, proposed that agreement be reached as follows:

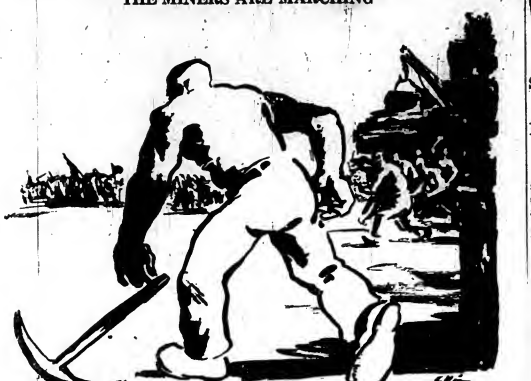
1. Reinstatement of all expelled members and local unions.

2. An election to be held for the New York Joint Board under the supervision of an impartial committee on which the New York Central Labor Council and the Civil Liberties Union should be represented.

3. Following this election there should be called a convention of the International union to which delegates would be elected on the basis of local union membership.

4. Ben Gold and a number of other officials of the New York Joint Board, in the interest of the unity, providing the above proposal was excepted, would not run for paid positions in the union in the coming election.

5. An agreement on the part of all concerned to begin immediately 100 per cent enforcement of the agreement won in the strike of last year, including the 40-hour week.



These proposals were rejected by the representatives of the right wing and since they constituted minimum guarantees for uniting the union to which the Woll-Fraynе-McGrady committee would not agree, the New York Joint Board representatives could proceed with the negotiations only by endangering the interest of the membership.

Gold's Statement.

"The Woll-Fraynе-McGrady committee exhibited in the negotiations the same disregard for the welfare of the needle trades workers as has characterized their war upon the union membership," said Ben Gold.

"The New York Joint Board will continue to carry on the fight in the market for enforcement of the agreement and will continue to support the effort of the Unity Committee of the Furriers' International Union for solidarity against the bosses and the strengthening of the union."

AUSTRIAN REGIMENT JOINS WORKERS

Pennsylvania Coal Miners have marched in great throngs to mines that have been non-union for years and have called the men out on strike and closed down the mines.

WORKERS FROM PROVINCES HURRY TO REINFORCE VIENNA FIGHTERS

Socialist Police Shoot Into Crowds; Bauer Bargains With Seipel

Moscow Pravda Calls for Leninism in New Revolutionary Opportunity

BUDAPEST, July 17.—The third Austrian infantry regiment, stationed in Vienna and recruited largely from the working classes, has refused service and is fraternizing with demonstrators according to reports received here.

The Ministry of Defense has ordered troops from the provinces to Vienna. The workers of outlying towns, also, are marching in columns to take part in the affair. The Hungarian ministry has offered Seipel its aid in suppressing the revolt of the workers.

MOSCOW, July 17.—Leading articles in Pravda emphasize the revolutionary character of the action of the Vienna workers who went out on the streets contrary to the decision of the central committee of the Austrian social democratic party. Pravda continues to develop its analysis as follows:

While social democratic workers were erecting barricades, the "left" Otto Bauer was striking a parliamentary bargain with the reactionary Seipel regarding a coalition cabinet. Instead of leading the revolutionary movement of the masses, social democracy is beheading it.

Socialists Shoot Workers.

The social democratic "Schutsbund" or militia, is shooting workers.

The basis of the Vienna events is the class struggle which recently has become more acute. The pressure of European reaction gave fresh stimulus to fascism in Austria where hatred of fascism on the part of the working class has been steadily growing.

Events in Vienna are also important because of the "left" character of Austrian Marxism, which has now been tested actually by life, and in street fights.

Workers Turn Left.

The result of the present events is that the authority of Austrian social democracy among the masses will be considerably weakened. It is most important that Austrian workers should not miss the opportune moment and fall to draw their mass shock actions. They should, by organizing soviets, put forward the question of power. The leadership of the Austrian social democracy is a formidable brake on the struggle of the workers. Only by following Lenin's path can the Austrian proletariat achieve victory.

VIENNA, July 17.—With the publication of a manifesto threatening that the social democratic militia will crush the revolutionary workers of Vienna unless they confine themselves to "a silent and dignified protest," the social democratic leaders have openly and definitely turned counter-revolutionary and espoused the cause of the Seipel government.

While the Seipel administration is summoning regiments of fascist troops from the border, the social democrats have issued an order demanding that there be "no demonstrations" and threatening a "collision between the workmen and the soldiers of the republican army."

The social democratic leaders headed by Karl Seitz are carrying on negotiations with Chancellor Seipel. The revolution, which is being fought in the streets, is being led by active Communists.

Police Are Ruthless.

The number of persons killed in the street fighting already totals close to 300, it is estimated.

Vienna and outlying districts have been placed under martial law in a desperate attempt to crush the revolt of the workers. The police have been instructed to ruthlessly crush further "disturbances" and to stop at nothing.

Workers Marching On Vienna.

Although Seipel has called in several fascist regiments, reports from reliable sources state that several regiments of troops have gone over to the Vienna workers and that thousands of workers from cities and towns near Vienna are marching into the city to the aid of their comrades.

Call General Strike.

The general strike that is slated for midnight will be completely effective, it is predicted. Workers have already informed the Seipel government that no trains will be allowed to leave the country.

Many Republican Guards are said to have denounced the betrayal of the social democratic leaders and to have joined the workers.

CONVICT POLICE CHIEF OF MURDER TO SAVE GRAFT

Lengel Gets Sentence of Life Imprisonment

CANTON, Ohio, July 17. — Chief of Police Seranus A. Lengel, deposed because of his misdeeds, now is convicted of murder and will have to serve life imprisonment unless his political connections save him.

Yesterday a verdict of guilty was reached in the trial of Lengel for conspiracy with denizens of the underworld to kill Don R. Mellett, an editor of a local newspaper, which was exposing the graft connections between the vice-ring in Canton and the police department.

He Ought To Know.

Lengel arose in court when the verdict was brought in and dramatically exclaimed, "There is no justice".

Mellett was killed in the rear of his home on July 16, 1926. Police authorities were very slow in finding anybody on which to attach suspicion, but private friends of the slain editor hunted up the murderers and forced their arrests. So far there have been convicted: Pat McDermot, a hired gunman; Beu Rudderer, a hardware merchant; Louis Mazer, a professional gangster, who confessed and implicated various policemen; Floyd Streitenberger, a former Canton policeman, who also confessed and implicated Lengel, chief of police at the time of the killing, and now Lengel himself.

White Bearded Scab In Mine Injunction Trial, Company Plot

CENTERVILLE, Ia., July 17. — (FP) — No interference with strike-breakers in the Winifred Coal Co. mine in Appanoose county is permitted under an injunction obtained last week against the Iowa Mine Workers at Centerville. The Barrett Coal Co. obtained a similar writ about a month ago. Both companies are bringing a little coal to the surface. They are paying the 1917 scale, about 20 per cent under the Jacksonville scale that expired April 1.

Another Fool Blow.

These injunctions mark another step in the determination of a group of Iowa coal operators, undoubtedly with eastern backing, to break the backbone of the United Mine Workers in the Iowa district. Appanoose county is the center of coal production in the state. The district union is concentrating its efforts against these scab mines and is having quite

180,000 One Dollar Certificates for the Guard The Daily Worker Fund Have Been Mailed Out

The One Dollar Certificates which have been mailed out to all subscribers and readers of The DAILY WORKER— these are our answer to the War Mongers and Dollar Patriots.

Some time ago, Minister Chamberlain issued a provocative statement to the Workers' and Peasants' Soviet Republic, a statement which openly attempted to incite the workers of England to war upon their Russian brothers. The Russian workers and peasants are now engaged in raising money for their "Answer to Chamberlain." This money will be used to build up the defenses of the Soviet Union against the danger of attack from the tory government of England, or its agents.

Today our paper is under the same attack from the Chamberlains of America, those interested in dragging the American workers into another world war. We must give our answer as the Russian workers are giving theirs by building up the fund for the defense of our daily paper, the workers' fighting weapon against capitalist wars and the Open Shoppers.

MASSES DEMAND ACTION AGAINST CHINA TRAITORS

Wuhan Rulers Abandon Revolution

HANKOW, July 17.—An energetic campaign for the organization of a military drive against Nanking has been rapidly developing through the mass organizations of the workers and peasants. The railwaymen, sailors and other transportations workers, the peasant unions and other organizations of labor are arranging sectional demonstrations and issuing defiant manifestoes demanding that the Wuhan government immediately organize military expeditions against Chiang Kai-shek.

The mass demands for action against the traitors who are trying to arrest the revolution at a stage where it will be advantageous to the big capitalists and the imperialists has caused an internal crisis in the Kouamintang which is daily growing more acute. Most representatives of the military group in the Kouamintang who have been acting as the secret agents of the traitors, Chiang Kai-shek and Feng Yu-hsiang, are determined to force a final rupture with the Communists. Many of the Communists in the army corps, most of whom are holding political posts, have already been excluded, other corps have ordered registration of Communists. However several corps have refused to indulge in the policy of excluding the Communists.

Persecution of Communists.

In Hanyang, on the western bank of the river Han, opposite Hankow, soldiers are conducting systematic raids against Communists, arresting and torturing them. In Hankow itself similar raids have been going on

Youth Demonstrate Thru Moscow Streets Against Chamberlain's Conspiracy

(Special To The Daily Worker.)

MOSCOW, July 17.—Numerous demonstrations of the young workers are taking place in connection with the "Defence Week" now proceeding. Members of the Young Communist League are especially active. The demonstration yesterday began with a series of impromptu meetings at the mills and factories, which the Young Communists addressed and led into street parades, all centering on the Red Square and the Moscow Soviet.

While the columns marched thru the streets, automobiles with carricatures of Chamberlain lifted above them circulated about. Agitators in the autos shouted out slogans to the demonstrators marching past.

From the building of the Moscow Soviet the young workers were greeted by Uglanoff, secretary of the Moscow committee of the All-Union Communist Party, and by Ukhanoff, chairman of the Moscow Soviet, Chaplin, of the central committee of the Young Communist League, and others.

Caddy Killed When He Tried to Obtain Ball

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J., July 17.—While he was trying to retrieve a golf ball on the road near the Northfield Country Golf Club here, Walter Conklin, a 14-year-old caddy was struck by an automobile and instantly killed. The car was driven by Irwin Campbell, a local attorney. He was arrested on a technical manslaughter charge and released on $5,000 bail.

Colleges Are Training More Naval Officers to Serve in Coming War

WASHINGTON, July 17 (F. P.).—Expansion of the naval reserve officers' training corps in universities is planned in a conference of naval officers meeting in Washington. The naval training system has been spreading quietly while the efforts of anti-war forces were centered on the army units of the R. O. T. C.

Within a few years the navy has persuaded the following colleges to institute naval training courses: Georgia School of Technology, Northwestern, Harvard, Yale, Washington and California.

VANZETTI DEFIES FULLER; GOES ON HUNGER STRIKE

Condemned Worker Asks Open Hearings

BOSTON, July 17. — Bartolomeo Vanzetti has started on a hunger strike.

This information was released yesterday by the Sacco-Vanzetti Defense Committee in a statement which said that Vanzetti preferred to die by starvation rather than by electrocution as a result of the false evidence which is being submitted to the so-called advisory committee appointed by Governor Fuller to inquire into the charges of prejudice and persecution which existed at the Thayer trial.

According to the Defense Committee Vanzetti intends to continue his strike until Governor Fuller and the advisory committee consent to place Vanzetti and Sacco with counsel in the presence of their accusers for a public hearing of the testimony.

Behind Closed Doors.

It is pointed out that in a case of this magnitude, which has aroused protests from all corners of the world, this "hearing" is being held behind closed doors, and all witnesses who testify are sworn not to divulge the nature of their testimony after leaving the committee room.

It is well-known fact that former Judge Robert Grant is an enemy of the accused workers and has made no effort in the past to conceal the fact.

Unofficial reports from Boston have it that Governor Fuller has made up his mind as to the guilt of the two condemned workers and denizens of the underworld as well as "respectable" brokerage houses are offering two to one against Sacco and Vanzetti.

Dry Agent Sentenced to Prison for Beating Cop and Being Intoxicated

COLLINGSWOOD, N. J., July 17.—For assaulting a local policeman, Joseph Murray, a prohibition agent, and his wife, Irene, have been sentenced to jail here.

Murray was given 60 days for being drunk and disorderly, resisting arrest and assaulting an officer, and his wife was fined $200 and sentenced to 30 days in jail for similar offenses. As they were taken to jail Murray vowed vengeance.

Paints Milk Menace

Health of Workers in Other Cities Nearby

NEWARK, July 17 (FP).—Mills on the Passaic River not only drain the health of their workers but endanger the well being of all communities on the stream, Dr. R. C. Smith, chief chemist of the Passaic Valley Sewage Commission, has announced. Smith reported his findings to the commission that the river is rapidly becoming an open sewer.

Samples of cloth dyed from the river after Paterson and Lodi dye mills emptied their waste into the water were shown by Smith. Almost 2,000,000 gallons of raw sewage is dumped into the stream daily now and the amount is increasing, Smith declared. Oxygen cannot be found at all in some parts of the river.

Ford Apologizes to Sapiro; Pays Cash to End Libel Case

DETROIT, Mich., July 17.—Counsel for Aaron Sapiro and Henry Ford signed a settlement out of court yesterday which ends the famous libel case of the "Cooperative King" against the "Auto King."

Ford apologizes for remarks against Sapiro in the Dearborn Independent, his weekly magazine, and a sum of money, the amount of which neither of the parties would make perfect, has been handed over by Ford to Sapiro.

Ford, in his apology declares the charges against Sapiro were false, but blames them on the writer of the articles. This is as serious a retraction as could be expected, inasmuch as Jim Reed, presidential candidate and senator, defending Ford in court, insisted that they were all true. So did all the Ford defense, and Ford himself did not object.

The suit brought out much evidence of enormous charges made upon the farmers whom Sapiro brought into his "cooperatives" and also of recklessness with the truth on the part of Ford's hired writers.

HEDLEY TO USE POLICE TERROR IN I. R. T. STRIKE

Yellow Dog Contract May Be Arbitrated

Frank Hedley, president and general manager of the Interboro Rapid Transit in a statement issued Saturday threatened the subway workers with police terrorism in the event of a strike when he said, "The men are employed for a definite period ending April 30 1929, if molested, I am sure they will be given adequate police protection, if not they will see to it that the public continues to receive regular service on the Interboro system."

Last year the subway strikers were set upon by a gang of police and detectives and severely beaten up as they were coming out of a meeting at the Manhattan Casino at 116th Street and Eight Avenue.

"Men are working seven days a week, twelve hours a day and for as low as 29 cents an hour", declared P. L. Shea of the Amalgamated Association commenting on the report that the State Industrial Survey Commission has expressed a desire to inquire into the situation on the I. R. T. with regard to yellow dog contracts and general working conditions.

The commission, which is scheduled to reconvene today, is an official body which inquires into and reports on labor conditions in various industries.

J. H. Coleman, general organizer of the Amalgamated Association, said that the I. R. T. twice admitted in the last week that the yellow dog contract submitted to the subway workers was weak. Coleman was of the opinion that the Interboro's new method of having the "contracts" witnessed by notaries was an admission that the so-called agreement would not hold legal water.

"Lawyers are trying with every subtelty known to their craft to deprive subway workers of their rights as citizens," he said. "First, these workers were compelled to sign the contract without even being shown its contents. Our attorneys publicly cited the fraud and deception in this method. Now they are having the same contract signed over again. Can any one doubt that these are the tactics of men bent on deception and abuse of the workers?"

HORRIBLE LIFE IN NEGRO FLOOD CAMPS REVEALED

WASHINGTON, (FP) July 17.—Sharp criticism of the Red Cross for its slow colored camps for flood refugees in Louisiana, Mississippi and Arkansas has forced Secretary of Commerce Hoover, in charge of flood relief, to appoint a colored advisory commission. Dr. Moton of Tuskegee Institute, heads the commission with two other Negro college presidents.

Even Whites Object.

Reports reaching Washington indicate incredible conditions in the Negro camps at Greenville, Miss., Crowley, La., and Shelly Island, La. At Greenville 3,000 refugees are crowded into a small camp whose hospital facilities drew the criticism even of white doctors. Sixty thousand refugees on the levees up and down the river from Greenville are served from that camp.

Laborers at Greenville staged a revolt when white overseers with revolvers strapped to their sides introduced conscription. A Negro committee thought it better to avoid trouble by using the "war volunteer" system and advised their people to "offer" their services rather than be drafted. The guns were then removed.

Mostly Negro.

Eighty per cent of the 600,000 flood refugees in these three southern states are Negro. Most of them have lost their homes, crops and much of their live stock. Many of the younger members of the families, after helping relocate their parents on the flood-washed lands, are leaving for northern cities.

The plantation system, which borders on peonage, the three months school term, the oppressive conditions under which they labor and the dominance of the "poor white" aristocracy which is more intolerant in its lynchings, mob terrorism and Jim crowism even than the employers, are the underlying reasons for their decision to quit, for good and all, the flood-ruined country. Before only a miserable existence could be wrung from the soil but now, with no hopes for a crop this year, the colored population will scarcely live above the starvation level.

ATLANTA, Ga., July 17.—By a decision of the state supreme court handed down yesterday, a wage scale ordinance recently passed by the Atlanta City Council is declared void. The ordinance would have put into effect scales of wages for skilled labor on public works here.

SLUMS OF QUEENS AND BROOKLYN TO BE INVESTIGATED

Match-Box Shacks for Thousands of Workers

The thousands of cheap shingle match-box houses that line the outlying streets of Queens and Brooklyn will be investigated by the legislative commission for the revision of the Tenement House Act today.

The investigation is a result of testimony recently submitted to the committee regarding the unsanitary and hazardous conditions of the one-story frame houses that across the East River.

Enormous Slum.

The area to be investigated is taking the shape of an enormous slum, much vaster and much more dangerous than that on the east side, according to Thomas Adams, director of the Regional Plan for New York and environs. Cheap match-box houses, whose shingles are rotten and whose dank rooms are visible thru sagging and decaying walls will be investigated by the commission.

"We have potentially the greatest slum in New York in these tremendous areas of small one-family houses," declared Henry Wright, an architect testifying at a previous hearing.

Violate Building Codes.

The lives of the thousands of workers who live in these houses are constantly endangered by the fire hazard. The solid area of clapboard and shingle houses violate such protection as is supposed to be afforded by the building codes, according to Mr. Wright.

All along the eastern parts of Queens, through the outskirts of Jamaica and the Rockaways and huge sections of southeast Brooklyn are dingy ramshackle huts, closely huddled together along dirty streets.

Realtors Get Rich.

Large building operators made fortunes building these miserable shanties in the housing emergency of 1919 and 1920. Thousands of these shacks were erected overnight and rented or sold on the installment plan. Tenants in many of the houses have only half finished paying their installments on the houses.

Bright coats of paint covering the cheap wooden walls deluded workers into purchasing these match-box houses on the installment plan. Now the paint has worn off and the cheap rotting walls of houses are exposed in their dingy nakedness.

Record Fire Threatened.

"There is absolutely no doubt," said Mr. Wright at one of the earlier hearings of the commission, "that if a fire broke out in the southern part of Queens and in the neighborhood of Rockaway Boulevard on some night when there was a strong wind blowing in from the sea, it would take in the entire section. The apparatus we have available would not possibly meet it. We would have, probably will have sooner or later, the greatest fire ever in history. It will put New York on record as having one more of the greatest things in the world.

ROME, July 17.—That fascist Italy is closely watching the Viennese revolt and may actually intervene is indicated in the following statement appearing in the Giornale d'Italia, semi-official fascist organ:

"A small revolt in Austria now is, which has asked and obtained assistance of an international character, Italy taking a principal part in this, cannot indulge in riots, and must be watched in order to prevent their leading to unpleasant results."

a measure of success at present.

Not only the brute force of the law and of private gunmen but also more subtle psychological methods are utilized by the operators, who staged their first injunction hearing very effectively. An ironical aspect of his case is that he served on four different fronts in the great world war, in the 134th Machine Gun Battalion of the 37th Division, and successfully resisted gas attacks of every possible sort. Now the cruelty of a coal company sends him to seek his death by gas.

for some time. Grave apprehension is felt for the existence of labor organizations as the military spies and agents of the war lords have already taken action against many workers organizations.

The majority of the central committee of the Wuhan Koumintang are yielding to the demands of the militarists and are resorting to desperate measures in face of the threats on the part of the masses of workers and peasants that aim toward forcing decisive action against the traitor governement at Nanking. It is a matter of days only, perhaps hours, when the workers organizations will be destroyed and wholesale butchering of workers will set in Hankow and other cities under the Wuhan government.

Military Rule Looms.

There is no question that as far as Wuhan is concerned that the wavering elements of the Koumintang have gone over to the military adventurers and are subservient to the enemies of the revolution. Tang Sheng-shi has returned from the Changsha, where he carried out frightful persecutions of the labor organizations and Communists. He held lengthy conferences with corps commanders and also actively participated in the work of the council and political bureau of the Koumintang. Before leaving Changsha this war lord, who has been wavering between Feng and Wuhan issued orders to his troops to "prevent any troubles, even if such troubles start on orders of party (Koumintang) committees. All refusing to submit to order will be summarily dealt with," which means that they will be executed with the fiendishness characteristic of the semi-feudal military leaders.

Betrayed Sun's Three Principles.

Tang Yen-Tai, chief of the political department of the Wuhan army has left for an unknown destination, leaving a statement in which he declares that he resigned his post because the leadership of the revolution (the Wuhan government) has abandoned the three demands of Sun Yat-Sen, and that he considers it impossible further to follow the path which the Koumintang follows under the pressure of the generals.

Will Carry On Fight.

In conclusion Tang Yen-Tai asserts that he does not give up his revolutionary work and that he will carry on the fight under other forms against those who would deliver China into the hands of her enemies and exploiters. In taking this attitude the former chief of the political division of the army follows the path that is being followed by the masses of workers and peasants.

SECRETLY DEPORT CHINESE WORKERS ON ELLIS ISLAND

Sent to Rotterdam As Lawyer Gets Writ

While investigations as to their status were going on, the 38 Chinese seamen who had left the liner Rotterdam at Hoboken, June 28, after they had been refused shore leave, were deported back to Holland Saturday morning. They were being held at Ellis Island.

The action of immigration officials in allowing the removal of the seamen was condemned by workers in their interest. Congressman La Guardia announced he would take the incident to President Coolidge.

LaGuardia Protests.

"This is not only outrageous and improper," said LaGuardia, "but it is an indecent, flagrant violation of the law by the steamship company. The Ellis Island officials virtually approved of the kidnapping of these sailors while our government officials were investigating their status. The fact that Secretary of Labor Davis was prosecuting an inquiry was well known to the officials at the island.

"I look to Secretary Davis to find out exactly what happened. To think that Ellis Island officials allowed themselves to be used as marionettes by a private steamship company is disgusting."

While the Chinese workers were being secretly deported, Hugo Pollock, their attorney, was preparing affidavits preliminary to asking for a writ of habeas corpus in their behalf, and telephoned to Deputy Commissioner of Immigration Uhle to inquire if the attitude of the government representatives had changed.

Uhle informed Pollock that the seamen had already been deported. When Uhle was asked if he did not think such action highhanded, he replied, "it cannot be helped."

Enveigled on Board.

The 38 workers were part of the crew of the liner Rotterdam, who were hired at Rotterdam to serve in place of sailors who went on strike. They did not know until they reached mid-ocean that they were filling the places of strikers. They went on strike at Hoboken and 54 of them were jailed, many of them being severely beaten and held 72 hours without permission to see counsel. Sixteen of the men were recently returned to Rotterdam.

WASHINGTON, July 17.—Fifty-three Chinese seamen, who refused to act as strike-breakers on a Holland-American line steamship, were held at Ellis Island without legal authority and in defiance of the immigration act of 1924. This was done by the Bureau of Immigration of the Department of Labor as an "accommodation" to the steamship company, although bureau officials in Washington admit the entire procedure is "informal."

In the eyes of Washington immigration authorities, the Chinese seamen are plain mutineers, "likely to riot and endanger life," although there is no proof to that effect. In fact, officials here depended entirely on the say-so of steamship officers in reaching judgments on the entire case. Even if the Chinese are mutineers, and not indignant victims of an employer's trick in hiring them to take strikers' places without informing them of the use to which they were to be put, the law was violated on the interpretation of Washington officials themselves. The law requires mutineers to be taken back to the home port on the same vessel.

Accommodate Company.

"But this is a very extraordinary case," declare bureau officials, who were pointed in their demands not to be quoted. "As an accommodation to the company, we held the seamen at Ellis Island. If they were allowed the freedom of the port for 60 days, as allowed by law, the company would have had to put up $53,000 in bonds, or $1,000 for each sailor.

"Both to protect ourselves against these men gaining illegal entry and to save the Holland-American line from forfeiting so much money, we held the Chinese at Ellis Island until the company could provide transportation back to Holland."

"Storming of Perekop" Cinematic Ballet, Will Celebrate November 7

MOSCOW, July 17.—The Academy of Opera is constructing daily rehearsals of the cinematic ballet, "The Storming of Perekop," which will represent the final attack on Baron Wrangel's troops, the last White guard army to be driven from the territory of the U. S. S. R. Over 1,500 performers will take part. Among the characters presented will be Wrangel opposing the Soviet Union cavalry, General Budenny in front, People's Commissariat for War, who recently died. This event is part of the celebration of the tenth anniversary of the Bolshevik revolution, November 7th of this year.

By DAVID J. SAPOSS

of Brookwood Labor College

AMONG academic people writing about labor problems David J. Saposs has come closer than anyone else in the appreciation of the various forces that are at work in the labor movement at the present time. He has worked with Professor Commons for many years. He has investigated the steel strike, stockyards and has written extensively on outstanding labor events.

"Left Wing Unionism" represents a historical study of the origin and development of the Left Wing Movement among the trade unions. Being free from sensationalism and dogmatism, and fairly scientific in its treatment of its subject matter, it is a valuable contribution to the literature of this book. No writer on the labor movement could afford to be without this book, which is full of information and therefore is very useful reference volume.

"The success of Joseph Schlossberg's book, 'Bossless Industry,' has encouraged us to publish another book on labor. We have chosen for this purpose 'Left Wing Unionism,' by David J. Saposs, because we believe that it is equally as important as Schlossberg's book, and because it will appeal to a different group of readers. Saposs' book is not a polemic, but a scientific study of the Left Wing movement in the trade unions. It is based on a thorough knowledge of the facts, and is written in a calm, judicial spirit. It is the most comprehensive study of the Left Wing movement that has been published. It is a book that will be read by every student of the labor movement, and by every trade unionist who wishes to inform himself about the Left Wing movement

The Austrian Masses Shatter the Fiction of Capitalist "Stability."

Austria, chosen by the league of nations as a laboratory in which to conduct vivisection experiments in "stabilization" upon the working class, Austria, the classic and much advertised example of success in capitalist post-war reconstruction, by the revolutionary action of hundreds of thousands of workers, carried thru in defiance of their social-democratic leaders, has become a sign manual of the failure of the whole post-war capitalist program.

An important part of this program has consisted in using the social democrat leaders as buffers between the capitalist state and the millions of workers whose wages and working conditions, whose social and cultural status, in a word, whose whole standard of life has been sharply reduced to make possible the bolstering up of the capitalist system shattered by the world war.

Austria, stripped of most of her territory and population by the Versailles treaty, made dependent for foodstuffs upon neighboring countries carved out of her territory in order to set up a new balance of power in Central Europe, was regarded as a nation whose working class had been rendered impotent.

This feeling of security on the part of capitalist statesmen was all the greater since in Austria there was a powerful social-democratic party, well-organized and based on the trade unions, able to muster 1,500,000 votes out of a total of 3,200,000, skilled in the use of "left" phrases, and whose leaders not only accepted the necessity of "stabilization" but actually became the most efficient instrument of the league of nations in inducing the masses to accept its regulations.

Polling 43 per cent of the total vote cast in the last elections, the social-democrat leaders just before election day dropped their agitation for a majority vote for their candidates. The reason for this was clear. Since the possibility actually existed that their candidates might receive a majority of votes cast, and since these leaders had constantly stressed the possibility of capturing power by electoral processes, they were confronted with the "danger" of having to meet a demand by the workers that for the exercise of state power in behalf of the masses.

The truth is that the social-democratic leadership has been in an unofficial coalition with the capitalist parties for years.

It is evident from dispatches now that they are demanding an actual coalition. Instead of extending the struggle against the government of allied capital and creating a real base for a workers' and peasants' government, instead of calling for the immediate formation of a council of workers, soldiers and peasants and the arming of the masses, the social democrat leaders are negotiating for entry into the capitalist government.

In other words, they are using the revolutionary action of the masses in an attempt to legalize the coalition already in existence with the government.

The social democratic leaders are not demanding more power for the working class but more power over the working class.

Their maneuver is designed to strengthen the Austrian government, not to weaken it—to strengthen it against the working class.

If this treacherous scheme is carried thru it will be a severe blow to the revolutionary movement, but it will also serve to dispel the prevailing illusion that the leadership of the Austrian social-democracy is more revolutionary than that of other sections of the second international.

It is already apparent that the failure of the social-democrat leaders to prepare to utilize the tremendous indignation which the acquittal of the fascists (guilty of a whole series of murders of workers) would arouse their pacifist and apologetic attitude toward the great mass uprising, I ve shown their true role as defenders of the present order to wide sections of the Austrian working class.

The capitalist press correspondents are practically a unit in ascribing a leading role in the struggle to the Communists—especially in the factory districts.

There will be three immediate consequences of the Austrian revolutionary struggle. (A struggle whose immediate progress it is difficult to estimate due to lack of accurate information.)

First, the hollow mockery of capitalist stabilization brought into sharp relief in a country where American and British loans have been spent like water for "reconstruction," will be made apparent thruout the world.

Second, the demonstration of power by the masses formerly under the influence of the social-democratic leaders in a country which Germany hopes for unity with, will have great influence in preventing the immediate entry of Germany into the anti-Soviet Union bloc under the leadership of Great Britain.

Third, the labor movement of Germany especially, and of the whole of Europe, will receive a new impetus toward the left as a result of the great struggle of the Austrian working class which brings with it the exposure before the world's working class, the last symbol of revolutionary integrity remaining to the second international—the "left" leadership of the Austrian social democratic party—a leadership which today is seen by everyone to be using its influence to blow life into the putrid corpse of Austrian capitalism—a corpse which even the millions of allied capitalism could not revive.

Furthermore, it is of the utmost significance for us that the general strike and civil war in Austria come at a time when the British ruling class has, by the aid of the reformist leaders, scored a victory over the working class, when imperialism in China, thru treachery of Chiang Kai-shek and the weakness of middle class leaders, has obtained a breathing spell.

The working class of Austria, in spite of treason in their general staff, has been able to prove that world capitalism sits on a volcano whose crust is very thin and which is composed mostly of the bureaucracy of the second international.

Social-Democratic Pacifism in the Service of Imperialism

by H. M. Wicks

PACIFISM is today the principal slogan of all imperialists. Under pacifist slogans the most intense preparations for war are carried on. By repeating seductive pacifist slogans the paid spokesmen of the ruling class divert attention from their conspiracies to again plunge mankind into the abyss of another world slaughter.

No more do we hear loud howls of derision from the camp of the imperialists when pacifists rise to air their views. Instead the very pacifists who opposed the last world war and were hounded by the agents of the government who were sworn to stamp out every vestige of criticism against the policies of the former eminent pacifist, Woodrow Wilson, are now quoted in the most approved fashion by the reptile press.

The experience of the war and its aftermath taught the ruling class how to utilize pacifism for its own aims. A sample of inept pacifism was furnished by Mr. Norman Thomas in a recent performance, before a conference of the People's Reconstruction League in Washington, D. C.

THAT Mr. Thomas had a proper appreciation of the fullity of his proposals cannot he doubted after a perusal of his speech to the assembled pacifists. According to Mr. Thomas the United States will probably continue the imperialist race until her navy and bankers dominate the world, but the "progressives" will play less than a man's part if we do not stake our lives and energies on the effort to make America first in service, rather than in empire."

Magnificently spoken!

"Service!" That's the thing, so dear to the heart of every rotarian who wants to glorify his own sordid penny grabbing.

EVEN in his presentation the eminent socialist and director of the league for industrial democracy repeats the insipid slogans of the bourgeoisie. Mr. Thomas failed to enlighten us as to precisely how he intends to proceed to seduce the imperialist masters of the United States into abandoning their policy of capacity against other peoples and confining their activities to sweetness and light and beauty and joy and service. In order to avoid playing "less than a man's part", the former socialist candidate for governor of the state of New York proposes six measures that he hopes will aid in battling American's imperialist designs.

His proposals are as follows:

1—Congressional investigation of our relations in Latin-America and China, and the extent of investments and concessions abroad.

2—Equitable international control and allocation of raw materials.

3—International banking laws and uniform currency.

4—Progressive lowering of tariff barriers.

5—Refusal to collect private debts by war or intervention.

6—Cultivation of friendly relations with backward peoples for their own good and ours.

THE first demand, that for a congressional investigation, has rieit only inasmuch as it would shed the light of publicity upon the duplicity of the United States government whose task it is to defend Wall Street investments in the Latin-American countries, but as far as China is concerned a mere congressional probe based upon investigation of relations arising out of the investments of Americans would prove that such investments are really trivial compared with Britain and Japan. Nothing would better please the imperialists than an investigation based upon actual investments today because they could then enlist the pacifists 100 per cent behind their "open door" policy since those naive fellows could not possibly perceive the fact that it is not to end present investments that American imperialism is in China, but to blaze open the road for unlimited investments with the objective of driving out every other power and securing for itself the exclusive right to exploit that vast territory. Like most congressional investigations nothing could possibly come of it beyond exposing the vicious role of the government and that could not be used effectively upon the basis of the balance of Mr. Thomas' pacifist program, the second point of which is utterly absurd, granting of course, the perpetuation of the capitalist system.

EQUITABLE international control and allocation of raw materials (the second point) presupposes a condition where there are no longer antagonisms between the great powers, where each would be content to share with the others a proper portion of raw materials. Obviously that implies one of two things — either a super-imperialism or the abolition of capitalism. The former is inconceivable to all, who are capable of estimating the resources of the conflicting imperialist powers and their utter inability because of irreconcilable conflicts between them to unite upon a common program, and the latter can be achieved only through the forcible overthrow of capitalism, a thing that all pacifists shrink from contemplating.

THE third demand, which proposes international banking laws and uniform currency, is being worked out now under the pressure of the tremendous banking power of the United States, but the debtor nations are not enthusiastic about the Wall Street bankers determining the details of the currency by which their indebtedness is registered for the convenience of those identical Wall Street bankers. This very tendency is generating the fiercest resistance on the part of European nations and as long ago as the Locarno conference there was evidence of a strong tendency to create a bloc to resist the economic power of Wall Street.

AS to the progressive lowering of tariff barriers, which constituted the fourth demand of Mr. Thomas, those barriers will be lowered to the degree that Wall Street investors desire to import the products of their own foreign industries into the United States and to that degree alone. Since there is already a lowering of the tariff on many commodities this part of Mr. Thomas' program is also being partially realized, but with results not anticipated by the pacifists.

As to the point five demanding that this country refuses to collect private debts by war or intervention, does not Mr. Thomas know that the astute legal minds who devise wars always contrive to find some holy cause aside from investments as an excuse to go to war?

Furthermore such wars are not caused by a desire to collect private debts, but to dominate the government and make it subservient to Wall Street or seize territory under the pretext of bringing to "backward peoples" the blessings of civilization.

The sixth point is meaningless except inasmuch as it reveals the attitude of Mr. Thomas and his fellow socialists and pacifists toward the exploited peoples of the colonial and semi-colonial countries. He refers to them as "backward" with that air of superiority characteristic of the jingo invader who considers it his destiny to save them from themselves.

MR. Thomas' chief error arises from a fundamental theoretical defect, the inability to understand the class character of the capitalist government. He still harbors the illusion that the capitalist state is something that can be lifted from and above the struggle of classes and can be used against the capitalist class if only the "progressives", pacifists, socialists and "forward-looking people" generally decide to use it for their own purposes.

However, there is a much deeper significance to this wave of pacifist twaddle than most revolutionists perceive. The dirty sermonizing of the pacifists meets a response on the part of wide sections of the working class who sincerely dread the threat of a new war. Their hatred against militarism finds futile expression in pacifist indignation and finally dies away without leading to any struggle against the menace of imperialist wars. The social function of pacifism is precisely to weaken the working class, the only class capable of effectively fighting the threat of new wars.

We must never forget that it was the socialists, mouthing pacifist phrases in the United States; the Hillquits, the Oneals and other brainless self-appointed leaders of the workers who became completely enmeshed in the net of bourgeois pacifism and aided tremendously in facilitating this country's entrance into the world war, in spite of their feeble denunciation of it.

HE who preaches pacifism, he who declares for peace at any price and who abjures all war, he who assails all militarism without asking the question in whose interest military might is applied inevitably must, whether he is conscious of it or not, support the power of the ruling class.

Most menacing of all delusions of the working class is that of pacifism, because as long as imperialism lives, as long as there is a ruling capitalist class anywhere on earth the working class must recognize that it will have to defend itself against the depredation of that class with all the power at its command.

In our Communist anti-militarist campaign we must always keep in mind the fact that we must teach the workers the difference between reactionary military force that stands in the path of history, tries to hold it back by imposing fetters upon it, and the revolutionary military force that has as its task the shattering of the power of the bourgeoisie and clearing the path of history so that humanity can go forward to higher stages of development.

Only the proletarian revolution can finally free the world from the blight of imperialist wars. When the ruling class is finally crushed and the very ground upon which it thrives furrowed up entirely by the proletarian revolution that it can never again take root, then and then only can we seriously speak of abolishing all militarism.

ANOTHER most reprehensible social-democratic deception is the pacifist twaddle about war in the abstract; the inclusion of all wars—even revolutionary wars—as crimes against humanity. It is a social-democratic sophistry and a form of crawling before the bourgeoisie to speak today of war in the abstract. The threat of war today is not something that we must face in the distant future, but a reality that vitally affects the whole world right at this moment.

A concrete and not an abstract problem of war faces the world today. That is the predatory war being wage by the imperialist powers against China and the Soviet Union. Although this war must be combatted with the same tactics used to stifle any imperialist war it is at the same time not a mere repition of 1914-1918, but a new, special kind of war.

What is Mr. Thomas or his cohorts in the socialists party doing to meet this new war against the Soviet Union and the Chinese revolution? He doesn't even mention it in his memorials to the People's Reconstruction League, but merely repeats in the most banal manner his sterile abstractions.

While Mr. Thomas mentions imperialism as a cause of wars, he does not propose a fight against the very foundation of imperialism, the governments of the various capitalist states, nor does he emphasize the only effective method ever devised of fighting against imperialist wars once they have started—the Leninist method of utilizing the crisis in the economic crisis resulting from the war to foment revolution—to turn the imperialist war between nations into a civil war against capitalism.

But no one expects the socialist leaders to propose revolution, their historical role is that of the last line of defense of the capitalist class. Instead of following the Leninist Kharan that the first duty of a revolutionist is to try to bring about in an imperialist struggle the defeat of the capitalist government of his own country in order to fan the flames of revolution, and striving to prepare the workers for such a struggle, Thomas and his "comrades" of the defunct S. P. leadership confine their opposition to war to devitalizing sacrifice, which is of the greatest service to the war-monsers.

DRAMA

The Jewish Theatre in Soviet Russia

LILLIAN WALKER

Heads the cast of players in the new Wm. A. Grew farce "The Mating Season," which opens tonight at the Selwyn Theatre.

SOVIET RUSSIA, alone among nations, claims three state-endowed Jewish theatres. Nor is the reason hard to find, for it stems from the Soviet policy of National Cultural Autonomy. According to this doctrine every nationality represented in Russia not only has the right to use its own language and develop its own drama, but can also count on the State for active support in the exercise of this right. As the Jews are among the larger of minor nationalities in Russia, and as their activity in the fine arts has reached its greatest distinction in the theatre, it is natural that the Jewish State Theatre of White Russia, the Jewish State Theatre of the Ukraine and the Jewish Kamerny of Moscow should all find support. It is in the theatre that such men as Altman, Chagall, Yaktow and Habinovitch, some of the most distinguished of the Russian artists, have worked, and it is to the theatre that such leaders as M. Falk and S. B. Ryback have recently come.

Souhker per Ryback, widely known for his cubist paintings, continues Louis Lozowick, in the "Theatre Arts Monthly," has always taken a great interest in the backgrounds of his race. He has chronicled the small town Jew, and assembled a large collection of Jewish folk art. At times he has emulated in his work such phases of his racial heritage as he has found in synagogual decoration, tombstone inscription, book illustration and work in metal. In his settings and costumes for I. L. Peres' "On the Confessional Chain," as presented by the Jewish Theatre of White Russia, Ryback combines a controlled use of folk-lore with a modern formalism. In his play, as in "The Dybbuk," a student of sacred lore passes his days brooding over the subtleties of the Talmud in the Synagogue. He is in love with and betrothed to the daughter of the richest Jew in town, but the grasping parents of the girl betreth her to a wealthier young man, reprimanding the student for his boldness and punishing him by putting him on the confession chain in the synagogue. The girl, broken-hearted by the turn events have taken, drowns herself. As adapted for the theatre this theme is used to depict the struggle between the two worlds, the dying world of the superstitious Chasidim and capitalism, and the new world of the poor but rising young proletarists. Wavering between them is the lonely student, a sort of Jewish Hamlet who hates the old world and yet is unable to accept the new one, and who is, therefore, cursed to die with the old order. Ryback's settings summarize in their stylization the architecture of the synagogue and the narrow walls of the ghetto streets.

In the "Purim Play," as produced at the Jewish State Theatre of Ukraine, Ryback, with his strong interest in folk art, has had a chance to apply this method of stylization to his favorite material. The "Purim Play" is a true Jewish Commedia dell' Arte, dating back to about the sixteenth century. Though historically and technically related to its Italian forerunners, it has come to have a folk flavor all its own, as explicit as the Jewish speech itself. The performances are given annually at the festival of Purim to celebrate the events set forth in "The Book of Esther." A host of the most varied types are assembled around Haman the blackguard, Mordecai the emancipator, and the King and Queen. As the material is secular, and encourages eating, drinking and merry-making, the carnival is sometimes carried to a point at which the revellers are no longer able to recognize the difference between "Cursed be Haman" and "Blessed be Mordecai." These performances have been very popular among the poorer classes.

In the stock personnages of the play, the simple folk can pillory their oppressors, the cruel kings and the scheming emperors, over the petty local officials with derision, thumb their noses at the "best society" and poke fun at their own racial foibles. At the present time, this festival, that has laughed itself down the centuries, is even more riotous than in the past and sparkles with sharp references to current affairs of the new Russia. Ryback, in his approach to this theme tries to retain the spontaneity of folk improvisation by using the properties that are closest at hand and succeeds admirably in achieving his aim.

M. Falk, who was one of the most accomplished followers of Cezanne in Russia, came to the theatre as a mature artist. His activity in the theatre, however, has not been in line with his earlier work. The change from the principles of Cezanne to independent principles of his own is clearly seen in his settings and costumes for "A Night in the Old Market Place" at the Jewish Kamerny Theatre in Moscow. This is a mystery play by I. L. Peres, with scarcely any plot, that gives a poignant picture of a decrepit world, accentuated a thousand-fold by the acting, the music and the scenery, until it becomes a veritable danse macabre. The old market in the center of a small Jewish town is symbolic of the world itself, the world of priests, rabbis, traders and prostitutes, writhing in its last agonies and clinging desperately to its superstitions. The dead regulate the custos of the living and the living are putrid with the germs of decay. The final judgment is upon them, and when the dead rise, the difference between the dead and the living disappears. In his settings Falk has sought for the most solemn and awe-inspiring details that the life around him held, using the hieratic rigidity of the church and synagogue on opposite sides of his stage, and heightening the funeral atmosphere of the play by ghastly masks and costumes. This production, like all the rest of the numerous plays staged by the Jewish theatre, bears the indelible marks of formal discipline in design. It may appear paradoxical that a theatre frankly committed to a definite social orientation should be so persistently preoccupied with an aesthetic formalism. But in its own view the two elements are inseparable. The Jewish theatre is unequivocally opposed to what is known as an "Agit" (propaganda) play, and insists on accomplished artistry in everything it undertakes, convinced that the spirit of revolution resides in, and is served by, the manner as much as the material.

An Answer to Mr. Muste's "Appeal to Youth"

By P. FRANKFELD.

A. J. MUSTE, liberal-laberite and progressive, has written an Appeal to Youth in the July number of Labor Age. The appeal is not so much directed to the youth as much as it is directed and intended for the labor movement to wake up to the possibilities and necessity of organizing the young workers and its subsequent benefits for the labor movement, as a whole.

The very fact that another section of the labor movement is becoming aware of the fact that the young workers are not organized, is a real step forward. The fact that Mr. Muste, representing a progressive tendency, has awakened from the Rip Van Winkle sleep that has enveloped the American labor movement on this question, and is attempting to rouse the rest of it is something to be congratulated. However, that which the left-wing has always recognized and made efforts to remedy, and has to an extent succeeded, may be responsible for the "sudden awakening" for as Mr. Muste himself admits, "The only semblance of a youth movement having any connection with American labor is in the extreme left wing."

There are something like 11 millions of youth and child workers in the U. S. today. The number of young workers has been steadily increasing in the last two decades, in America. With the growth and development and concentration of industry, and the subsequent simplification of the processes of production, it was inevitable that the youth should be more and more drawn into the industrial life. Also, with the development of the class struggle in the U. S., in the sense that class lines and divisions were becoming more sharply drawn and permanent, with the opportunities that existed in America of rising from the ranks of the working-class to that of the petty bourgeoisie having disappeared, that the youth should become a source of much needed revenue for his family, and a source of greater exploitation for the bosses. Especially now, with immigration practically shut off, with that source of unskilled, unorganized, and exploitable workers no longer obtainable, does the boss class turn to the American youth to reinforce the ranks of the unskilled and semi-skilled categories formerly filled by Italians, Russians, Poles, Hungarians, etc.

Another important factor making for the increase of youth labor in America is the springing up of new industries with a great division of labor. These industries become practically youth industries, employing mostly young workers. Radio is an example.

These facts are mentioned not only for general information, but for serious considerations to those really interested in organizing the unorganized young workers. For these different industries and categories of young workers, different methods will have to be employed in organizing them. This will be explained in some detail later on.

Now as to the article of Mr. Muste. He seems to realize these facts, but in a general way. He realizes that the organization of the working youth is necessary—but that is, in too general a way. Mr. Muste correctly points out the necessity of infusing "new blood" in the trade unions. He speaks of church organizations and their youth associations, Red Scout movements and student movements. But these arguments are very superficial. The real substantial arguments to interest the youth in organizing the unorganized young workers are: (1). For the self-preservation of the American trade union movement it is necessary to organize the youth. Otherwise the capitalist class will see to it that they continue to be organized in the Boy Scouts, Y. M. C. A.'s, military institutions, American Legion, and other strike-breaking and scab agencies. (2). For the preservation of the American standard of living. The working youth are being used to replace adult workers on the job for much less pay and (3). Because the interests of the young workers are identical with the interests of the adult worker.

This last point bring us to the proposal made by Muste for "labor youth leagues." Mr. Muste states: "It seems to me that we might profitably consider the possibility of developing something in the nature of a trade union or labor youth league. Religious, charitable and political organizations of all kinds have such auxiliary youth organizations and would not think of carrying on without them." This in brief, is the solution offered by Mr. Muste, and this solution we have heard before. But what Mr. Muste fails to see or understand in exactly that last point brought out in the preceding paragraph. The interests of the youth and adult are the same.

The fact that the young workers are brought into industry, that they become concentrated in certain industries, brings them into the ranks of the working class and into the fold of the class struggle. The task of organizing them, not into labor youth leagues, but into actual bona-fide trade unions with equal rights and privileges with adult workers becomes much more simple as a result of this bringing the young workers into active participation in the class struggle, and can only result in the strengthening of the fighting power of the workers. This fact can be verified by the experience of the Passaic workers when they conducted their great struggle, the youth tremendously strengthened the fighting power of the whole union.

If the working youth is organized in its own youth league, the opposite will be the effect. The young workers will become something separate and apart from the general trade union movement. They will become sort of second class union men. The division will be one of age, and not one that is historically or practically necessary, and therefore only artificial. And when Mr. Muste gives religious, charitable and political organizations' youth auxiliaries as a comparison and justification for labor youth leagues, we say that he shows great confusion and misunderstanding between the former and the latter. It was a similar confusion that made the German social-democrats propose the same solution for the same problem in Germany.

Mr. Muste correctly understands the bureaucrats' reasons for organizing the unorganized youth, but attributes to them a mistaken fear saying: "We are afraid of that thing in young people to which at the present time we usually apply the term Bolshevism. That is to say, afraid of their rebelliousness, their willingness to even smash what already exists in order to get at something that seems better. All of these difficulties are perfectly real." In the first place it is necessary to understand the forces at work that makes for this rebelliousness. They are the greater degree of exploitation of the youth. The low wages, and long hours of work. The fact that the young worker is left unprotected, and is at the mercy of the employer. The young workers aggressive today, but already we see definite signs of movement in the direction of struggle towards bettering their conditions. The elemental forces of work will produce more Bellvilles, Ballaires, Plumbers' Helpers organizations, bread-boy strikes, etc. The working youth in America, even today, when passive, are not an inert mass.

The direct and open sabotage by the trade union officialdom of this basic necessity for the labor movement, that of organizing the young workers, is objectively cloaked by Mr. Muste behind the slogan of "an old folks are afraid of the young." It is not exactly this kind of fear that makes the bureaucrats hesitate, but because of the new militancy that the youth will bring into the trade unions, the new trade unionism that will sweep out the old fogies who have been in office for decades and clean the Augean stables of the American labor movement. It is that fear which prevents the officialdom of the A. F. of L. from organizing the youth, and instead William Green, president of the A. F. of L. calls on the working youth to go to the C. M. T. C.'s, and they are correct, for witness the activities of Pat Toohey, Joe Angelo, and Tony Minerich in the Miners' Union, Passaic, Gold in the furriers, etc. Their fears are very well founded indeed.

To cap the article, the new Ten Commandments are handed down by Mr. Muste from the Mount. The ten don't's for the youth, when in the labor youth leagues, we presume. They are.

(1). Don't be a somebody who is going to do something to the labor movement. Be somebody who is going to do something in the labor movement. (2). Don't get the Measlah and Messiah-complex; (3). Don't get the-wilderness complex; (3). Don't be in a hurry; (4). Don't be a cry baby; (5). Don't become a clever fellow who plays games with the militancy; (6) Play for a chance to do work not a chance to get publicity; (7). Don't be afraid of being called names, and 10). Don't become a cynic.

Some very good don't's and some very bad ones. Again, however, Mr. Muste issues ten commandments in order to make the officials feel secure if ever they decide to organize the youth. Even when he advises fearlessness in facing a barrage of names —which paradoxically enuf he provides a long enuf list—he forewarns the youth to fee their heads, not fall prey to words, deal with realities and not slogans. So even that bold, intrepid commandmant is rendered innocuous by the new Moses of the suffering youth.

Instead of issuing ten commandments to the working youth, that is not yet organized, nay, not even in the youth sections that Muste proposes, it would have been more profitable to have suggested ten ways of proceeding with organization. We will not go into great detail for that would require another article, but rather make some general suggestions and remarks.

In the first place, we must recognize the differences in degree of organization in the given industries. For instance, in the light matai and machinery, there is the A. F. of M., which is in a very weakened condition, today. However, an organization does exist, and in the two above mentioned there are many thousands of young workers employed. It is different in radio, which is something entirely new, and where the first semblances of an organization must be built. In the union, a special youth organization committee should be established. This committee should devise special youth ways and means of attracting the young workers. It should proceed to establish contacts with the young workers in the large shops and factories. It should even proceed to send someone from the union into the very factories to facilitate organization. The young workers in the shop should be encouraged to organize shop committees, either legal or illegal according to necessity. Usually at first the committee will have to function illegally. Special organization meetings can be called by the union in some special factories, and leaflets can be distributed openly explaining the aims and purpose of the union not in a general way, but actually linked up with the specific conditions in the factory. That is one way. Another way, in those industries which have no unions at all and in which there are many young workers, some union operating in a general way in the same industry can be made to claim jurisdiction; and then proceed to organize. For instance, biscuit making is an industry by itself and employs thousands of workers. The bakers can be had to start an organization drive. Candy making, no union at all, the food workers should claim jurisdiction over them.

While on the one hand if the official union functioning the industry can be had to initiate the organization drive, very well and good. If not, the young workers in these industries must be encouraged and directed in the way of organizing themselves. Through factory committees, and factory clubs, through the utilization of the shop nuclei of the Workers Party or the Young Workers League if they exist in those factories, through developing the understanding and desire for organization among the young workers in the shop. In those places where no action can be obtained from the trade union bureaucrats, to actively proceed to organize the young workers into a union of their own—at the same time trying to get the A. F. of L. to recognize it. Cases have occured where as a result of the activities of Young Workers League members and propaganda, a strong desire for organization was created, shop committees formed and then application to the bonafide union failed to bring any results whatsoever. Therefore the necessity of following this propaganda and activity with actual organization if the union does nothing, in order that this sentiment does not peter out and the young workers become discouraged and disillusioned.

The plumbers helpers union is an excellent example of the neglect and disdain with which the bureaucrats treat the youth. Neglected for a long time, left in the lurch in the past, these young workers finally resigned to organize themselves which they did. They went out in a sympathy strike with the adult plumbers in Brooklyn, and stuck it out to the last. At the same time they took the necessary precaution of making demands of their own on the bosses, in order to better their own working conditions, and have succeeded admirably. Mr. Muste, in this case should direct his appeal to the International officials, to admit these young workers who are clamouring at the door of the union.

Now is the time for the labor movement in America to wake up to the tremendous possibilities before it. It is doubly necessary and imperative in view of the attacks launched against the young workers. The miners, building trades, and needle trades are faced with immediate attacks on the part of the bosses, and while in the building trades they may not succeed, they have succeeded in the needles trades, and unless the Lewis policy is defeated in the Miners, will succeed there too. The way to meet the offensive of the employers is to start a counter offensive against them by organizing the unorganized, and not to forget to include the youth, the young workers.

TEXTILE MANUFACTURERS HOLD WOOLEN MILL EXECUTIVES HOLD GIANT TRUST TO LIMIT PRODUCT, LIFT PRICE

By LELAND OLDS.
(Federated Press).

The end of the era of private competition in the textile industry is contemplated in the conception of a coordinating board to control production and distribution for the industry as a whole in the interest of higher profits, the new order was initiated at a gathering of 300 executives and selling agents of woolen and worsted mills, in New York, following the suggestion of Col. Robert L. Whiteside of the National Credit Office.

"Controlled Production"

"The century old law of unrestricted supply of goods demanded," said Whiteside, "has been superseded by controlled production and regulated distribution. I believe that you are the first industry to be seriously affected by this new economic order and that you will be the first to solve it. And in doing that, you will make this industry the outstanding example of industrial efficiency in America, one that will show the way to all other industries in the new order of coordination."

"The woolen industry is faced with the same trouble as most other industries. It can produce more than the country requires, with present purchasing power. Current consumption, according to Whiteside, is about $650,000,000, or about 77.3 per cent of the single shift capacity of the industry. Consequently if a majority of the mills figure prices on the expectation of operating fulltime they are unlikely to operate at a profit.

The over development of productive capacity has brought a situation where competition is no longer regulating prices. Instead, the larger units are free to set their own prices and other smaller units tend to follow. The result is "manufacturers of clothing that 'ground' are buying piece goods, furs, etc. in place of woolen. They are organizing to eliminate competition among themselves in order to compete more intensively for the profits going to other industries.

Fix Prices.

The coordinating board will initiate a uniform method of figuring costs from the loom to the selling price and will recommend to the mills that they establish a price scale which will yield a reasonable profit. The selling agents, through which most of the smaller mills market their products, will be expected to maintain these prices.

Represented on the production committee are cliffs well known for their hostile attitude toward organized labor, among them American Woolen and Amoskeag. The committee on distribution is dominated by corporations which have always controlled the industry through handling the sales and financing of a multitude of small independent mills. These include Lawrence Co., Deering, Millliken & Co. and, of course, American Woolen.

As pointed out at the meeting, the country is passing into a new economic order. It will be characterized by capitalist coordination under the dominant financiers. From labor's standpoint it can be met only by a similar coordinating development in the trade union field.

GOVERNOR Len Small handed the state treasurer a check for $660,000 which brings to a conclusion a long and heated struggle between Len and his foes involving as scandalous a transaction as ever disgraced an administration. This is the story in brief: While Small was state treasurer, he loaned several million dollars to the meat packers at eight per cent. He turned the legal two per cent that the banks paid on state funds into the treasury and failed to account for the balance. He has succeeded in evading punishment by the liberal use of bribemoney and by the strength of his political machine. The check was finally accepted as restitution in full. Had Small stolen a loaf of bread to stop the hunger of a child he would certainly go to jail. This is how justice sees things in a capitalist country.

Pullman Porters Up Before Board; Want Union Recognition

CHICAGO, (FP) July 17.—As it to rub it in on the Pullman Co. and its newspaper retainers, particularly the Chicago Journal of Commerce, the railroad mediation board has opened hearings in Chicago on the application of the Brotherhood of Sleepingcar Porters to supplant the company union.

This is the case that was widely advertised through the papers last week as having been turned down by the board in Washington. The Journal of Commerce special writer sneered and jeered at the brotherhood. The intended effect of all this false propaganda was to discourage the colored porters and maids in Pullman employ from further increasing the majority held by the brotherhood over the company union, the socalled Employe Representation Plan.

Union Appears.

Both Pullman and Brotherhood representatives appeared before Edwin Morrow of the mediation board and argued the rival merits and rights of bonafide versus company-union representation for the men in disputes between the corporation and its employes. The hearing adjourned to July 18th.

Morrow for the mediation board deplored the false news sent out in the Pullman interest last week. Brotherhood officials state that porters have generally discounted the propaganda, as their long experience with the commercial press of the country has trained them to be cautious about believing any news appearing in it.

Has Majority.

The aim of the brotherhood, which now counts a majority of the eligible workers in its membership, is stated by organizer A. Philip Randolph as more wages, better hours, better working conditions, pay for overtime, pay for preparation time, abolition of doubling out, conductor pay for conductor work when in charge and, in general, manhood rights.

Reconstruction League Tells Cal Cloverning No Way to Stop Gas Gouge

WASHINGTON, (FP) July 17.—Attorney General Sargent is asked to investigate the suspicious increases in the price of gasoline ordered by the leading companies in a letter from the People's Reconstruction League.

"While the President out in the Black Hills is indulging in political buffoonery more appropriate for a Black Prince trying to be King, than for a white president, the law breakers of the Standard Oil Co. and the other big gasoline gougers are by conscienceless, if not criminal collusion running up the price of gasoline," writes Benjamin C. Marsh, executive secretary of the League. "Each increase in the profiteers' price is usually identical. This is not an accident. It is patent evidence for you to proceed at once, and effectively to break up this combine and secure the punishment of the multi-millionaire Godless church leaders guilty of this law-breaking, with respect to a natural resource.

"If you do your duty in this matter, these men will be less urgent for intervention in Mexico and elsewhere. People who rob ruthlessly at home feel encouraged to do so abroad. Don't be afraid of Charles Evans Hughes nor the Anti-Saloon League."

Cheap Ford Car Made By Overworking Labor, House Organ Warning

DETROIT, July 17. (FP)—The new Ford model with gear shift and other improvements, scheduled for the fall, will cost much more to produce, but will sell at only a slightly increased price, if any, says The Ford Worker, the factory paper at the Ford plant.

"Ford may reduce the cost by cutting wages. This competition will force him to do unless the workers are organized," the paper declares.

WOMEN

POISONING OUR WOMEN WORKERS

By R. HOLTMAN.

In an address read by Dr. Alice Hamilton, Professor of Industrial Medicine in Harvard Industrial School, at the 16th Women's Industrial Conference held in Washington, she pointed out the great dangers that confront women workers from industrial poisoning.

New Danger Since War.

According to Dr. Hamilton, the danger has increased manyfold since before and during the great war. There have been many changes in the type of solvents used in industry, creating a new danger in rubber factories, and in factories using varnish, lacquer, shellac, and other coatings. Before the war, lead and a limited number of explosives were considered the chief dangers.

The pottery industry carries with it great danger of lead poisoning for the great number of women and girls who are employed in it. "American potteries are by no means model factories. In fact, they fall far below the standards maintained by many industries for which a strict factory hygiene is not nearly so necessary.

Printing and type foundings are other industries where women find employment and where the danger of lead poisoning is very serious. Even more complicated and much more dangerous is the work of producing litho-transfer paper, where women are employed in dusting finely ground lead sulfate on prepared paper. In such factories complete protection is almost impossible.

Benzol Causes Anemia.

The most dangerous and difficult poison to control, tar-coal-benzol, has spread widely through industry, displacing the much safer petroleum solvents, naptha and benzine. Benzol has proven especially poisonous to many women in these industries.

The National Safety Council has published a report of a study of benzol-using industries in which it is stated that during 1922-23, 15 deaths from benzol poisoning and 83 non-fatal cases occurred in 24 plants. During 1925 at least 7 more died of benzol poisoning. Of 34 cases of severe poisoning, 40 were women, and of 36 deaths, 28 were women.

It is probable that benzol is one of the poisons which is more dangerous for women than for men, and especially dangerous for young girls, as it destroys the elements of the blood, thus causing anemia. The blood loses its power to clot, and when a slight injury to a blood vessel occurs, the blood keeps oozing out. Victims of benzol poisoning have hemorrhages under the skin as well as from the nose, the gums, the stomach and intestines. Women suffer additional danger through excessive monthly hemorrhage.

Profits vs. Lives.

Wood alcohol is another American poison. Grain alcohol could be substituted, but for many preparations, such as varnishes, wood alcohol dries more quickly. Quicker evaporation, however, means that the air of the workroom becomes more quickly poisoned, and the life and health of the workers are thus endangered solely in the interest of a greater profit for the boss.

New York State factory inspection in 1926, found that wood alcohol was used as a solvent for shellac applied to lead pencils, for shellac on picture frames and for the stiffening of hat frames in panama hats. Most of this work is done by women. Artificial flower manufacture is another well developed industry in New York State where wood alcohol is used as a solvent for dyes. The parts of the flowers are dipped into the dye and hung up to dry while the solvent evaporates. Women are employed in all these industries, and inspectors have found that inflammation of the skin of the eyelids is very common.

According to one authority it is not enough to provide ordinary ventilation in a workroom where wood alcohol is used. At least three times the usual airspace is required for safety where this solvent is used. The symptoms of wood alcohol poisoning, which may end in death or complete blindness, are familiar to all from the many cases which occurred soon after the passage of the prohibition amendment. Industrial poisoning is of exactly the same character.

Danger to Children.

In dealing with the problem of women in poisonous trades, it is necessary to take into consideration, first, that women are more susceptible to poisons as compared with men, and second, the possibility of the transference of the poisoning from the mother to the offspring.

It is a striking evidence of the greed for profits of the American capitalist, and the indifference of the government to the health and welfare of the workers, that in this country, the wealthiest and most prosperous in the world, there is almost no effort to study and control the danger of industrial poisoning; while in Germany, Holland and the Scandinavian countries, extensive studies have been made and preventive measures undertaken.

A COMRADE'S FUNERAL

(Written After the Death Of Comrade Chessick Of Philadelphia.)

By BERTHA KANTOR.

A comrade died, a soldier of the revolutionary ranks of the United States. A plain, sincere worker one of those who remain in the background, doing their duty quietly, earnestly. He was one of the many who build our movement.

He had no relatives, but he was never lonesome. Relationship stronger than that of blood, forged in the struggles of the revolutionary proletariat bound him to his comrades.

When he died he was brought to the Party headquarters. His comrades came to take a last look at him. They pledged themselves to continue the work he left, to fill his place with greater energy. Thus they expressed their sorrow.

Again at his open grave they gathered closely together and sang the International. The powerful melody reverberated across the cemetery grounds. Old ladies who came to weep over the graves of their loved ones were drawn to the scene, for never before had they witnessed such a funeral. Here in the Kingdom of Death, triumphant life broke in

Bourgeois Teavellers Also Blame "The Bolsheviks" for Many Passport Regulations

By J. LOUIS ENGDAHL

OUR train begins picking up "Americans" returning to the United States as it passes thru Germany on its way from Berlin to Paris.

There doesn't seem to be much "American," for instance, about the young man sitting in the seat opposite, in the compartment that we occupied. European trains are divided into compartments that seat from six to ten passengers each.

* * * *

A Roumanian From Detroit.

It developed, however, that he was returning to Detroit, Mich., and he was not going to waste any time in Paris on the way.

He had brought $1,400 with him on his visit to Roumania. He had none of it left.

"All my relatives joined in begging it away from me," he said. "I couldn't refuse them, their conditions were so bad, and their needs were so great."

No Love for Queen Marie.

This Roumanian worker from Detroit, who had returned for a visit to the land of his birth, could not find words extreme enough to condemn the Roumanian government. He spoke, with a personal pride, of the fact that Queen Marie of Ronmania had not come to Detroit during her recent visit to the United States. He said, "She didn't dare." She had cut her trip short by leaving Detroit and Cleveland, and other cities with large Roumanian colonies off the list.

He took special delight in telling how he had cheated the customs officials on the Roumanian border. He had attempted to take a box of cigars in with him. The duty, however, was fixed at $18. That was many times the amount he had paid for the cigars. He refused to pay the duty, carefully tore into many fragments all the cigars that it contained and scattered the wreckage to the winds.

"Now there are no cigars left and you can't collect the duty," he told the officials, and they had to admit he was correct.

This is merely one instance of multitudes of a similar nature that travelers tell, testimony to the numerous tariff barriers that have been erected between all European countries, most of them in bankruptcy and in dire need of every lira, drachma or zloty they can get their hands on.

At Cologne, an elderly woman comes on the train and finds a seat in our compartment. She was born in Denmark and has been visiting that country with a sister. Her husband was more interested in visiting Yellowstone Park and California, than the Scandinavian countries, and so he had not come along. The sister had had her fill of European travel and had taken a boat directly home to the "U. S. A." Our fellow-traveler had decided to see Germany and Paris.

She blamed all her troubles on the Bolsheviks. The Bolsheviks were responsible, in her eyes, for the existence of all passports and the demands for all visas. These restrictions had all been adopted, in her opinion, to act as checkmates against the Communists, concerning whom she had read at great length in the daily newspapers. She knew all about Russia, she said, from reading the capitalist press. She had found Communists in Denmark, but added her denunciation of the Stauning social-democratic government in that country, fervently hoping that the Communists would get no stronger in the United States.

He Hated The Bolsheviki.

In fact, the passengers generally felt that all travelling restrictions were due to the dread of the Bolsheviks. This opinion was also accepted by a Frenchman who could talk some English. By the time the train reached the Ruhr district, of coal and iron, our discussions had attracted practically everyone in the car who could speak, or understand, the English language. Thus we passed thru Duisburg, and Essen, "the Pittsburgh of the Ruhr," and a host of other cities that have been the centers of titanic struggles of the German steel workers and coal miners for power, against the oppressors in Berlin, Paris and London, not to forget Washington and New York.

There must be some affinity between steel, coal and goats, for here, as along the banks of the Allegheny and the Monongahela, long bearded goats in large numbers graze quietly along the hillsides. But here in the Ruhr, the cottages with the countryside, including the goats, do not look as seedy and full of dirt as the environs of Pittsburgh or Bethlehem, in Pennsylvania, or any other American steel town or coal mining center.

We pass thru the Ruhr during the late afternoon and evening. Quite late at night we hit a corner of Belgium, with the names of stations familiarized by the world war. Everywhere, "Tours thru the Battlefields" were being advertised. The trenches have been carefully preserved thru the judicious use of concrete. Every possible inducement is given to the tourist trade that brings hundreds of millions of dollars annually to Belgium and France, the chief favorites, altho it is claimed there is falling off of American visitors this year. It is planned to send tens of thousands of members of the American Legion to tha gathering of this organization in Paris, in September, to make up for any deficiency.

At Liege, where a change is made between all European cars pulled alongside our own. With the Polish, German and French cars that made up our own train, we had quite a collection for a few moments in this station.

American Passports Get Recognition.

The Belgian officials, in brilliant uniforms, do not take the trouble to even open up American passports, they hold them in such respect. With others they are more careful.

It is after midnight when we cross over into France. Before seven o'clock in the morning we begin to touch the outskirts of Paris.

The last view of the open country was that of a French farmer swinging his scythe in a hayfield ripe for the cutting. Even here, therefore, backward methods are in use by the impoverished peasantry. In Rumania, as in Germany and Poland, the Communist Party has a great influence among the farming population.

Of this I was to learn more later in the day on visiting the headquarters of the French Communist Party, here in Paris, and the offices of its central organ, the L'Humanite.

Against the War Danger

THE FUTURE WAR AND THE WORKING CLASS

By D. MARETSKY (Moscow).

III.

The reconstruction and development of imperialistic economy bear within them the premises and factors of a new war. During the postwar period, the competitive struggle among the powers has not slackened but became more intense. The problem of procuring raw material has become critical for a number of States, while the desperate fight for markets has grown extremely sharp. The coming to a climax of the main problem for capitalism, namely, the procuring of markets, is distinguished by the following features: the disproportion between the possibilities of extending the machinery of production and of the small basis of effective demand on the part of the masses; the dropping out of the Soviet Union as a free market from the sphere of capitalist world economy; the Versailles "peace" conditions, which laid a political ban upon the possibility of extending the economic territory the vanquished countries; the progress made in the industrialism of the colonies and protectorates, their political awakening, etc.

The necessity for a redistribution of the world is peremptorily demanded by the inequality of capitalist development, which under imperialism becomes not, as some believe, modified but aggravated, a fact which has been demonstrated in a particularly striking manner during the post-war period. Inequality of capitalist development under imperialism disturbs the economic balance of the whole globe, a balance which can only be restored by a violent redistribution of the world. The imperialist States with their highly developed powers of production are thirsting for "supplementary" extension, for the supplanting of their "fellows," and striving for a "just" division of the places in the sun. On the other hand, those countries, in which no means can be found of carrying out "stabilization" successfully and which threaten continually to sink into chronic stagnation, show an inclination to save themselves by winning new spheres of influence and exploiting them thoroughly. Finally, the vanquished countries, as their convalescence progresses, begin to feel the revival of their dormant instincts, of their imperialistic appetite; colonial ideology and thoughts of just "revenge" are cropping up.

Imperialism Breeds Wars.

In this manner the stimuli towards redistribution become more numerous and a new imperialist war becomes more likely. Imperialism without war is unthinkable; it is only through war that it can be restored. To do away with militarism without having destroyed imperialism would be as bad a beginning as to do away with the Pope while retaining Catholicism. Imperialism cannot exist for any length of time without war. On the other hand, every war that is waged by imperialist powers must of necessity be an imperialistic war, a predatory war.

It is also to be seen from the general sociological theses which Lenin took from Marx and developed, Politics are the "concentrated expression of economy" as Lenin said on several occasions. Imperialistic policy is consequently nothing but the "concentrated expression" of the economy of finance-capital. "War is merely the continuing of politics by other (violent) methods." This celebrated assertion of Clausevitz was taken up fully and completely by Lenin after Marx and Engels. From these two links "economy," "politics" and "war," it will be seen that the present-day war is the "continuation" of the policy of imperialism, in other words, it is thoroughly and completely the work of robbers and exploiters.

Puppets of Imperialism.

The disproportion between the hugely inflated military budget and the general level of economy is very pronounced in countries adjoining Russia, for instance, Poland and Roumania. The secret of their excessive arming is that they play the role of Fascist Mamelukes for the great imperialistic sharks, such as England. While they parade their military power, they behave themselves like lackeys dressed in their masters' clothes. Naturally, the masses of the people in these countries must bear the heavy burden of their governments' military zeal.

Lenin did not only take a naked formula from Clausevitz, Lenin backed it up with the richest concrete contents of the epoch. Lenin worked it with the theory of imperialism into a complete whole. In Lenin's hands it took on that satisfying, militant, revolutionary character and at the same time illuminated the way of the fighting proletariat with a beam of the brightest rays.

"Just Aims" a Myth.

It is one of Lenin's immortal achievements that he indicated of which policy the war of the modern "powers" is the "continuation." Lenin showed that only the regime of imperialist exploitation and nothing else can be "continued" with the imperialistic slaughter had not a class origin.

Lenin's Masterly Analysis.

Lenin's merit was that he proved why imperialism must inevitably lead to huge wars of destruction. He thereby exposed the nauseating talk of the preachers of pacifism who diverted the proletariat from the right path and who, like the "Paneuropa" gashag, Calergi, gave the assurance that imperialism could "get along" without war. That it must not of necessity have its logical "continuation." Lenin proved masterfully and irrefutably that it is possible to fight against war only if one fights for the revolution and under the banner of the proletariat and in no other way.

The whole of Lenin's doctrine concerning war was not exhausted in exposing the nature of imperialistic warfare and its showing its predatory character. Sundry remarks, indications and articles of Marx, the creator of scientific Socialism were transformed by Lenin into a harmonious whole, into a doctrine of the social-historic types of wars.

Special Types of War.

Wars, "the use of armed forces," occupations, "attacks," "defence," "irredentism" (the violent changing of State frontiers)—all these were experienced by humanity in the distant past, all these are ranged on the scroll of history, they are today being enacted and will be again in the future. From the standpoint of revolutionary Marxism, it would, however, be absolutely inadmissible and quite fruitless if we forgot the specific historic characteristics of every war, if we allowed their distinguishing and special features to be lost in the colorless "here" of war "in general" which takes the place outside of history and of class. The war which waged by Ghingis Khan is not the same as that carried on by Napoleon, the historical significance of Garibaldi's campaign is very different from the war operations of Marshal Foch; the Red Army fought a war which was altogether different from that fought by the armies of imperialism.

FARMERS

BIG BUSINESS IRKED BY BACKWARDNESS OF FARM PLANS WAYS TO MAKE FARMER INTO A SERF

By LELAND OLDS.
(Federated Press.)

Big business is tackling the problem of the balance between farm and factory under capitalist industrialism. It may succeed either in making agriculture a coordinate branch of capitalist industry or in subordinating the independent farmer to an intensified capitalist dictatorship.

Chief economist Virgil Jordan of the national (employer) industrial conference board, addressing the national fertilizer association, says:

Prosperity Looks Diversity.

"The agricultural situation today is not merely the result of the war. There is strong evidence that our agriculture has been increasingly lagging behind the rest of our economic life since the beginning of the century, which marked the beginning of our rapid industrial development.

"The prosperity of the past few years has not been so widely diffused as is sometimes imagined. Though the city worker and the city industries are profiting today by the cheap food they get at the farmers' expense, all economic experience shows that they cannot evade paying their board bill, though it may take another decade for the farmer to collect it.

Farm and Factory.

"In the long run the farm and the factory are mutually dependent and there can be no permanent prosperity for either at the expense of the other. From the point of view of the national economic welfare we need the maximum production of both groups. The great problem is how to prevent this maximum production, which is to the national advantage and to the advantage of the individual producer, from injuring the relative economic position of either the agricultural or industrial group as a whole."

This problem is insoluble in an economic order organized for the profit of a small but enormously wealthy minority rather than for the mutual interchange of the products of farm and factory workers.

"The time has come in the life of the American people," Jordan warns, "as it has come before in the history of all great nations, when we must deliberately and wisely formulate a national agricultural policy. We must make up our minds as a people whether we are going to continue to sacrifice our agricultural development to our temporary industrial growth, as we have been doing, or whether we are going to adopt the safer and wiser course of bringing our agricultural, industrial and commercial life into a well balanced and cooperative relationship."

Jordan sees this problem as a real test of democracy and in a sense he is right. The solution can be worked out only if American democracy is capable of extension into the newer field of economic government. Cooperation between farm and factory can be worked out under farmer-labor control of the economic forces of the nation. Otherwise these forces will be the playthings of great financial overlords now dreaming of world empire.

CO-OPERATIVES

Relations Between Agricultural and Consumers' Coöps

MOSCOW, (By Mail).—A report of the International Labor Office in Geneva to the preliminary committee of the World Economic Conference, gives some figures in regard to the extent of relations on an international scale of Agricultural and Consumers' Cooperatives.

The British Wholesale Society, as the most prominent importer among cooperatives, established already in 1881 in Denmark, a buying centre for dairy produce. Since then trade relations between the English Wholesale Society and the agricultural cooperative societies of Denmark have considerably developed. In 1925 the English Wholesale Society bought up 20 per cent of the entire Danish butter export. The English Wholesale Society buys dairy produce also from the dairy cooperatives of Finland amalgamated in the "Velio" Society. Similar relations exist with the Soviet cooperatives since 1922.

Up to 1925 these relations were kept up on the part of Soviet Russia by the Centrosoyus and since then by the Selskosoyus through the Masloscentro (Society of Soviet Russian Dairy Cooperatives). In 1925 the English Wholesale Society imported butter from the Soviet Union to the value of over 305,000 pounds before trade relations were broken. In 1921 the English Wholesale Society established with the dairy cooperatives of New Zealand a joint distributive organization which financed the distribution of New Zealand dairy produce in Great Britain. In 1924 imports from New Zealand amounted to over £950,000.

Danish Efforts.

The Society of Swiss Consumers' Cooperatives has also established relations with the Danish agricultural producers cooperatives. Last year it imported mainly butter from Denmark.

The Anglo-Russian Grain Export Company, was engaged in the Collection of Grain, before trade relations was broken. To this company belong on the Soviet Russian side, the Centrosoyuz, the Selskosoyuz and the Vsekobank. (All-Russian Cooperative Bank), and on the British side: the Wholesale Society and two private firms. Wheat export to Great Britain increased from 792,500 tons of this company between the Wholesale Society and the wheat-pools in Canada and Australia.

NEW CALIFORNIA PIONEERS

By NORMA BURSLER.

Bright flames of the Northern California Pioneers' camp fire on the stony shores of Russian River attract to it the visiting league members in time to join in "Hold the Fort." The blaze lights up the faces of the crowd of more than a score of adults and about 80 Pioneers of many nationalities: Russian, Jewish, Letish, Lithuanian, Finnish, American, Portuguese and Mexican.

From the group, a lad of about 6 years arises and says manfully: "A few years ago in Berkeley a group of Finnish children were organized to learn to read and to write Finnish. We didn't like this so well and Mother Bloor came along and organized us into a Young Pioneer Group." He also tells of the development into the present Berkeley Pioneer groups with approximately 40 members. Another Pioneer steps from the crowd and plays a harmonica solo and is followed by a girl from Fort Bragg who tells a similar story of development from a Finnish study group into a large Pioneer group with its varied activities.

Always Music.

Gone is the long ride through the hills and over the bridge spanning the Carquinez straits, the ride through the picturesque Sonoma Valley, the rattling Ford, and its burned out bearing. We league members listen.

A Pioneer takes his violin and the road strains of the Song of the Volga Boatmen, with the rushing waters of the Russian River and the leaping flames keeping time, bring to mind thoughts of far away Russia where both the workers and their children are free. Young Communists turn to gaze into the river and the reflection of the stars overhead and wonder if these waters will ever touch the shores of the country for which the river is named, carrying with it the Pioneers' feelings of solidarity.

Good Discipline.

One Pioneer tells of the camp and of the control commission which has decreed that there shall be no noise between 10 p. m. and 7 a. m., before which time Pioneers can be seen sitting quietly on the banks of the river fishing. The effectiveness of the control commission was demonstrated when some careless league members left watermelon rinds lying on the grass.

Around the fire, there is dancing, Finnish love songs, French songs, funny Chinese songs and poetry for the entertainment of those present.

Pioneer Director Florence Thompson tells of the work of the Pioneers and how the Northern California Subdistrict Committee of the Young Workers League will help in this work and build up and unify not only the Pioneers but the Young Workers League.

Astronomy.

The flames flare up brightly with the singing of the International after which Pioneers begin to creep away to their tents. As the flames down, some Pioneers remain to ask questions about the big dipper, the north star, and Venus which is hanging low in the heavens on the opposite side of the river.

In the morning the big baseball game between Berkeley and Fort Bragg ends with success for Berkeley. Pioneers from San Jose, Redwood City, San Francisco, Oakland and Petaluma, together with others from Berkeley and Fort Bragg cheer their favorites.

Current Events

By T. J. O'Flaherty.

THE revolt of the Austrian workers was trushed by the social democrats who stepped in to do what the armed forces of the bourgeois were incapable of doing. Our prediction that the socialists would do this very thing has been fully borne out tho this is one of those successful predictions that we take no pleasure in boasting about. Apparently the demonstration was permitted to take place by the socialists as a means of providing mass discontent with a safety valve and also to give a demonstration of socialist strength to the Seipel government with which the socialists were bargaining for cabinet positions.

THE Austrian socialists are considered farther to the left than the social socialists of any other country. But this radicalism is spurious as was demonstrated in 1918 and in the present revolt. Owing to the extreme poverty of the masses there is a strong revolutionary sentiment among them and to this feeling the socialist leaders cater. All the news dispatches from Europe about the Vienna explosion represented the socialists as the defenders of "order" which meant that they were bent on crushing the revolution.

In probability the Austrian government, a creature of the league of nations will now carry on a crusade against the small and weak Communist Party. The prosecutors and executioners will be the socialists. But the events of the past few days cannot fail to have a favorable reaction for the revolutionary elements. The socialist leaders have shown themselves in their true colors. The workers can see no difference between the shooting ordered by the socialist mayor and the capitalist chancellor Seipel.

THAT the Hankow or Wuhan government in Chicago is travelling the same road followed by Chiang Kai-shek is becoming clearer day by day. Chinese dispatches indicate that the policy of suppressing the trade unions and murdering the most militant of the leaders of the workers and peasants is about to be inaugurated. This is unpleasant news but not surprising.

THE newly-awakened masses of China are not yet sufficiently organized or experienced in leadership to provide this mighty revolution with the proper leadership and the necessary discipline. Outside of the assistance rendered to them by citizens of the U. S. S. R. and the Communist International they were poor in leaders. The national revolution was led and officered mainly by intellectuals, members of the petty bourgeois classes and professional soldiers. Those elements used the revolutionists as long as they found them useful for their aims, but when the development of the revolution threw a picture of a worker and peasants government on the political screen, the bourgeois leaders took fright and with the aid of the foreign imperialists, took steps to block such a development.

FOR the moment the fortunes of the Chinese revolution are at a very low ebb. But there will be a recovery and the lessons learned by the workers and peasants during this phase of the struggle will be invaluable in the next. In the main only the workers and peasants are capable of putting up a fight against imperialism. The bourgeoisie love their country less than they love their class interests. They would prefer to serve as taxmasters for foreign imperialism than citizens in a free proletarian state.

JAMES CONNOLLY the great Irish revolutionist frequently quoted the phrase: "The rich always betray the poor." In his masterly work, "Labor In Irish History," he points out that the Irish struggle for freedom from British rule was always betrayed by the upper, and middle classes at every critical period. They repeated their betrayal in the latest Irish revolution five years after Connolly gave his life for it. The Chinese "patriots" have done the same thing.

THE Upholsterers' International Union is holding a convention in this city and one of its most important achievements will be the presentation of a chair to governor Alfred E. Smith. SOCIALIST SURRENDER ENDS VIENNA STRIKE

SACCO-VANZETTI PROTEST HUNGER STRIKE GOES ON

Rather Starve Than Be Killed by Perjury

Death by starvation rather than electrocution as a result of framed up evidence which is being submitted to Gov. Fuller and his advisory committee, is the choice which Sacco and Vanzetti have made.

This heroic protest is being made by the two condemned workers because of the star chamber attitude which Fuller has taken by insisting that the hearings on prejudice be held in secret.

Reports that the workers were not on a hunger strike but were abstaining from food due to the excessive heat was branded as a lie by the Sacco-Vanzetti Defense Committee yesterday. Members of the committee stated that the hunger strike was a grim reality and that William G. Thompson, counsel for the condemned men, spent three hours on Sunday trying to dissuade the men from continuing with their plan. This they refused to do.

Condition Desperate.

For more than a month Gov. Fuller and his so-called advisory committee have been "deliberating" on the respective merits of the case. In spite of the fact that eminent jurists from all parts of the world have expressed opinions that the case was an obvious frame up, the Fuller "investigation" has slowly dragged along. It is a well-known fact in Boston that Gov. Fuller is prejudiced against the workers and the fact that Sacco and Vanzetti have decided upon the drastic step of a hunger strike is evidence of the desperate condition in which he matter stands.

Warden William Hendry of the Charlestown Prison insists that the men are not ont on a hunger strike, but this denial is part of the prison regulations and is not being taken seriously.

Prefer To Die.

The Sacco-Vanzetti Defense Committee in a statement made public yesterday said that the men prefer to die "by starvation rather than be killed on false evidence introduced in Gov. Fuller's office behind closed doors."

The report continued, "It is a solemn decision to make—this slow taking on one's life—but it is necessary in this tragic situation where the fate of two men is being shaped behind closed doors from the words of witnesses whom neither they nor their counsel are allowed to face."

The condemned workers started their strike Saturday when Vanzetti declared that he would rather starve to death rather than be killed on false evidence.

The Cry from Vienna is "Forward"

Yesterday it was the Chinese workers who issued their clarion call to the world proletariat against the forces of imperialism. Today it is the workers of Vienna, who smashing through the counter-revolutionary web of the socialist and Second International machine, have shown the way to battle against the forces of world imperialism. The heroism and self-sacrifice of the Viennese proletariat, defying alike machine gun bullets of the police and the deceptive words of the socialist traitors, brings us a message, that we cannot overlook, or forget. It brings us a call for a new forward charge against the forces of international capitalism.

The attack upon The DAILY WORKER, now in the hands of the Federal government, has behind it the same forces which are today responsible for shooting down hundreds of workers in the streets of Vienna. The profiteers, the war mongers, the open shoppers, the treacherous trade union bureaucracy and the socialist party, all are allied in one black united front against the revolutionary workers led by the Communists.

We must hold our own in this battle just as bravely as the Viennese workers. We must meet the attack upon The DAILY WORKER with barricades of contributions piled up in defense of our proletarian fortress, The DAILY WORKER. We have mailed out the certificates for the GUARD THE DAILY WORKER FUND. The self-sacrifice and devotion which show in the present attack upon our movement, will show quite clearly, whether you will stand the test, when greater sacrifices are demanded.

SOCIALIST LEADERS IN CONSTANT CONFERENCE WITH SEIPEL CABINET

Bauer, Adler, Seitz, Demand Labor Surrender; Create Militia to Shoot Workers

BULLETIN.

VIENNA, July 18.—The Austrian transportation strike was settled tonight. As a result of the agreement reached between the socialist officials and Chancellor Seipel's national conservative government, railroad, telephone and telegraph services will be resumed at midnight tonight, if the workers agree to the surrender of their interests by socialist leaders.

VIENNA, July 18.—There is still enthusiasm for revolt, part of the workers of this city are still armed, new contingents arrive from the surrounding districts continually, and parts of Vienna are still so much under labor control that the brutal Seipel police dare not attempt to penetrate them. The working class has had a taste of power, it is suspecting the motives of its yellow socialist leaders, and if the deadening influence of the latter could be thrown off, might still be able to seize control of the government.

But the Seipel cabinet is attempting to soothe the workers by a series of vague promises, and the social democratic leaders particularly Burgomeister Seitz, Fritz Adler and Otto Bauer, are exerting every particle of their enormous party machine in the effort to prevent revolution.

Socialist Militia and Police.

At present one of the points at issue between the government of the state and the burgomeister of Vienna (a socialist) is whether the demonstrating workers shall be shot down by regular troops, or by the "municipal guards," a newly organized body of militia, made up of members of the socialist guards, and hired mercenaries. The burgomeister, Seitz, insists that this newly armed force is necessary to prevent revolution, while the government ministatry prefers to rely on the regular army.

Burgomeister Seitz has announced that his municipal guards will work in close co-operation with the city police who fired on and killed about forty and wounded about three hundred of the workers during the height of the fighting. The police were finally defeated with unknown losses, and driven into hiding, but Seitz has brought them out under the protection of his guards.

The socialist leaders hesitated, despite pressure from the clerical government with whom they are in constant secret conference, to advise the workers to end their strike until at least something is won. Economic conditions have been going from bad to worse, and tho the workers during their sudden uprising burned the home of the Tscharmak family in Schattendorf, and thus punished Fascist members of that family who were acquitted in a mock trial by Vienna courts of murdering workers, no actual punishment or even disbanding of fascist units has either been undertaken or promised by Seipel.

Strike Goes On.

The socialist democratic labor leaders and politicians, while forced at first to continue the strike, frantically endeavored to make it as harmless as possible. Hour by hour

Report Fieck, German Communist, Arrived in Vienna from Berlin

News dispatches from Vienna state that Wilhelm Fieck, Communist member of the Prussian landtag, has arrived in the Austrian capital from Berlin, using an airship. This would indicate that the powerful German Communist Party is cooperating with the Austrian Communist Party in its present struggle against the latest betrayal of the working class of Austria by the socialist party leadership of Seitz and Bauer.

Fieck is one of the most prominent comrades in the German Communist Party. It will be remembered that he headed the committee of German party comrades who received the ashes of Comrade C. E. Ruthenberg on their arrival in Berlin and conducted them to the home of German Party—Karl Liebnecht House—where they remained under honor guard while in the city. Fieck also spoke at the Lehrter Bahnhof at the big demonstration that took place at the railroad station on the departure of J. Louis Engdahl, editor of The DAILY WORKER, when he left Berlin taking the ashes to Moscow.

SUPPRESSION OF LABOR MOVEMENT THRUOUT CHINA

Raid Soviet Bank in Shanghai

SHANGHAI, July 18.—The systematic suppression of Communists, labor leaders and the labor movement is proceeding unabated as the mercenaries of the imperialists in the forces of Chiang Kai-shek carry out the orders of their pay masters. The latest assassination of a prominent Chinese trade union leader occurred yesterday when Wang Tei-lang was executed in Nanking. He was arrested in the territory of the French concession in Shanghai by French police, turned over to the Chinese soldiery, taken to Nanking and executed on personal orders of Chiang Kai-shek.

Raid Soviet Bank.

At the same time the terror is being carried out against the labor unions the provocation against the Soviet Union is also going on with increased intensity. The premises of the Shanghai office of the Far Eastern Bank in the territory of the French concessions was invaded and

Pan-American Federation Starts Its Sessions

WASHINGTON, July 18.—With President Green of the American Federation of Labor in the Chair to oppose any radicalism, the Pan American Federation of Labor began its fifth congress today.

President Green in his address stated that the policy of American labor was specifically against imperialist adventures by American capital.

Consider War On Mexico.

Louis N. Merones, Minister of Commerce and Industry in the Mexican government, responded to Green's address and declared "if the time ever comes when there is a rupture in Mexican-American relations I am sure there will be no break between the working classes of the two countries."

THRONGS RESPOND TO COMMUNIST CALL FOR WAR AGAINST NEW WAR

CLEVELAND, Ohio (By Mail).—One of the largest gatherings ever assembled at the call of the Workers (Communist) Party here joined in the demonstration in the Public Square against "The War Danger." The speakers were J. Louis Engdahl, editor of The DAILY WORKER, and Israel Amter, district organizer of the Party.

It was in this Public Square, that boasts a free speech monument dedicated to Tom Johnson, former liberal mayor of the city, that armored tanks and tear gas were first used to break up a May Day Demonstration in this country. This occurred on May 1, 1919.

Engdahl outlined in his talk the careful development by the imperialist powers of "The New War" against the Soviet Union.

Engdahl showed that the war against the Soviet Union in 1919-20 had failed, the food blockade had failed, the effort at capitalist economic penetration of the Soviet Union had failed, the financial blockade had failed, and now the vicious circle of the capitalist onslaught had returned to a new military attack.

"The workers of America must develop, by all possible means, their strength to resist this new war," said Engdahl, "for an attack on the First Workers' Republic is equally an attack on the American working class."

There was an inspiring response to the plea of Organizer Amter that workers join in the Ruthenberg Drive now being conducted by the Workers (Communist) Party to win new members for the Party and an increasing support for the Party press.

Recently a big demonstration against the legalized murder of Sacco and Vanzetti was held in the Public Square here.

Palestine Earthquake Death List Shows 200

LONDON, July 18.—Two hundred persons were killed, 356 injured seriously and 375 injured slightly in last week's earthquake in Palestine according to an official report today to Colonial Secretary Amery. One thousand houses were seriously damaged. In Transjordania there were 68 killed and 102 injured.

Military Maneuvers on October Field Explain New Tactics on Defense

MOSCOW, July 18.—The culminating point of Defence Week was an enormous mass demonstration of labor on October Field, at which an experiment in mass military mobilization and maneuvers was successfully carried out amidst the cheers of hundreds of thousands of spectators. All this took place with great enthusiasm, in spite of the bad weather. The speakers were Yenukidze, Voroshiloff and Bukharin.

8 Workers Asphyxiated Under River While at Work Building Tunnel

LONG ISLAND CITY, July 18.—Fumes from a donkey engine employed for hoisting at the bottom of a fifty foot shaft at the foot of Nott avenue, part of the construction of the new Fifty-third street subway, today asphyxiated eight workers, members of a gang working in the shaft and in the preliminary tunnel under the river. A number of other workers were affected.

Four of the man were taken to St. John City, suffering from carbon monoxide gas poisoning. They were Carmine Tinallio, Harold Moslem, Edward Whitney and James Holcomb, all of Manhattan.

Ohio Miners Faced With Double Fight In Mines and Union

COLUMBUS, O., July 18.—According to Ohio Coal Operators Association, which has met in Columbus, the mines of Ohio will be opened soon. "We are not hoodwinking ourselves, we have a long, hard fight ahead," said the head of one of the coal companies. This statement is true, despite the fact that voices are to be heard among the miners or their officials that do not bespeak a good future for the miners.

Some time ago, Searles, mine official in the Hocking Valley, proposed to break away from the United Mine Workers, and to form a new union. He got the support of only a few men, and the idea evidently was abandoned.

In spite of the fact that some of the miners' officials offered to meet the coal operators, to "come to an understanding" as to the wage scale, the operators have refused to meet them. The operators were encouraged by Carl Daugherty, sub-district president in the Hocking Valley, who talked about fight, and demanded a national strike, but at the same time, offered to confer with the operators provided they did not insist upon a wage scale of $5 to replace the $7.50 according to the Jacksonville agreement.

The operators have turned down the

NAVAL BASES UP FOR DISCUSSION AT CONFERENCE

Japan, Britain Reach Compromise

GENEVA, July 18.—The United States delegation to the tri-partite naval conference will present counter-proposals to the Anglo-Japanese suggestions for an agreement as put forth yesterday upon the basis of 300,000 tonnage basis for both the United States and Japan. This basis is objectionable to the United States and in 100,000 tons higher than its counter-proposal of a week ago or 200,000 tons higher than its original proposals.

Hugh S. Gibson will bring up as counter-proposals the question of naval bases which is a direct blow at Great Britain. The question of cruiser tonnage is intimately connected with the question of naval bases. Great Britain has a string of bases throughout the world so close together that ships much lighter than the ones used by the United States can be effectively utilized for her navy. Britain has proposed that cruiser tonnage be reduced to 7,500. With such cruisers she can traverse the seven seas, whereas the United States would find her light cruisers crippled and unable to proceed to the Far East because of the great distance between naval bases. Hence to raise the question of naval bases is an attempt to place Britain in a defensive position in the conference.

Britain and Japan Agree.

On the other hand the agreement between Britain and Japan on total is to share jointly with Britain the exploitation of China, while the United States will use its immense power to reduce, in the course of a few years, even Japan to the position of a vassal state.

The agreement between Britain and Japan has unquestionably placed the United States in a sorry predicament as far as the conference is concerned, because Hugh Gibson stated that any agreement or compromise reached by the two powers would be satisfactory to the United States. That utterance was made when any sort of agreement seemed hopeless. Now Gibson's bluff has been called and he is striving to save his face.

"Red Rain" in Holland East Indies; Fear the Independence Movement

BATAVIA, Dutch East Indies, July 18.—Dutch imperialist officials here have announced a new Communist plot to subjugate the islands of Holland, and have started a series of arrests of dissatisfied native leaders and officers of trade unions.

Exploitation of the native proletariat and peasantry in these islands is very severe, and the repression of the native petty bourgeoisie makes it somewhat of an ally of the workers. A deep seated independence movement is on foot, in which the Communist Party plays an important role. The Dutch officials make periodic raids on working class centers, and conduct a perpetual "Red Scare."

HYLAN DENOUNCES SMITH-UNTERMYER FARE BOOST DEAL

Wall St. to Back Smith If He Comes Across

"While it is of possibility that the Morgan interests will let go of "Al" Smith in 1928, in favor of the Republican candidate, at the meantime they are using Smith all they can to get a fare boost through his Transit Commission." So spoke former Mayor John F. Hylan in an exclusive interview given yesterday to a Daily Worker reporter.

"If Smith wants the democratic nomination in 1928 he will have to satisfy Morgan and Company who represent the majority bondholders of the I. R. T."

"Untermyer is in sympathy with the traction bondholders, and in particular with the majority bondholders of the Interboro. In that respect he is lined up with the Smith-Morgan crowd," said Hylan in reply to a question.

"Then you think that Untermyer is a Smith man," he was asked.

"Yes—Untermyer is an Untermyer man".

"What is your opinion of the so-called unification plan which is being so ardently advocated by Untermyer?" he was asked.

"This unification fallacy," he replied," is only a smoke screen to take the place of additional service. It is part of a scheme to boodwink the New York straphangers so that they will not see the major move, which is to fix an exorbitant value for the worn out old junk which the traction interests call rolling stock. When the traction attorneys have fixed what they call a 'fair valuation,' the stage will all be set for an increased fare."

Smith Used Lindbergh Plan.

At this point the former mayor pointed out that it is part of the Smith policy thru his so-called public service commission to boost fares whenever possible. He pointed out that during the Lindbergh reception the Smith traction crowd up-state took advantage of the public hysteria to put over a ten-cent fare in Albany, Troy, Watervliet, Schenectady, Cohoes and Buffalo. This possibly explains Governor Smith's warm reception to Lindbergh. Smith awarded the trans-Atlantic flyer the medal of honor—a cheap price at that.

When asked about the $25,000 fee which Untermyer received from the I. R. T., Hylan said, "The firm of Guggenheimer, Untermyer and Marshall was attorney for a stool-pigeon to prohibit the city from appropriating the necessary money to put busses on the streets of New York to relieve the congested condition in the subways. This firm got the injunction but did not dare to enforce it. The firm of Hays, Hershfield and Wolf afterwards sent in a bill to the city for $63,128.62 which included $25,000, which was the Untermyer share in the deal. Now the Hayes firm was an antagonistic firm to both Marshall and Untermyer took the money and under the dual contracts the city footed the bill. As those contracts run for forty-two years, at the expiration of that time the taxpayers will have paid in interest and compound interest over $200,000."

When asked what the solution was for the overcrowded subway conditions, Hylan replied, "The only remedy for the transit condition is to put on more trains and more cars. Let the workers demand a municipal bus system in every borough of the city. Let the city continue to build more subways."

offer, and are making preparations to open the mines. They admit that the work will proceed slowly, but they expect little trouble. They are being aided by another section of the miners' union, according to report. James Kunik, leader of a so-called insurgent group in the Bellaire district, is ready to support Daugherty, and to make a compromise. This shows that treachery is being practiced in the miners' union. It is clear that if Lewis does nothing—but lets the situation slide, such men as Daugherty and Kunik will find a ready ear among the miners.

Relief for tre miners must be organised. If they know that the labor movement will stand behind them, they will be exposed to no temptation at the hands of the coal operators. But if they are allowed to starve, then there is no doubt that they will be brought to their knees. It is the duty of the labor movement to get behind the striking miners—and to do it quickly. Otherwise the siren voices of the Daugherty and Kunik will lure the miners—to their destruction.

Whether the coal operators are bluffing or mean earnest will be disclosed tomorrow. Lee Hall and G. W. Savage, district officials, are now in Bellaire, where they expect the first attempt to be made.

pillaged on Saturday nanking is closed by French police and Kuomintang guard officers assisted by a detachment of municipal police. The joint occupation under the joint protection of the French and the Nanking bandits of Chiang Kai-shek. The search did not yield any evidence for the counter-revolutionaries and consequently the demand of the Soviet Union, so the police came back at night and it is likely that they brought with them forged documents in the assortment of the Soviet Consulate, which is the first evidence against the officials of the bank. After sealing the premises and arresting the Soviet citizens, Stoyanovitch and Golkowsky at the demand of the Nanking despot, Yang-hu, a general known for his bloody reprisals at Nangpo, Shanghai and other places a statement was issued to the effect that evidence was found proving that the arrested men were engaged in Bolshevist propaganda.

The prisoners were handed over to a special military tribunal, noted for its summary dealings with Communists. Kosiovsky, general counsel of the Union of Socialistic Soviet Republics at Shanghai, insisted that the military authorities have no right arbitrarily to arrest Soviet citizens and hand them over to special extraordinary courts. Kosiovsky demanded a trial in civil courts and his demand was satisfied and she prisoners handed over to the civil authorities.

White Guard Provocation.

The illegal search and seizure and arrests are the result of the agitation carried on by the imperialist bribed white guard press that is indulging in the most disgraceful provocation against the workers and peasants of China and the Soviet Union and is part of the general imperialist conspiracy against the Chinese revolution and the Soviet Union.

Wuhan Politicai Crisis.

HANKOW, July 18.—There is a protracted political crisis in the Wuhan government that is slowly approaching a solution. Many observers expected the final solution of the crisis which was being carried out during the last few weeks. However, the final achievement of the coup against the Communists has evidently been postponed for a time.

M. Borodin, advisor to the Nationalist government, left Saturday for Kuling, a well-known mountain resort near Kiu-Kiang. His departure is being explained in various ways. Some see in it Borodin's disagreement with internal policy recently pursued by the Wuhan government. Others explain Borodin's departure as consent of the Wuhan government to demands of Feng, the so-called Christian general who has gone over to the counter-revolution, that Borodin be granted leave of absence.

Apparently the majority of the Wuhan government has definitely decided to "separate themselves" from Communists. It is reported that the members of the Central Committee at Wuhan actually passed resolution regarding the removal of Communists from all posts in the executive committee of the government, the executive of the leading organs of the Kuomintang and the army and to deprive them of membership in the Kuomintang.

The scoundrels and agents of Chiang Kai-shek, the traitor and of Feng, in the service of the counter-revolution who are in a majority in the Wuhan government are afraid of the wrath of the members of the Kuomintang so they assert that these measures against the vanguard of the revolution, the Communists, are only temporary, pending the final solution of the question at the third congress of the Kuomintang.

It is proposed to carry through these counter-revolutionary resolutions at the next session of the central committee which is scheduled to meet today or tomorrow.

Today the political committee of the Kuomintang adopted the following resolution: 1.—To within a month's time call plenary session of the Central Committee, to discuss and decide questions submitted by presidium of the political bureau. 2.—Pending convocation plenary session the Central Committee to prohibit actions and speeches contrary to the principles and policy of the Kuomintang. 3.—To send to the Soviet Union a delegation to be appointed by political committee of prominent members of the Kuomintang to discuss methods of cooperation.

Try to Deceive Masses.

These measures are considered highly deceptive and a mere smokescreen raised so that the fury of the masses at the counter-revolutionary acts of the Wuhan government will not overwhelm them.

So strong is the respect for the Communists and the admiration for the determined anti-imperialist stand of the Soviet Union that the reactionaries are not immediately break with all the traditions of the past and go openly over into the camp of the enemies of the national liberation movement.

The mass demand for action against Nanking is constantly rising higher and threatens to engulf the Wuhan reactionaries so they have to proceed with the greatest caution in their assaults upon the Communists.

SECRETLY DEPORT CHINESE SEAMEN BY HOLLAND LINE

Company Liable to Pay Heavy Fine

(Federated Press.)

As it seemed that a habeas corpus writ was about to free the 38 Chinese seamen strikers illegally detained on Ellis Island, were dumped into the hold of a Holland-American liner bound for Rotterdam. Sixteen had already been deported.

To save the men from a frame-up on possible mutiny charges the Chinese Seamen's Institute, through its attorney Hugo Pollock, is cabling Edo Fimmen, secretary of the International Federation of Workers' Federation, setting forth the facts here and asking him to investigate the employment methods of the steamship company.

United States Senator Copeland and Silas Blake Axtell, attorney for the International Seamen's Union, were among the persons who had been interesting themselves in the case of these oriental workers since they were beaten and jailed by the Hoboken police as they were leaving the S. S. Rotterdam.

Had Right to Quit.

Axtell, a well-known authority on murine law, said the Chinese had the right to quit the ship. "The Seamen's Act," he explained in a letter to Pollock, "maintains that all seamen, including Chinese and Hindoos, may demand half their wages and leave foreign or American ships for the purpose of reshipment." The purpose of this provision of the LaFollette act, continued the attorney, is to equalize costs of operation, by compelling foreign shipowners to replace crews at American rates of wages.

Fifteen dollars a month was all the Chinese were getting in the "black gang" of the Rotterdam. The Dutch strikers, whose place they were taking, had been paid $38 a month. When the Chinese found they had been tricked into being strikebreakers they decided to quit, and carried out the plan in Hoboken.

Company Is Liable.

Each of the guilty parties responsible for the imprisoning of the Chinese will now be under fire by their friends here. First there is the Holland-American line, that is subject to a fine of $1000 by the immigration bureau for each of the 30 Chinese sailors of the original 84 who have not turned up. Thirty times $1000 is $30,000, a pretty penny for the erring steamship company to pay and one that it will try to evade paying when the 60 day limit expires. Attorney Axtell says that in practice, he does not believe that the steamship companies ever pay these fines. But an effort will be made to compel the Bureau of Immigration to stick to its rule.

Punished on Island.

Then there is punishment due to the immigration authorities who held the Chinese on Ellis Island, without charges. The seamen were taken off the hands of the Hoboken police and held prisoners on the island as "an accomodation" to the company. Secretary Davis of the Department of Labor has written LaGuardia, promising to investigate the affair.

Every obstacle possible had been placed in the way of Attorney Pollock when he was working for the men's release. Assistant Commissioner Uhl on Ellis Island refused to let him see the Chinese, because it might "start a riot" and because it was said he did not have the names of any of his clients. When Pollock produced a name the authorities denied the man was there.

Fight Dangerous Death Traps at Rail Crossings

NIAGARA FALLS, July 18.—The local section of the Workers (Communist) Party is arranging a huge protest meeting at which demands will be made for the elimination of dangerous railroad crossings in the working-class sections of this city.

The recent tragedy in which the family of Samuel Pawloff an active member of the Workers (Communist) Party and of the Plumbers Union was wiped out at an unguarded crossing in the heart of the workers residential section, has aroused the workers of this city and forced even the City Council to make a gesture of protest.

Thousands of workers among whom the luckless family had been sacrificed even as are thousands of other workers throughout the country in the interests of greedy corporations who care nothing for the lives of workers.

Nicaragua Delegate in Washington Defies U.S.

clash between the marines and the liberal forces of Gen. Sandino in which press reports indicate 50 Nicaraguans were killed and several hundred wounded.

"Speaking as a delegate from Nicaragua, and in behalf of the Nicaraguan Federation of Labor," declared De La Selva, "I want to say that if the United States marines do not depart from our country, they will have to destroy ultimately the entire population."

Council Reports.

Borno Stops Haitians.

The Haitian delegation to the Pan-American Labor Conference were arrested yesterday as they sought to leave the country, according to a cable-gram read at the Conference today.

The delegation consisted of labor leaders and seven Haitian editors, and their arrest was ordered by President Borno, who declined to let them leave the country.

Borno refused recently to admit Senator King (D), of Utah, to the country. The labor delegation comprised the same elements that had invited King to the country, it was said.

The executive council rendered a report on conditions of labor in Latin America, which it believes to be improving. There is mention of the part of labor in the Mexican oil crisis, the invasion of Nicaragua by the United States, the fight against labor by the governments of Cuba, Venezuela, and Colombia. No solutions are offered. The congress will try to decide on an immigration policy to recommend to the government in regard to Mexican workers crossing into the United States.

The officers of the congress are: William Green, President; Luis N. Moronex, Vice President; Matthew Woll, Treasurer; Chester M. Wright, English Language Secretary; Santiago Iglesias, Spanish Language Secretary.

MARINES BOMB NICARAGUANS; KILL OVER 50

Hurl Explosives Into Unarmed Populace

MANAGUA, Nicaragua, July 18.—In a desperate effort to smash the rebellious masses who deeply resent the imperialist bombing of their country by the United States, a force of American marines, aided by the mercenary Nicaraguan constabulary, murdered more than 50 Nicaraguans and wounded more than 400. The attack was made upon the forces of General Sandino at Ocotal, who refused to disperse his forces in conformity with the ultimatum of Henry L. Stimson, the Wall Street lackey who was sent here a few months ago to aid in consolidating the fraudulent government of Diaz, who is sworn to defend the interests of American imperialism against the desires of the masses for independence.

Bombed From Air.

The marines and the Nicaraguan constabulary did very little fighting as they are too cowardly to enter into equal combat with the natives, but stood at a safe distance while five marine airplanes dropped high explosives on the liberal forces and the population of Ocotal. Undoubtedly many women and children and non-combatants were murdered, but the rigid censorship prevents any newspaper men entering the devastated area.

Part of U. S. Campaign.

This latest unprovoked and craven massacre is a part of the general campaign being waged against Nicaragua by the gun-men of Wall Street who are trying to disarm the whole population in order to be able to establish firmly the rule of the Wall Street puppet president, Diaz, who could not get one-hundreth part of the votes of the inhabitants of the country in a fair election.

The bestiality of the American troops in this part of the world is such that the very name and every symbol or emblem of the United States is despised as representing nothing but unbridled tyranny.

Big Navy Men Take Heart From Big Fiasco At Geneva Naval Meet

WASHINGTON, July 18, (FP).—Congressman Loring Black of New York, a leader of the big navy forces, declares congress will approriate funds in the coming session to bring American naval strength up to the British.

"If there is no real disarmament at Geneva," he asserts, "we big navy men will undoubtedly develop a greater voting strength in the house for a cruiser and submarine construction program. We will appropriate enough money to complete construction of the authorized cruisers, and the naval affairs committee will undoubtedly come in with a bill authorizing not only 10 cruisers, as was proposed at the last session, but a number sufficient to meet the British strength."

Coolidge Board Hands Slam to Women Workers in Bureau of Print'g

WASHINGTON, July 18, (FP).—Calvin Coolidge's personnel classification board, which adjusts wages and conditions of government workers, talks like an open shopper. Curtly refusing the appeal of the women's union of the bureau of printing and engraving for equal pay with men for equal work, the board declares it will deal "directly with the employes," and not with "outsiders." The women have been organized for years in Local 105 of the National Federation of Federal Employes.

President Luther Steward of the National Federation declares that the board's decision is a blow to the right of collective bargaining. The union, he says, will appeal to congress to wipe out the board and set up administrative machinery free from control by Coolidge.

Hartford to Have Field Day and Picnic for Political Action Conference

HARTFORD, July 18.—The Connecticut conference for Independent Political Action embracing many unions and workers organizations throughout the state, have arranged the second annual State Labor Field Day and Picnic in Schutzen Park, Hartford, on Sunday July 31st for the purpose of advancing the idea of Independent Workers Political Action as the first step to a "United Labor Ticket" in the presidential elections of 1928.

William Z. Foster, leader of the Great Steel Strike, and Albert Weisbord, leader of the Passaic Textile Strike will be the chief speakers, besides speakers in Lithuanian, Swedish, Russian and from the Young Workers League.

The arrangements committee headed by Dr. Per Nelson of Hartford announces that 12 Swedish Athletic clubs will participate in the games. A chorus of 150 voices will sing revolutionary and Folk songs. A good band will provide music for dancing. Refreshments and good food will be available for all.

The workers of New Haven, Bridgeport, Stamford, Waterbury, Ansonia and the cities around Hartford are arranging to hire busses, and machine cars to come out in mass. Thousands of workers are expected to make this Picnic a tremendous demonstration for Independent Working Class Political Action.

Socialist Compromising Betrays Vienna Strike

they ordered back to work employes in various industries, until finally almost all that work left out were the railway, postal, telephone and telegraph workers. Even partial service was allowed by the socialists in these industries, and nothing like parades or demonstrations are allowed.

No Public Funeral.

The objects of the strike are consistently stated by socialist leaders to be merely pressure on the cabinet for reforms, and not revolution. Thus when representatives of socialist trade unions met in Vienna and first decided to recognize the transport strike, Otto Bauer, addressing the meeting, declared, "the strike must be continued in order to cure the reactionaries of the illusion that they can misuse their power."

This meeting decided to hold the funerals of the worker victims on Wednesday, at 2 o'clock and to bury all in a single grave at the expense of the city. Only relatives and party officials will be permitted to attend. A memorial will be erected over the common grave. All work will be suspended during the hour of the funerals.

The Seipel cabinet has issued a communique in which it states that it has ten thousand troops from the provinces in the outskirts of the city, and threatens workers with unemployment, hunger, and perhaps a general lockout if they do not yield to authority. In return for submission, and only if there is no more strike, the government signifies its willingness to call parliament into session, and if after "debate without pressure from labor unions" the parliamentary majority for Seipel decides on a coalition cabinet with the socialists, there will be such a coalition. The communique contains many such phrases as "reorganization of the government in due time," etc.

The socialist leaders and the Seipel cabinet unite in urging the workers to maintain order and submit to government rule, and both have issued statements blaming the Communists for starting all the trouble. Only the Seipel statement says that "some of the socialists also implicated."

American Exploiters Cringe.

BERLIN, July 18.—American visitors, who had descended in pursuit of Austria like harpies during the post-war period, to enjoy the cheap living, the liquor, music and art, and the pleasure of boasting around underpaid servants were panic stricken when the fighting began, say refugees from the foreign colony, who have arrived here.

George Sylvester Viereck, formerly a pro-German paper in the U. S. during the first years of the world war, has arrived here by automobile and says of those he left behind in Vienna:

"Americans in the Hotel Bristol resembled birds before a storm, we were told not to show ourselves before the windows on account of the danger of being shot. We had to stay in the hotel both day and night. Several Americans ventured forth but rushed back in a state of panic at each fresh outburst of shooting."

"At the American embassy we were received politely, but we got no help. Minister Washburn said if the situation became worse he would hire Danube steamers and transport all Americans from Vienna."

Vienna "Department of Justice" Building

This building housed the much hated courts and records by which workers were oppressed. When they rose in their might for a few hours, they captured and burned it.

FACTORY CONSUMERS' COOPERATIVES AS A RESERVE OF PRIVATE TRADE OF GERMANY

In view of the present efforts of the German bourgeoisie to bring into being factory fascism, factory cooperatives assume a special role. Employers are again paying increased attention to the development also of this instrument of attack on the class organizations of the proletariat. In order to win the support of broad circles of society for factory consumers' co-operatives, big industrialists do not scruple to speak openly and brutally about the aim of these institutions.

Thus, the mining assessor von Loewenstein declared at the meeting of the mine owners of the Ruhr district that the development of the "Socialist and Christian Socialist consumers' co-operatives constituted a peril with which middle class commercial circles have not yet been able to cope. The consumers' co-operative movement constitutes a mighty secret force of the entire Socialist system."

"As there is the risk of the historical trade organs being greatly impaired in the process of revolutionary reorganization, it would be more correct for the trade circles interested to abstain from opposing factory institutions which are beginning — and justly so — to be considered as an important link of the private economy and which are after all only a safeguard for the capable and financially sound private trader."

There is every occasion for the proletarian consumers' co-operative movement to propagate these arguments as widely as possible. They show clearly that the aim of factory consumers' co-operatives, is not, as it is alleged, to make workers' conditions of life easier, but that they are on the contrary important organs of capitalism for the upkeep of the capitalist system of exploitation in general.

ON THE EVE OF THE GENERAL MEETING OF THE UNION DES COOPERATEURS OF FRANCE

In July general meetings will be held of the sections and also the delegation meeting of the biggest Paris co-operative "Union des Cooperateurs" which embraces 80,000 members and about 150 sections. The co-operative circles of the "Union des Co-operateurs" are doing energetic preliminary work for these meetings. On April 24 there was a session of the Central Committee of co-operative circles with the circle secretaries of the individual sections. The agenda included: preparatory election meetings of circle members and meetings of individual sections of the "Union des Co-operateurs."

The platform of the co-operative circles is laid down in a special declaration dealing with questions of reformist policy, of drawing workers into the leading organs, struggle against taxes, unemployment and war perils. The organ of the National Federation of Revolutionary Co-operative Circles "Le Co-operateur" published a special number with full instructions for the conduct of the campaign.

The Rosa Luxemburg Brigade

The Women's Brigade, named after their outstanding leader, is one of the prize divisions of the Daily Worker Army.

Under the yoke of Capitalism women are meant to serve one purpose only—as breeders of cannon fodder.

In the Daily Worker Army our women comrades fill the most important posts and are in fact one of the most dreaded sections of the proletarian forces.

The Rosa Luxemburg Brigade of the Daily Worker Army is particularly effective at factory gates. Here their wonderful persistence and courage has been shown time and again, in factory distribution campaigns and in daily sales of the Daily Worker.

At lunch hour and closing hour these picked troops are to be found fighting on the front lines.

Permitting the enemy no moment of rest, these fireless warriors utilize the evening hours for the purpose of approaching and winning additional recruits for the growing army of Daily Worker Readers.

Victory in the drive for Five Thousand New Readers for the Daily Worker will depend to a large extent upon the courage and activity of the Rosa Luxemburg Brigade.

News from the U. S. S. R.

RESULTS OF TRUSTIFICATION OF INDUSTRY

The trustification system has scored great successes. The turnover of nine large syndicates has increased from 750 million roubles in 1925-24 to 3.5 billion roubles this year. The relative strength of the syndicates in the general distribution through the syndicates has increased during that period three or four times. The sale of textile goods through the syndicates has increased 82 per cent; leather goods, 51 per cent; kerosene, 99 per cent; silicates, 32 per cent; salt, 99 per cent, etc.

Investments in the Yogostal.

The total capital investments in enterprises of the Yugostal (South Steel Trust) this year will amount to 80 million roubles, which is almost twice as much as last year.

Work is now in progress in restoring four blast furnaces. Work has been started in the construction of a huge blast furnace in the Makeev plant with a capacity of 10 to 12 million poods of cast iron a year. Mary Martin ovens are being restored and their capacity increased and a new one is in construction.

The Yugostal foundries are also restoring the electric motor power.

Work has also been started in enlarging the production of rolled iron and tubes.

However, this capital work is insufficient considering the growing demands on the metal products and the accelerated wear and tear of metallurgical plants which are in many cases working at higher pressure than before the war. According to approximate figures, the shortage of cast iron in 1927-28 will be 40 million poods in spite of the increased output of the Yugostal of 12 to 15 per cent. This will necessitate capital investments next year.

Still Cheaper Than Private Trader.

According to the figures of the People's Commissariat of Finance, the difference in prices between the State and private enterprises is expressed as follows:

Vegetable oil costs in private enterprises 2.62 times as much as before the war, in the cooperatives it costs only 1.61 times as much; salt costs in the cooperatives 1.5 as much as in 1913, and in private enterprises 2.5. Textile prices in the cooperatives are twice as high as before the war and the private enterprises 2.6. Metal commodities are 25 per cent dearer in private enterprises than in cooperatives and silicate goods almost 30 per cent higher. The cooperative and State enterprises sell all manufactured products at considerably lower prices than the private trader.

Workers Cooperative Contest.

Returns are already coming in on the contest for the best cooperative. The Central Workers' Cooperative has already received a communication from the workers' cooperative centre of Sormovo, Nizhegorodsk province. The average reduction of prices of that cooperative between January 1 and June 1 is 11 to 15 per cent. The cutting of prices affected 2,786 items. The financial situation in the Central Workers' Cooperative is absolutely satisfactory. Between October, 1926, and April, 1927, the net profit of the cooperative was 103,289 roubles. The administration and organizational expenses have been reduced from 11.14 per cent to 9.45 per cent of the turnover.

The capital of the cooperative has increased 147 per cent in the course of one year. The turnover is increasing every month. During the last two years it has increased six-fold. The number of shareholders has increased during two years from 7,500 to 16,000.

Seventy-six per cent of the turnover of the Sormov cooperative falls to articles of primary necessity.

The election campaign of the agricultural co-operatives of the Soviet Union shows, according to statistics in regard to 114 societies of agricultural producers and credit co-operatives, a considerable development of members' activity and increased influence on the part of local party organizations in the work and development of the co-operatives. This is accompanied by a steadily growing activity of the poor peasantry, and a strengthening of the bloc between the poor and the middle peasantry in their stand against the kulaks or wealthy.

Members' attendance at meetings fluctuates between 25.6 and 62 per cent., whereas last year there was a 35 per cent average attendance. Attendance was even better in the societies of special co-operatives — 60 to 80 per cent of the membership.

Peasants Interested.

The degree of the general activity of co-operative members can be seen by the number of discussion speakers, on an average 17 to every co-operative.

It is also noticeable that the unorganized peasants take an ever-increased interest in co-operative meetings. On an average 60 per cent of the participants in meetings were peasants who are not yet organized in any co-operative. Non-members too took an active part in the meetings and came forward with practical proposals and open criticism.

Fifty-eight per cent of the members of administrative organs were re-elected; this implies stabilization of the movement. Participation of poor and middle peasants in administrative organs has risen from 67.5 per cent last year to 76.4 per cent. Of the members of administrative organs (in 35 societies) 26.4 per cent have no horses and 52.7 per cent only one horse for field work. This corresponds approximately with the social composition of the membership of agricultural co-operatives. The percentage of party members in administrative organs has risen from 14.3 per cent last year to 21.2 per cent.

Social Democrats in the Vienna Uprising.

The leaders of the social-democracy, the heroes of the second (socialist) international, again exposed before the masses their true character as defenders of the bourgeoisie. When the workers were engaged in street fighting against the government that had set free a group of fascists who had murdered a socialist workman and his child, the leaders of the Vienna socialists appeared before them and pleaded for "order." The workers roared back "traitors, scoundrels, who are disloyal to the working class!"

At times the fury of the masses sweeps them toward ill-advised action when the movement is doomed to defeat. On such occasions it is the imperative duty of responsible leaders to discourage even demonstrations that might lead to severe reprisals and defeat for the working class. But when the demonstrations occur and the masses are actually in the streets, fighting against the capitalist government, it is the duty of responsible leadership to enter into the conflict with all the resources at its command and incite the workers to ever more widespread, violent and audacious action. Instead of standing before them and sermonizing about "order" and submission to "authority," the real leaders of the working class will urge them to retain the arms they have and make raids upon ammunition and arms stores in order to secure more weapons. The workers in the arsenals will be incited to seize and turn over to the masses the means of destruction the capitalist state hopes to hold for itself, and in every way prepare for civil war.

The socialist leaders in Vienna proved themselves utterly servile to the capitalist class by counselling the workers against violence and advising them to go to their homes and adopt a folded-arms policy against the impudent provocations of the Seipel government that affronted the whole working class by setting free the fascist murderers. Had the workers followed the advice of such leaders the rising would have been crushed in the most frightful manner, thousands of workers would have died and the fascists would have established their supremacy in the government.

After being hooted down and stigmatized by the revolutionary rank and file of their own Party the social-democratic leaders retired to their editorial sanctums and again advised the workers against revolution by urging them to refrain from street fighting and to remain in their homes during a one-day protest strike. Says the manifesto of the social-democrats:

"We do not want a collision between the workmen and the soldiers of the republican army. Therefore comrades, no demonstrations, but a silent, dignified and complete protest strike for twenty-four hours."

Those who, in such a situation, urge a general strike for anything other than the mobilization of the workers for revolution are traitors to the working class. Every military organization of any stripe, republican guard or standing army, that has not gone over to the side of the workers, must be fought.

Social democracy is always the final bulwark of capitalism. Since the monstrous betrayal of the international working class by these leaders in 1914 this fact has been demonstrated in every important labor struggle on earth. Vienna is only one more example of their role as enemies of labor.

Further Butcheries in Nicaragua

Language is utterly inadequate to describe the infamy of the policy of the Washington government toward the people of Nicaragua, its bestial suppression of the duly constituted government of Sacasa, its enthroning of the despised Wall Street marionette, Diaz; its despatching of Henry L. Stimson to try by deception to induce the liberal masses to lay down their arms and cease resistance to the agent of American capitalism who illegally occupied the presidential chair. If ever there was an example of brazen imperialist conquest it is the ravaging of Nicaragua, simply because the United States wants to defend the investments of its millionaires in that country and at the same time extend its control over Central and South American republics and obtain a site for the construction of another canal that will be useful for more extensive military depredations.

The latest act of banditry was perpetrated Sunday at Ocotal when airplanes connected with the marines, those gun-men or imperialism, who have terrorized many a republic into submission to Wall Street, dropped bombs upon some inhabitants of that unfortunate country who refused to give up their arms. Some three hundred in all were massacred without any chance whatsoever of repelling the attack. The bombing plane has come to be the approved instrument for mass murder of defenseless populations. The French used such instruments of death and destruction against the rebels in Syria when they stormed Damascus eighteen months ago, the British recently used planes to spread terror among the inhabitants of the borderland between Tibet and India, the United States has used them on many occasions, but never before has there been such a wholesale massacre with American bombing planes.

The excuse for the massacre was that the followers of General Sandino were occupying American mining property in Ocotal. This is a plain admission that the marines and other forces are in Nicaragua to protect investments of Wall Street.

This wholesale slaughter cannot make the United States more despised in the southern republics than it was already, but it ought to arouse the workers of this country to demand that American troops get out of Nicaragua and stay out. The reply to this latest outrage must be a closer alliance between the workers of the United States and of the Latin-American republics for a joint fight against imperialism.

HOW GENEVA BEGINS TO LOOK TO THE SMALL TAXPAYER

Some Problems of the United Front in China

By H. M. WICKS.

RECENT events in China have emphasized the fact that it is just as important for Communists to know precisely when and how to break with other social groups as it is to know how and when to unite with them. The decisive action by the Communist International against the Central Committee of the Chinese Party for failing to break with the elements in the Wuhan government that were fighting against the workers and peasants again serves to bring before us the problem of united front tactics.

The present crisis in the Chinese revolution is the result of the peculiar conditions under which the movement developed. Predominantly a peasant country, the introduction of capitalist production by the imperialist powers developed in a short time a proletariat that stands forth as the most powerful independent class in the country—the class whose destiny it is to take the lead in ANY revolutionary movement against imperialism. But in this struggle the working class, under the leadership of the Communists, must defend the interests of the seething masses of peasantry and energetically fight for peasant demands in order to win the support of that class and bring it into conscious political action against the imperialist ravagers of the country. The growth of the capitalist class did not keep relative pace with the development of industry and the growth of the proletariat organized around that industry. Profits of most industrial establishments went to enrich still more the imperialist investors. Naturally the bourgeoisie was not able to become a powerful factor in China. It hasn't sufficient vitality to lead an independent political existence and must find allies in order to survive. It perceived that its stultification, its underdevelopment, was due to the oppression of the imperialists, therefore it was impelled, in the beginning of the nationalist movement, toward a bloc with the workers, the peasantry and the small bourgeoisie.

IT was also inevitable that, at a certain stage in the development of the revolution, when the workers and peasants put forward revolutionary class demands, the bourgeoisie would desert the united national revolutionary front and go over to the side of the counter-revolution. During the height of the northern drive against the feudal militarist regime of Chang Tso-lin and the Peking government the militarist adventurer, Chiang Kai-shek, considered that the opportune moment had arrived to effect a counter-revolutionary coup and stifle the demands of the workers and peasants. Of utmost significance is the fact that this general, in an effort to establish a bonapartist regime in the interest of the big bourgeoisie, the feudal militarists and the imperialists, raised his reactionary organization the Kouimintang — the Party under which the revolutionary struggle was being carried on.

The reason for the fight over the right to claim title to the Kouimintang is because it is the special organizational form under which the revolution developed in China; an organization within which were united for the common aim of an anti-imperialist struggle the various classes in China. Within the Kouimintang the various groups pursued their special aims. The Communists, because of the fact that they are the vanguard of the proletariat, because they represented an independent force, a special class, always reserved the right of criticism of the shortcomings and waverings of other elements within the Kouimintang. in fact it is only such conditions that Communists can unite with any other group because to abandon the right of criticism is to abandon the revolutionary struggle, to give up the struggle for the organization by the working class of the revolutionary movement and turn it over to the less stable elements who would lead it to disaster.

It is the special historical significance of the Kouimintang, its great importance as a political factor in the country that made it imperative for the Communists to fight against any attempt to use its name and traditions for counter-revolutionary purposes. It is this fact also that made ridiculous the demands of the opposition elements in the All-Union Communist Party (Trotsky, Radek & Co.) that the Communists in China leave the Kouimintang. To do so would have played directly into the hands of the agents of the imperialists.

WHEN Chiang Kai-shek went over into the camp of the counter-revolution it was not difficult to perceive the necessity for a decisive break with him. Not only was he denounced, but it was recognized by every Communist that to even discuss the healing of the breech with him and the national bourgeoisie that he represented would be a betrayal of the revolution. No compromise was possible with these cut-throats.

But after the apostacy of Chiang the Communists within the Wuhan (Hankow) government were so fearful of further struggles within the Kouimintang that the submerged their revolutionary demands and permitted the remaining agents of the bourgeoisie within the government to pave the way for delivering the movement into the hands of its enemies. When the majority in the government of Wuhan permitted Fang Yu-hsiang, the so-called christian general, to negotiate with Chiang Kai-shek they should have been openly repudiated by the Communists because to compromise in any way with Chiang and those of the former right wing of the Kouimintang who had seceded could result only in betrayal. The conference between the feudal militaristic generals resulted in the two of them uniting against the revolution. This second betrayal was followed by the defection of General Tang Shen-yi who dispatched a telegram to the Wuhan government demanding that they drive out the Communists, which was a prelude to an open attack upon the workers.

While these events were taking place the Communist leaders were beating time and completely neglecting to utilize their positions in the government to take decisive action against the wavering elements—the spies and semi-spies of Chiang Kai-shek and Feng Yu-hsiang.

The Communist Central Committee should have used its influence within the government to force it to encourage the agrarian revolution; to arouse to action tens of millions of peasants, arm as many of them as possible, disarm the enemies of the revolution and proceed in the midst of the fiercest civil war to build up a new army—an army composed of the revolutionary workers and peasants that could establish and safeguard a class government that could realize the revolutionary democratic dictatorship of the workers and peasants.

THE failure to act decisively against the traitors in the Wuhan government is one of the most colossal blunders in the whole history of the revolutionary movement. It tremendously aids the imperialists who finance the counter-revolution (this fact needs no proof for the simple reason that all revolutionists know that without support from the imperialists no serious danger could be encountered from the national bourgeoisie). Instead of strengthening and consolidating its own organization as the best guarantee for the success of the revolution the Central Committee of the Communist Party of China forgot these tasks and completely identified itself with the other elements of the government. So afraid was that committee of offending its associates in the united front that it forgot its own revolutionary duty to the working class. It was warned against such errors by the last plenum of the Executive Committee of the Communist International but did not correct them.

Especially was the Central Committee criminally negligent in its revolutionary duty when the Wuhan government permitted, in fact sanctioned, the disarming of the trades unions and other workers' organizations. Instead of silently permitting this monstrous crime against the revolution to be carried out the Communist leaders should have denounced the government and exposed their former associates before the masses and demanded that the armed workers disperse them. Such decisive action would have brought about the capitulation of the wavering, unstable elements of the Wuhan government and enabled the Communists, in the name of the workers, peasants and small bourgeoisie, to carry on a definitely revolutionary policy against the feudal militarists as well as the military agents of the compradores and the imperialists.

Of course it goes without saying that immediate open warfare against the combined enemy forces was impossible. The presence of the imperialist forces makes such action exceedingly difficult and implies long and careful preparation. But the Communists can, even now, without Wuhan, carry on a revolutionary struggle, by striving to develop to the highest possible point the peasant insurrections through working toward an extension of the "red spear" organizations, and other armed peasant fighting units. These organizations could be united with the workers organizations, the revolutionary army units and other organs that could be mobilized against the counter-revolution. While it was not possible openly to fight the imperialists and their agents it was possible to carry on agitation for mutiny within the ranks of the counter-revolutionary armies.

THE failure of the leadership of the Chinese Party properly to carry out the united front again emphasizes the dangerous illusion that people who have fought side by side with us in other battles not involving the proletarian struggle for power should not be treated as enemies at the first false move. Many comrades imagine that our associates in united front manouvers should be given plenty of time in which to retreive themselves and cannot understand that it may and frequently is quite possible and necessary to work side by side with certain elements one day and be forced to crush them the next day. To deal softly with such elements may be gentiemanly and irreproachable from the standpoint of such bourgeois illusions as good fellowship and courtesy, but it is utterly unpardonable in a revolutionist.

In the development of a revolutionary struggle the line between a correct Leninist position and opportunism must be correctly perceived. To yield to opportunism, to evade the fight against one's former associates, when they no longer go forward on the road to revolution, is objectively a betrayal of the struggle. Inaction, a negative attitude, can do as much and frequently more harm to the revolution as action in the interest of the counter-revolution, because the inaction of leaders paralyzes the action of the masses who in case of open betrayal of the revolution would furiously revolt.

DRAMA

Florence Stern and Dorsha Head Program Benefit Daily Worker

Florence Stern, distinguished American violin virtuoso, has just been engaged to play for the gigantic Carnival and Fair which the DAILY WORKER is offering to the New York Workers at Pleasant Bay Park, Saturday and Sunday, July 23 and 24. Miss Stern needs no introduction to American music lovers, having appeared in the important music halls and concert stages of the United States, Canada and Europe.

She has just returned to New York City after a very successful tour out of town and is now busily engaged preparing her programs for the Fall, when she expects to play at Carnegie Hall, and Town Hall.

Among the many valuable letters sent to this artists by world renowned musicians commending her rare talent, Florence treasures one from Professor Leopold Auer, her teacher during the period, which states: "After having repeatedly listened to you, I take great pleasure in stating that you are one of the most extraordinary violin geniuses that ever came to my personal notice. . . ."

Dorsha, celebrated everywhere as a dancer of the first rank, will also be heavily featured on the program. At present negotiations are in progress with Matesevich for his services.

The DAILY WORKER expects a crowd of about 10,000 at this unique affair. Interesting aids shows, the sort that characterize the amusement parks at Coney Island, and other places, sporting events, vaudeville de luxe, and dancing will comprise the remaining events at the Carnival.

500,000 DEMAND PROBE IN SACCO MEET BREAK-UP

Write Liberties Union; Hit at Right Wing

Scoring the Civil Liberties Union's "investigation" of the break up of the Sacco - Vanzetti demonstration in Union Square a week ago the Sacco-Vanzetti Emergency Committee, representing 500,000 workers met at the Labor Temple, 14th St. and Second Ave., Friday night and unanimously demanded a fair and thoro investigation of the affair.

The resolution, a copy of which has been sent to the Civil Liberties Union, was introduced by Rose Baron, acting secretary of the Emergency Committee.

Denounce Right Wing Tactics.

Representatives of various organizations affiliated with the Emergency Committee denounced the tactics of the right wing and socialists which had resulted in the break-up of the meeting by the police.

Roger Francoeur, representing the Industrial Workers of the World, denounced the right wing for sabotaging the fight of American labor for the freedom of Sacco and Vanzetti. Other organizations which hit at the tactics of the right wing were the United Council of Workingclass Housewives and Local 41, of the I. L. G. W. U., John J. Ballam was chairman of the meeting.

Text of Letter.

The text of the letter sent to the Civil Liberties Union follows:

"The Sacco-Vanzetti Emergency Committee, representing 500,000 organized workers, at its fourth session on July 15th, held at the Labor Temple, 244 East 14th St., has instructed me to send the following letter—to your committee in answer to the statement made by your special committee of three appointed to investigate the breaking up of the Sacco-Vanzetti demonstration on Thursday, July 7, at Union Square.

"1.—Your investigation committee has made no effort and did not consult us as one of the factors interested in the demonstration about the facts concerned.

"2.—Your committee failed to even mention the fact that the socialists officially in charge of the demonstration called upon the police to break up the demonstration.

"3.—Your committee entirely ignored the fact that the Liberation Committee for Sacco and Vanzetti was responsible for whatever happened at the demonstration, by its policy of keeping a large section of organized labor of this city and particularly those elements that have taken the initiative and have been the most consistent fighters for the freedom of Sacco and Vanzetti.

"Such action could not but lead to what took place—a spontaneous demand on the part of the audience to head from its leaders. The Liberation Committee for Sacco and Vanzetti had accepted our co-operation and agreed to work with us jointly in the Union Square demonstration. This was later withdrawn at the insistence of Abraham Shiplecoff, who dominated the conference because of the fact that his group and the Forwards promised to finance the demonstration. Your committee, however, in its findings fails to mention the role played by the Socialists and furthermore makes no mention of the action of the police.

Not Keeping, With Principles.

"It seems to us not in keeping with the principles of the American Civil Libertias Union that Norman Thomas, representing the Socialist Party, shall be made chairman of such an investigation committee while the other working class political party and the other left wing organizations involved were not even given an opportunity to appear before the committee. Since the Socialist Party is involved and the Communists are also charged with responsibility for breaking off the demonstration, we request that either both of these parties or none shall be represented on the committee.

"We request that the American Civil Liberties Union reconsider the findings of its committee in view of the above facts stated and in view of the earlier statement made by Arthur Garfield Hays, which was in harmony with the views expressed above, and that a new committee be appointed to investigate the entire matter and fix responsibility. The Sacco and Vanzetti Emergency Committee will co-operate in every way possible with your committee."

Plan Survey of U. S. Traffic Conditions

The traffic conditions of all cities having a population of more than 50,000 will be surveyed by nearly a hundred committees appointed by the American Engineering Council, according to Dean Dexter S. Kimball, of Cornell University, who is president of the Council.

The object of the investigation, according to Dean Kimball, "is to determine what signs, signals and markings will best facilitate traffic and increase safety."

Legal Crocodiles Fight Wage Raise For Rail Clerks

By CARL HAESSLER
(Federated Press)

CHICAGO, (FP) July 18.—In the English room of the Congress hotel in Chicago is being enacted daily a mean and sorry spectacle of which prosperous industrial America has no reason to be proud. Keen railroad lawyers of the Illinois Central are seeking to beat the underpaid clerks of this rich transportation system out of a small increase in wages. The Brotherhood of Railway & Steamship Clerks is defending the men's contention.

In the luxuriously upholstered chairs on the platform behind the long tables sits the board of arbitration, loaded as usual against the workers under the practical operation of the Watson-Parker law. The brotherhood named 2 arbitrators, the railroad 2 and the remaing 2 are the so-called neutrals, stacked according to prediction in favor of the road.

The Missing Neutrals.

The law provides for the neutrals to be agreed upon by the other arbitrators, but the railroads in almost every case thus far have fixed matters so that no agreement upon neutrals has been possible. They have done so because in that case the neutrals are appointed, under the law, by the permanent railroad mediation board. And this board gets its jobs and its wages through appointment from President Coolidge.

In the present wage case the brotherhood submitted names of well-known men of the capitalist class, experienced in arbitration and even slightly biased, perhaps in favor of the railroad. The I. C. would not hear of any of them but offered instead the most reactionary bank presidents in Chicago, bloodsuckers who weep every time a worker gets a penny increase in his pay envelope. The brotherhood reluctantly preferred to take its chances with Cal Coolidge's board.

Enormous Profits.

Railway clerks throughout the United States averaged in 1926 an annual wage of $1,600. The Illinois Central made a profit in that year of $26,202,012. Yet this giant carrier sends its principal lawyer, Solicitor-General Burch of Memphis, before the arbitration board to try by petty higgling and wrangling to prevent its employes from sharing a little more in the immense returns they help to produce.

It would be embarrassing for comfortable America, if its comfortable upper crust cared, to see the pale undernourished clerks in the witness chair scarcelingly cross examined by the expensively togged out railroad lawyers, trained by years of practice of early afternoon golf or by long weekends of yachting.

"You say your monthly family expenditures are $175?" Attorney Burch shot at a clerk from Mattoon, Ill. "Please let us have the details. Tell us how the $175 was spent."

The Old Mortgage.

"You say you own your own home," Burch asked a little later. "How big is the lot and what did you pay for it?" He was told the lot had been bought 35 down and $5 a month and that the modest little home that sheltered man and wife and 5 children had a $2800 mortgage on it.

Another witness this corporation lawyer tried to reduce to the status of a robot, a mere hand hardly worth the $1,800 he earned if he were allowed to toil every working day of the year.

The Railway Clerks are asking a flat increase of 10 cents an hour for all the Illinois Central employes in their classification. As the arbitration agreement states that the increase, if any, is to take effect on the following payday the railroad is stalling the case along to ward off any tapping of its $26,000,000 profits as long as possible. The government you see, pays the expenses of this hearing in the gilded hotel room with its paneled walls and tapestry decoration, overlooking Michigan Avenue and the lake.

Herrick Resting After Operation.

CLEVELAND, July 18.—Ambassador Myron T. Herrick was reported today recovering nicely from a minor operation at Cleveland hospital. He has been advised by physicians to take no part in the ceremonies scheduled for August 1st, in honor of himself and Colonel Charles Lindbergh.

Crew is Saved.

SANTIAGO, Chile., July 18.—The captain and twelve men comprising the crew of the Peruvian vessel Barkdale, which was wrecked on June 24, were rescued today by the Chilian naval vessel Purvenir, Cesar Pinto Arenas, the Captain of the Porvenir advised today. The Barkdale was wrecked when enroute from Hullen to Callao, Peru.

PASSAIC LABOR CHAUTAUQUA PEPS UP UNIONS; MAY ARRANGE DEMONSTRATIONS IN PATERSON

By ART SHIELDS.
(Federated Press.)

PASSAIC, N. J., July 18.—With fife and drum corps and the gayest of labor actors and singers the Labor Chautauqua is winning the hearts of Passaic and pepping up the trade unions that were slumping with unemployment.

This new method of entertainment-education — alternating serious speeches with laugh-bringing skits and dances and songs—is being given a successful 7-day trial for the first time in an eastern industrial city. Paul W. Fuller, who originated the Labor Chautauqua in the soft coal fields of central Pennsylvania, is in charge, under the general direction of the Workers' Education Bureau and the Passaic Trades and Labor Assembly.

Plan Paterson Chautauqua.

"The New Jersey State Federation of Labor cannot be too grateful to Brother Fuller for bringing this form of mass education to our workers," said Hugh Riley, state labor secretary, on the third night. Riley, in an enthusiastic speech, prophesied a stirring revival of trade union organization in the East as the result of the series of chautauquas he will help Fuller to stage in other cities.

The silk city of Paterson will probably be chosen for the next chautauqua. Here also is the open shop Wright Aeronautical Co. that turned out the engines that propel Lindbergh and the other pioneer air birds over the Atlantic. So low are the wages at the air craft factory that the mechanics have to be imported from outside. Few Paterson machinists will work for the Wright prices.

As a symbol of friendliness from the city that jailed and slugged the textile workers when their union was born in the long strike of last year, the mayor of Passaic gave the welcoming address at the opening chautauqua session. Mayor McGuire, who held office during the higgling, has given place to John J. Roegner, who lauds the American Federation of Labor, and urges bigger and better organization, for bigger wages and better working conditions.

"This Labor Chautauqua" sounds the death knell of company unionism in Passaic," said Fuller, amid cheers. Norman Thomas, who was arrested in the 1926 strike, took the platform the second night to the tune of applause. He urged the workers to strengthen their local unions in the Botany and Forstmann & Huffmann mills. A. J. Muste and Clinton S. Golden, dean and business manager of Brookwood Labor College, carried the same message. James Starr spoke for the United Textile Workers, of which he is vice-president; Secretary Connelly for the Paterson machinists and William Smith, secretary-treasurer of the American Federation of Full Fashioned Hosiery Workers, whose girls' chorus was one of the hits of the affair, said his organization would aid the next chautauqua with membership assessments, if necessary.

Union Membership Increases.

William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, and many other labor leaders are expected to speak in the four days that remain. Bands lead the crowds afternoon and evenings to the big auditorium of Public School 12 and hundreds are turned away as the halls packs. Veteran unionists who were afraid Fuller was engaging too large a hall are now asking why he didn't get a still bigger one.

Scores are being signed up in the unions. The Chautauqua is holding the line till the busy season starts in August.

Chicago Labor Notes

By CARL HAESSLER.

CHICAGO, (FP) July 18.—Four railroad labor hearings, an approach to traction arbitration and the breakdown of symphony orchestra negotiations are the high points of Chicago labor history the past week. The rail hearings are partly arbitration and partly mediation and involve wage and agreement questions of the locomotive fireman, railway clerks, maintenance of way men and Pullman porters.

The porters are bringing up the only national case. It is a plea to have the Brotherhood of Sleeping Porters & Maids, the bonafide union they have formed, the only one recognised by the mediation board as the legitimate spokesman of the employes in place of the Pullman company union they have set up in the Representation plan. The other cases are either regional or confined to a single railroad system.

The lockout of 5 unions by the White (Regan) Printing House remains substantially the same since it settled down to a sub-rudimentary two months ago. The metal polishers on strike at the Chicago Flexible Shaft Co. and the union toolmakers locked out there are on the eve of a settlement which is scheduled to be worked out in the next few days. The union streetcar men who have taken a strike vote that would tie up all Chicago surface and elevated lines are about to arbitrate for a wage increase and better conditions.

The only definite new break in relations between labor and capital is the announcement that the Chicago Symphony Orchestra would disband rather than pay its 90 union musicians $100 a week. The Illinois Local 10, American Federation of Musicians, has heard reports that a new orchestra company will be organized that will meet the men's demands.

Labor sports seem more interesting to the unions than more serious matters these days, as shown by the entry of close to 300 labor athletes in the track and field meet of the Labor Sports Union. The 2-day meet opens in Electric Park, Kedzie and Gulf Coast longshoremen's district, but no action has come.

However, the longshoremen's union is still a strong fighting force on the Gulf, said Dreyer, despite the open spots at Pensacola, Mobile and some smaller places. Its power is felt through all the Texas ports and it is also a considerable factor at New Orleans. The union scale is for 80 cents an hour, whereas Pensacola pays only 70 cents and Mobila 60 cents.

By unanimous vote the convention agreed to support an organization campaign on the Pacific Coast, where the open shop and the "fink hall" rules in all the leading ports except Tacoma, Washington. W. T. Morris, president of the Tacoma lumber handlers' local and also of the Tacoma Central Labor Council told how the I. L. A. had been shoved out of Seattle, Portland, San Pedro in the last few years.

Men are hired through the "fink hall," or central employment (blacklist) agency, maintained by the shipowners and the stevedoring bosses. Seattle has, in conjunction with the "fink hall" plan, a company union or waterfront association, that was devised by a smooth individual who has since won a fellowship from Harvard University to give him the latest ware to work out more such schemes.

The strongest line of the union is on the eastern coast, in the Atlantic Coast district that runs from Cape Hatteras to Halifax. In the big port of Philadelphia the union has recently taken in most of the longshoremen and obtained a working arrangement with the employers. Norfolk, New York and Boston show varying strength. Its weakest districts are the west coast and the Great Lakes. In the latter waterfront division the United States Steel Corporation is a determined enemy, though the union is still in action. One of the decisions of the convention gave the incoming executive board power to work for more strength and unity on the lakes by bringing together, if possible, a Chicago longshoremen's local with the other tugmen's locals with which it is at loggerheads.

RAILWAY WORKERS IN MANY COUNTRIES DENIED THE RIGHT TO DECLARE STRIKES

By ESTHER LOWELL.

Railway workers in many European countries are virtually denied the right to organize effective unions, the International Transport Workers' Federation has told the world's international labor conference at Geneva. Printed copies of the I. T. F. memorandum have been sent to unions in the United States.

Right of association for lawful purposes is granted railwaymen with other workers in the labor charter in the Versailles peace treaty, the I. T. F. points out. But like other clauses of that document, it is ignored by many countries which signed. The labor conference meets under treaty provisions in connection with the League of Nations.

American railway workers do not have the specific legal restrictions of European nations against organizing but they face the injunction. Rail shopmen in this country learned in 1922 that a federal judge could practically outlaw a transport strike and break unions when Judge Wilkerson granted his infamous order.

Through the I. T. F., 37 railwaymens' unions in 28 countries put their claims up to the Geneva labor conference. About 1,200,000 railway workers are represented in the demands for freedom of the individual to join what union he chooses; for freedom of the organization to run itself; and for freedom of collective action—no hindrance to striking.

State operation or control of railroads is not denied by the employes' demands, the I. T. F. states. Disputes are often intensified on such roads, the memorandum explains, because of the influence of private industry on such projects. Even though railestrikes inconvenience the general public more than most strikes, this should not be a reason for limiting the bargaining power of rail workers by denying them the strike weapon, says the I. T. F.

Numerous instances of restrictions on rail workers are cited in the I. T. F. Memorandum. Queen Marie's Roumania, for instance, denies railwaymen and civil servants the right to organize. Neighboring Italy also recognizes only the nationalist or yellow union and Hungary only the Christian Social union. Lithuania and Italy do not permit free organization at all.

Holland, Germany, Czechoslovakia, Esthonia, Bulgaria, Luxemburg, Sweden are some of the nations practically denying railwaymen the right to strike. Railwaymen are subject to military mobilization in case of strike in Poland, Spain, Czechoslovakia, Belgium, Luxemburg and Bulgaria. Belgium used this power in the 1922 strike. Bulgaria called even women rail workers to the colors in its 1919-20 strike.

Balkan countries particularly persecute workers for joining unions or any but the yellow ones where they are endorsed. Cases of workers who have been jailed for pushing unionization or urging rail strikes are given.

He was revived.

Cleveland to Hold I. L. D. Picnic on Sunday, August 7

Carl Hacker, Cleveland District Organizer I.L.D. announces that a Cleveland District picnic will be held on Sunday August 7th at the New Case Farm, Stop 24½ Kinman Rd.

A program of sports and entertainment is being arranged by a specially elected committee which will have an entertainment to make within the next ten days.

Comrade Robkoy, specialist on arrangements, has been drafted on the committee and a real live program is assured.

The slogan is: "Something Doing Every Minute."

The picnic ground is new and the latest thing in real country enjoyment. It has a large dance hall which is covered and has hardwood scraped and polished floors in excellent condition. A Union orchestra will be on hand to furnish the music. There are swings, teeter-totters and chutes for the children. In fact, the place has everything necessary to make a pleasant day in the country.

To reach the grounds take Kinsman Rd. car to end of line (E. 154th Street) then take I. L. D. bus which will be waiting at that point. If by auto, go straight out Kinsman Rd. to stop 24½. Directions signs will be placed along the road.

Former Head of I. L. A. Now Union's Chief Antagonist

One of the first encounters facing Joseph P. Ryan, new president of the International Longshoremen's Ass'n may be with an earlier chieftain of the organization, W. O'Connor, now chairman of the U. S. Shipping Board.

Delegates to the longshoremen's convention just concluded in Beethoven Hall, New York, heard the story of the vicious company union at Pensacola, Florida, to which the Shipping Board is giving support. The "stevedore local," as it is called, levies its dues in a peculiar way. Whenever a ship comes in for loading or unloading every longshoreman on board is taxed 75 cents by the company union.

Every possible pressure has been put on O'Connor, says Michael Dwyer, president of the South Atlantic and Gulf Coast longshoremen's district, but no action has come.

However, the longshoremen's union is still a strong fighting force on the Gulf, said Dwyer, despite the open spots at Pensacola, Mobile and some smaller places. Its power is felt through all the Texas ports and it is also a considerable factor at New Orleans. The union scale is for 80 cents an hour, whereas Pensacola pays only 70 cents and Mobila 60 cents.

SEWAGE-POLLUTED BEACHES MENACE TO N. Y. WORKERS

Breed Typhoid, Claims Comfissioner Harris

New York workers constantly risk [illegible] when they go bathing to escape the sweltering heat of the city. This is the result of a survey of bathing beaches made by Health Commissioner Harris.

More than 550 out of the 555 miles of New York's waterfront is polluted and unfit for bathing, according to Health Commissioner Harris. Some of the beaches are little better than open sewers and hundreds of New York workers who use them during the hot spells lay themselves open to attacks of typhoid, sinusitis, mastoid infections, and a number of other contagious diseases. More than 900 cases of typhoid fever were directly traced last year to bathing in polluted waters.

Beaches Are Open Sewers.

More than one billion gallons of polluted sewer water, containing waste matter, are poured daily into the tidal waters of the city. In addition quantities of garbage as well as refuse and oil are dumped into the water by ships.

Even Coney Island, the most popular beach for New York workers, is pronounced unsafe by the Health Commissioner. Beaches, like Manhattan and Brighton, that charge higher rates and are more or less inaccessible to workers are pronounced unsafe by Commissioner Harris.

Join the Navy and See the Cooler

By CHARLES YALE HARRISON.

Wherever the unsettled mind pauses in crowds—Union Square, the Battery, or Madison Park; multi-colored navy enlistment posters are to be found. "Uncle Sam Wants You!" or "Let The Navy Train You!" Enticing lithographs (New York's a tough burg when a guy's out of work) showing the cool spray of the surf on the beach at Waikiki, another showing a couple of hula-hula girls stacking a basketful of shredded wheat (the dames look fat and wilted on Fourteenth St.).

More alluring scenes all of which originate in the fertile imagination of the navy's advertising artist. The frigid coolness of a Chinese temple with a couple of pig-tailed coolies unobtrusively watching the proceedings, then another—a group of U. S. sailors garbed in cool tropical whites, watching a gang of Haitians sweating, stripped naked under a broiling equatorial sun (contrast—no hard work in the navy)—still another—a group of officers and men taking in the sights at Guam (idea to be conveyed—no social distinctions in the navy, just one big happy family), many posters, many slogans, and every now and then some hungry worker enlists. But what really happens after his enlistment. Let's see!

"THE NAVY OFFERS YOU A POSITION FOR LIFE."

—That's what Captain Ridley McLean, U. S. N., says in a remarkably frank book called The Bluejackets Manual (you get one free when you join) and it has a foreword written by the secretary of the navy. Says the doughty captain on page 13 of the aforesaid manual, "Few men realize the full value of a 'position for life' . . . as far as actual pay is concerned, a man who behaves himself and tries to get ahead, is much better off in the service than out of it."

What is meant by "behaves himself"? Simply this. Obey every order, rule and regulation contained in the manual—it has only 807 pages! For the slightest infraction of a rule your pay is docked. And any gob will tell you it's a physical impossibility to keep "a clean slate."

I quote from the valiant captain's opus thruout. "Neglect of duty. Offenses under this classification may vary in nature from minor cases—such, for example, as 'late at muster,' or 'slow in sweeping down'—to neglecting to close water-tight doors when it is your duty to do so." There are hundreds of rules which may be broken and for every infraction there is an appropriate punishment.

Ten minutes are allowed to "stow hammocks" after reveille. If more is taken you get "on report." Neglect of duty. If you smoke after "turn to"—more neglect of duty. "Smoking in any part of the ship during divine service is forbidden"—another offence. "Men are not permitted to write on the life lines." "No person in the navy shall act as a correspondent for a newspaper or a periodical." Letters to newspapers complaining of conditions on board ship comes under this ruling. More infractions—more punishments. "Whistling is never permitted on board ship." Buckets must be put in one place, scrubbing brushes in another, if they swap places some poor gob is out of luck. Hundreds and hundreds of rules; every rifle means a possible infraction.

"YOU'RE IN THE NAVY NOW"

With almost every infraction of a rule comes punishment and the less of pay. When you are tried by a "deck court" or a summary court-martial the inevitable loss of pay is included in the punishment. Well may the gob dolefully sing,

"You're in the navy now,
You're not behind a plow,
You'll stay and watch
You —— of a ——,
You're in the navy now."

Punishment in the navy may be assigned in four different ways, says Captain McLean on pages 21-22 of the manual:

"1. The captain is authorized to assign certain punishments; as a rule, these are sufficiently severe to punish minor offences only."

"2. Deck Courts.—If the captain thinks you ought to get more severe punishment than he is authorized to assign, but that your case is not sufficiently serious for a summary court martial, he may order a deck court. Such a court is not authorized to assign more severe punishment than 20 days confinement and 20 days loss of pay.

"3. If your offence is still more serious, the captain orders you to be tried by a summary court-martial. Such a court can sentence you to 30 days' solitary confinement and to loss of three months' pay, or to a bad conduct discharge."

"4. In case of a very serious offence, the commander-in-chief or secretary of the navy may order a general court-martial. As a rule this court-martial sentences a guilty person to imprisonment at hard labor, loss of pay and dishonorable discharge. The prison term may vary from six months to any number of years," depending upon the offence."

"The prison term may vary to any number of years." Gone tha bright hued pictures of Honolulu—no taking it easy where the Chinese temple bells call at evenide—no white "ducks" or an aristocratic pith helmet taking in the sights at Colon or Balboa. For an infraction of the rules, instead you may find yourself in a navy cooler doing "ten years hard."

And once you have been sentenced there is no appeal. For as Captain McLean says, a court-martial is the highest military bar, "no one, not even the president, can order it to reverse a decision. An approving authority can mitigate its punishment, but can neither commute nor increase it."

The navy is such a swell institution that the desertion laws are almost barbaric in their intensity. Of course the posters down at Battery Park were all the bunk, sure they were. Swabbing a deck or stoking in a coal hole that would sear the lining of your lungs—"Learn a Trade and See the World." Yeah. From the dirty end of a port-hole.

Listen to McLean. "Few men realize how frequently deserters are captured . . . owing to the increased reward which has been offered 30 per cent of the men who desert are either captured or voluntarily surrender. Many times deserters are captured by the civil service men (who keep up with all deserters) after they have married and have families. These civil police are all over the United States, and many of them live on the rewards which they receive by apprehending deserters."

You see, it's this way, the navy is so anxious for you to have a good time that they'd hate to see you miss all that wonderful fun they promised you down in the tropics and out on the cool surf at Waikiki and listening to the tinkling of the temple bells in some Chinese garden. Why they'd even pay civil service dicks to get you back. . . . There's always a rat low enough to do any dirty job.

Any added comment to this cold-blooded recital would be superfluous.

Join the navy and see the cooler.

Against the War Danger

The Future War and the Working Class

IV.

By D. MARETZKY.

Every social system must have a special economic character, must represent a special type of production relations. Every significant "economy" in history must also correspond to a special "policy," a special "concentrated expression." Accordingly, the third line of the chain —wars—can only form a special "continuation" of the given policy, and, according to the epoch and circumstances, can possess only various social sense of class. It is just by the consequent class treatment of the question of war that Marxism and Leninism are distinguished from all bourgeois and petty-bourgeois conceptions of war.

The view that Marx and Engels were opponents of war in general is an opportunist misrepresentation. Only pacifists from the bourgeois and the Social-Democratic camp, ostensible opponents of war, can make Marx and Engels out to be Tolstoians or disciples of Voltaire. This trick of the pacifists is a match for the Social Democratic falsehood that Marx was an opponent of "force" in general and consequently also an "opponent" of the dictatorship of the proletariat.

From the standpoint of revolutionary Marxism and Leninism the decisive point is: which class is making war; this must also decide the attitude of the international proletarian revolutionaries towards this or that war. Every effort to group wars only according to characteristics "beyond class," the distinction of wars into "wars of defence" and "wars of attack," into "just" and "unjust," civilized and barbarian wars—can only lead the working class into confusion, to casuistic sophisms, and is at bottom—as was shamefully confirmed by the experience of the years 1914-1918—only a device for deceiving the masses.

Beneficial Wars.

If a war is made by a progressive class against a reactionary one, if a war is made by a revolutionary government against a reactionary power, if a war robs a class of "positions of influence" which impede the development of productive powers, such war will be a paramount progressive factor. Conversely, if a reactionary State makes war upon a revolutionary State, or reactionary States fight for a "redistribution of the world" or if in the then existing, predatory war, against which revolutionaries must fight with all their strength.

Moreover, the bourgeoisie carried on progressive "wars of national emancipation" severed the feudal shackles by force of arms, broke down the petrified barriers of production and thereby "lead the nation forwards." Even today the bourgeoisie of a portion thereof are capable of a certain period of carrying on a "progressive," "just" war in their own countries (namely, those suffering oppression under Imperialism).

An example in recent times, which all will remember: The army of revolutionary China, under bourgeois commanders, directed the turning of the northern military, of the agents and "compradors" of the imperialism of Great Britain, Japan and the United States. A portion of the Chinese bourgeoisie was able during the first phases of development of the revolution to make a revolutionary war against reactionary foreign imperialism.

Chiang Kai Shek, the authorized representative of the Chinese bourgeoisie at this stage of development of the national freedom movement, conducted the revolutionary war of the people against reaction. This is the historic difference between the bourgeois Chinng Kai Shek and, for instance, the Socialist Minister Kerenski, who, in the year 1917, in the name of "fulfillment of duty to the allies," i. e., the entente imperialists incited the Russian soldiers to take the offensive.

The Reactionary Trend.

The revolution in Shanghai, in which Chiang Kai Shek played the part of a Chinese Cavaignac, amounted to an immense social "regrouping of the ranks" in the camp of the national freedom movement and to the going over of the Chinese bourgeoisie to the camp of reaction, a desertion which the Comintern had foreseen and of which they had in their resolutions and instructions warned the Chinese Communists. The shootings in Shanghai in April of 1927 constitute a bloody confirmation in the history of the Chinese revolution whereby the Chinese bourgeoisie cut themselves off from the possibility of taking the leadership in a progressive national war of emancipation.

All Imperialist Wars Reactionary.

The wars, which the present-day imperialists are making, cannot be progressive in the slightest degree; they are reactionary, predatory wars. For Imperialism, per se, Capitalism in a state of decay, is—according to Lenin's statement—a throughly predatory, reactionary system.

"From being a liberator of the nations, which Capitalism was in its fight against feudalism, Imperialistic Capitalism has become the greatest oppressor of the nations. Progressive Capitalism has been converted to reaction; it has developed productive power to such an extent that there remains nothing else for humanity to do bnt adopt Socialism or suffer for years and decades the armed fight of 'great' powers for the artificial maintenance of Capitalism by means of colonies, monopolies, privileges and through national oppression of every kind" (Lenin, From the brochure "Socialism and War.").

Messrs. Scheidemann, Renaudel, Turati and 'the whole of international Social Democracy, which, during the years 1914 to 1918, solicited with such zeal among the working class of devotees of the imperialistic slaughter, committed an unprecedented piece of villany against the literary heritage of Marx in forcing into a radically different setting, into the relations of imperialist war, isolated statements of Engels' concerning the progressive tendencies of the former bourgeois, national wars of emancipation.

The Revolutionary Offensive.

In the presetn epoch of the decline of capitalism a progressive war can be carried on only by the progressive class, by the revolutionary proletariat (a civil war, if the proletariat fights for the possession of power, a class war, if, after the capture of the reins of government, war is carried on against imperialistic armies).

The proletariat organised as a State power may under especially favorable conditions, with the greatest precaution and with the requisite logical rearguard, and, particularly, with a firm alliance of the workers and peasants, and when there exists sharp difference of opinion in the camp of the bourgeoisie, etc.) take up a revolutionary offensive war in aid of the proletariat rising or in open revolt in other countries.

Soviet Union Is Defiant.

The workers' State organized as a State power not only has the right, but is in duty bound, to carry on a revolutionary war of defence when attacked by imperialists. The theory of "non-resistance" in the matter of imperialistic attack would be treachery against the international revolution. The Bolsheviki would be criminals if they did not consolidate the capability of the country of proletarian dictatorship to defend itself. "We have been defenders of the land and country, but such as defend the positions of Socialism," said Lenin.

The Soviet Union must strengthen the military power of the Soviet Union and defend themselves by force of arms and with the utmost energy in case the Soviet Union is attacked by the Imperialists and their Fascist vassals. The Communists of the other countries, as well as the honest workers of the whole world, are in duty bound to lend all their strength and means towards helping the proletarian State in its revolutionary defensive fight.

Youths Drown.

Two bodies found floating off Staten Island early yesterday, were later identified as being those of Edward Haynes, 17 years old and his friend, Aloysius Diehl, 16 years old, both of Jersey City.

Diehl was found floating in Prince's Bay, off the foot of Arbutus Ave., Huguenot. The body of Maynard was found in New York Bay off Graham Beach. The youths were drowned while in bathing Sunday.

My Prison Sun

By DAVID GORDON.

No Homer's rosy-fingered dawn
Designs the prison's heaven;
No rain can ever stop that sun
From rising just at seven.

You'll never find the sun at noon
Shining overhead and hot,
You'll only see a yellow glow
Burning sick above my cot.
No setting sun ensnares my sight
With mystic colors, hues and taints,
Without a warning night-time comes.
My steel-walled cell with darkness paints.

My incandescent prison sun,
Which does not shine from heaven,
From seven eats my eyes; sets nine,
To rise again at seven.

FRENCH PROPAGANDA ABOUT A GERMAN-AUSTRIAN ALIGNMENT

By V. G.

Taking advantage of the precarious situation in Europe and Asia, which threatens again to embroil the French in another war, the Parisian "grand semi-official" French press is raising the scare of a new Mitteleuropa to be realised through an alliance between Germany and Austria. It is strongly suspected that this cry is raised in order to prepare Czechoslovakia to abandon its hostile policy of maintaining high tariff walls against Austria, and it is not at all improbable that behind the propaganda of the French publicists, especially M. Jules Sauerwein, foreign editor of the Parisian "Journal," is the cold hand of Wall Street, whose Austrian investments are endangered because of tariff barriers maintained by bordering states.

Real War Danger Not Touched.

In a labored argument which leaves untouched the real threat of war in Europe—the series of provocations, forgeries and murders against the Soviet Union, accompanying the desperate efforts to build a bloc of reactionary nations against the workers' and peasants' government—Sauerwein depicts the union between Germany and Austria as almost an accomplished fact and draws his ghoulish conclusions therefrom.

In following the arguments of this French journalistic harlot, it is well to keep in mind the fact that only recently he was a visitor in the United States and therefore became more than familiar with the imperialist policy of Wall Street.

In the nine years that Austria has enjoyed as an "independent" nation, according to Sauerwein, she has several times been saved by the League of Nations from complete collapse and ruin, on the express condition that she remain a sovereign state and allow herself to be used as a buffer against the possible encroachments of Germany toward the Adriatic Sea; but that in order to maintain her independence, she must impose upon herself for the future "a regime of restrictions and privations" which no country could be expected to endure if there were any other way.

There are indications, M. Sauerwein thinks, that Austria would consider a union with Germany as a way out, far preferable to her precarious role of sham independence, but such a union could only be achieved in the light of day by the express permission of the League of Nations, in conformity with the Treaty of St. Germain. This the League would be unlikely to grant, particularly in view of the conclusions drained by the allies in 1918, when the Provisional Assembly at Vienna voted for the union of Austria with Germany, and the Germans had already prepared seats at Weimar for the Austrian Deputies. The allies would not hear of such a union, and declared the decision null and void.

Pretends to See Sly Conspiracy.

The only other way to effect a union, then, according to the political mind trained by the allies in 1918, when and subterranean method of achieving a de facto incorporation, "without using that word and without committing any official act; that is to say, by erecting Austria in every way as if it were a province of the Reich." This the wily Austrians have already begun to do. "On Feb. 5th Austria decreed the unification of criminal legislation. A little later came the assimilation of Austrians and Germans in matters of inheritance and guardianship. For several months the uniforms of the army have been identical in the two countries and the commission of the entente has learned that the same regulations and the same method of mobilization will be adopted by both countries in case of conflict. In respect to telegraphic and telephonic communication, the two countries profit from an interior tariff. Again, a cable has been established between Vienna, Prague and Nuremberg. In 1920 the two countries accorded each other in commercial relations the most favored nation treatment. Thanks to arrangements concluded in 1924, 1925 and 1926, the customs weigh has been very easy except for certain materials such as agricultural products and horses, on which Germany maintains very high duties in order to swing to her cause the Austrian peasants, who in general are not very favorable to incorporation. In each branch of production there exist Austro-German cartels. University professors travel from one country to another, belong to the same union and maintain the same pension funds. Dramatic authors, writers and musicians are united in the enjoyment of the privileges in the central syndicate in Berlin."

All these facts, one is led to suppose, are strawa pointing to the gradual absorption of Austria by Germany, culminating in the complete consolidation of 7,000,000 Austrians, an advance of her territory to within 100 kilometers of the Adriatic and to the borders of the Balkan States.

Terrorism Czechoslovakia With Speculations.

"The most troublesome phase of the situation," says M. Sauerwein, is that if the big powers by chance are finally brought to accept incorporation, there will thereafter be no chance of any stability resulting itself on the Continent. Czechoslovakia, completely locked in, would no longer be able to live. Yugoslavia would have her existance menaced by the bastions of Hungary thirsting for revenge and playing on the side of Germany. Italy would be confronted along the entire northern frontier by a neighbor so powerful that it would have no other choice than to wage war or to form a close alliance with large companies of Italians." Sauerwein finally declares that "incorporation means war" and that a remedy must quickly be found if this calamity is to be averted.

This is all very interesting speculation, and it is probable that the barrage of smoke conceals at least a small tongue of flame.

Britain and America Behind Scenes.

It is equally interesting and more to the point to speculate on something which is far more of a foundation in fact—that is the great rivalry of Britain and America throughout the whole world. No one can discuss the realignment of economic and political forces in Europe without taking into consideration the two great imperialisms into consideration. Capitalist political writers of all shades are careful not to mention this dominant factor. Behind all the diplomacy, the manoevering of statesmen, relentlessly proceeds the great economic struggle wherein the Wall Street imperialists strive to align on their side the nations of Europe.

Only last week the United States showed its hand in German-Austrian affairs by a series of loans and commercial treaties. It concluded a "favored nation" commercial treaty with Austria, floated a $30,000,000 loan to Germany based upon agricultural property as security, placed upon the market an additional $4,000,000 loan for the state of Hesse, and at the same time organized a new concern known as the International Germanic trust company for "the financing of commercial intercourse between America and the Central European business world."

Britain, through her dominant position in the league of nations, desperately strives to use her political power derived therefrom against the steady encroachment of American investment capital, but with dubious results. No one doubts her desperation at her predicament and anyone who knows European political and economic conditions can doubt for a moment that this great rivalry politically and economically must finally be tested on the field of mars.

In preparation for this struggle both Britain and America are indulging in provocations against the Soviet Union, because they know that this mighty proletarian power stands as the outpost of the world revolution, an inspiration to the revolutionary forces of the colonial as well as the capitalist countries of the world. The real threat of war is not to be sought as yet because of the internal rivalries of Central Europe, but in the international conspiracy against the Soviet Union.

B. & O. Willard Shows His Hands

By V. G.

The Baltimore and Ohio Plan of Cooperation was to solve all industrial ills. Labor and capital were to be partners in the management of industry. No more strife, no more strikes, no more disagreements. Everything was to be settled across the conference table. The era of good will was to be inaugurated.

Dan Willard, president of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, was one of the foremost exponents of this harbinger of peace and prosperity. And now, that Dan Willard is signed up and to a report made recently by a special committee last week of the Association of Railway Executives, according to "Labor," official organ of the railway unions. Nay, more, Dan Willard was the chairman of this committee, appointed in 1924 to bring in measures designed "to stabilize employment." The report is a violent attack on the 8-hour day, and aims to introduce the 10-hour day, eliminate time and a half for overtime. The slashing is disguised under the pleasant term of a "more flexible working day."

The paragraph which spills the beans is as follows: "If the day could be increased from eight to nine, and even to ten hours, in times of business activity, such a policy would enable the carriers to employ a more uniform force throughout the year and avoid the necessity of laying off or furloughing large numbers of men in times of business recession." Of course, the owners would not consider a proposition to share work in times of depression, so that the burden would not lie too heavily on those who are laid off, as is done now. The logical proposal is the 8-hour day, with special pay for overtime, as now; and no layoffs in slack time, but sharing of work equally among the members. This would take care of the "stabilization of employment," 4thcoat any victimization of workers. But this plan would mean payment for overtime; would mean no unemployed to batter down working" standards; and so the railway companies are opposed.

When the statement appeared, there was considerable protest, and Willard especially had to do some tall explaining. In a letter of May 31st he put it: "We expected such stuff from Rea, (former president of the Pennsylvania R. R.) and Loree (of the Delaware and Hudson); but Willard—we can't understand it."

In an interview with "Labor," Willard explained: "The plan would be for the men to work an extra hour or two each day in rush periods only, instead of forcing the railroads to employ extra men, who have to be discharged at the end of the seasons of increased activity. Adoption, of this arrangement would mean extra money for the men during the periods of increased activity. When business returned to normalcy, the men would only work eight hours a day."

But even this forced attempt to explain away the lengthening of hours with elimination of overtime does not satisfy, for as "Labor" says: "But all the railroad workers agree that if the camel of longer hours once gets his nose into the tent, he never will rest till he takes full possession."

Willard, Apostle of Harmony.

It is not so long ago that Willard was an honored guest at the banquet given by "Labor," the weekly newspaper of the railway unions of the railway labor magazines, in Washington, D. C. The Machinists' Monthly Journal for May, 1927, gives a 5 page account of this dinner, held March 16th at the New Willard Hotel, under the caption "An Interesting Event." It was a typical worker-employer cooperation gathering, with the following speakers: James P. Noonan of the Electrical Workers; Representative George Hnddleston of Alabama (Congressman); William Green, president of the A. F. of L.; Frank McKanna, vice-president of the Brotherhood of Railway Carman; former Governor Pinchot of Pennsylvania; and last but not least, Daniel Willard, president of the Baltimore and Ohio R. R.

President Green endorsed the scheme of cooperation between the companies and the unions. Willard's speech is given almost completa, taking up two closely printed columns, occupying 3 pages. Another column is given over to the toastmaster's speech, introducing Willard. Remember that this was the first time that a railroad president addressed one of "Labor's" banquets. Willard was praised for cooperation with labor by Mr. Kesting, editor of "Labor," who paid him this tribute: "Wherever railroad workers assemble the name of Dan Willard is spoken with respect and genuine affection. The B. & O. workers have done, for Mr. Willard, their part in transforming a tremendous deficit into a generous surplus." In his speech, after a "superb ovation," Willard referred to his membership in the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers as a young man, and then showed how much it meant to the state of mind of the workers to have their suggestions given the proper attention. No mention of the insignificant raise given the men, in proportion to the increased profits; and to the fact that even this raise was offset by changes in shop conditions. Just a wishy-washy speech of glittering generalities. But Willard by his grand stand play of cooperation captured the hearts of a great many railroad workers for a time. The trade union bureaucracy was working hand in hand with Willard. When things went wrong, and the workers clamored for action, the officials of the unions would show the "wonderful progress" of the B. & O. Plan. Dan Willard was held up as the ideal type of railroad executive; as the personification of the worker-employer cooperation plan.

What Means Cooperation?

Willard in his speech says that it began to come to him on his honeymoon, when the shopmen's strike began; and that this led to the B. & O. Plan. But what he fails to mention is that these would have come any strike, if the railway companies had not cut the shopmen's wages repeatedly to a point of desperation. Cooperation was entered into by the machinists, only after official bungling and treachery had weakened the unions and rendered them helpless. And instead of adopting measures to strengthen the unions through organization drives and amalgamation, the union officials bound the union with cords of steel and delivered it over bodily to the companies, as the price for union recognition and continued per capita into the Grand Lodge.

There have been no benefits from this so-called scheme of cooperation. No special wage increases, no special betterment of shop conditions. But rather, improved profits for the company. The plan has been one-sided, of benefit to the company, with the workers making suggestions for improvement in equipment and elimination of waste.

Why the Drive On the 8-Hour Day?

(1) Five of the nine signers of the report for the ten-hour day are from railways that are in the list of the 25 corporations with the largest profits in 1926. These are the Pennsylvania R. R., New York Central, Union Pacific, Baltimore and Ohio, and St. Paul R. R.

(2) Railroad dividends for 1926, according to the U. S. Department of Commerce figures, were $330,336,000, which surpassed all previous records.

(3) The average wage of railway employes paid on an hourly basis for 1926 was under $1,600.

In the face of large profits, and a low wage, why the drive for the ten-hour day? The answer is simple. The railway companies wish to increase their profits, and this is one of the means of doing it. On the basis of a struggle between the workers and the employers, it is easily understood. But when one has faith in Dan Willard and his cooperation plan, it cannot be explained, for it is contradictory to the basis of the cooperation plan. The trade union officials supporting the B. & O. plan, especially the officials of the I. A. of M. are confronted with two possibilities—(1) to renounce the worker-employer cooperation plan, and enter into struggle for better conditions, or (2) to help Willard and the other officials to force the plan down the throats of the membership. The I. A. of M. is weak, and that is why the officialdom of the I. A. of M. is weak and passive toward the employers. Only the active resistance of the membership to the introduction of the ten-hour day will defeat the plan.

But Willard's action shows that he used the B. & O. plan to rope the I. A. of M. membere in for the financial gain of his railroad, and that he would throw over the plan and adopt open warfare when it was advantageous to him. He shows that the B. & O. plan is a plan for the B. & O. Company, and not for the workers.

An immediate task for the progressive elements in the I. A. of M. is to conduct a nationwide campaign against the Baltimore and Ohio Plan, linking it up with Willard's advocacy of the ten-hour day.

FULLER PLANS DEATH FOR SACCO AND VANZETTI

Current Events

By T. J. O'FLAHERTY.

THE Austrian revolt has been satisfactorily disposed off for the time being and the American tourists agencies that had not anticipated such an unusual diversion as a rebellion when fixing a reasonable rate for the services rendered their customers may demand a bonus. In view of the fact —attested to by practically all capitalist correspondents—that revolution is foreign to the nature of the peace-loving Austrians, and that rare things command a higher price than common things, therefore since one revolution in Austria is worth more on the market than a dozen in Albania, we see no good reason why the American, tourists should not anticipate the wishes of the agencies and kick in without having to be asked.

IT would seem that a hungry and angry Austrian flies to a lethal weapon with as much alacrity as a poetical Irishman or a dreamy and skeptical Russian. (Read New York Times editorials for confirmation) We were under the impression that an Austrian's idea of heaven is a well bevelled paunch, a stein of beer and a game of pinochle. Revolution for what? It is undoubtedly true that this Austrian did on divers occasions in the past vary the monotony of this peaceful existence by indulging in sundry wars called by his masters for his masters. Still, those were legal wars sanctioned by international usage and part of the political etiquette established by tradition.

WHO would expect that the Austrian workers would commit such a crime against capitalist etiquette as to do a little shooting on their own and under their own mental steam? The blame must be laid somewhere. So with amazing originality the correspondents with one voice said "Moscow." That seemed to settle it, the how a handful of Communists could send hundreds of thousands to the barricades and on a general strike still leaves the question of blame in the air.

LEST an attempt at nature, perhaps a clumpsy should add to the general confusion, the cause of the revolt is substantially as follows: The living conditions of the Austrian workers have been growing worse, despite the illusory heaven created for them by their social-democratic leaders. Tho possessing the power to govern the country in the interests of the producing classes the socialist leaders were content to have the workers do the work while the bourgeoisie determined under what conditions.

FASCISTS murdered workers with impunity and the latest example of government partiality for those murderers was the spark that set fire to the inflammable indignation of the masses. The socialist leaders, following the tactics of the German socialists after the defeat of the Kaiser's army stuck to the masses in order to betray them and butcher the militants. It is true that the Austrian leaders did not have to indulge is such wholesale slaughter as their German prototypes in 1919, but the capitalists will forgive them for this indiscretion. Even murder may be carried to the point where it turns into a boomerang.

WITH the assistance of the socialists, the Austrian government has succeeded in disorganizing the spontaneous revolt of the workers. Tha socialist machine which has been able to maintain a firm grip on the masses until now, has received the first serious shock since the revolution that overthrew the Hapsburgs. The workers have learned in the fires of revolt the lesson which the Communists have been trying to teach them for several years. It is, that the socialist leaders are allies of capitalism and are as much opposed to social revolution as the employers. This newly-gained knowledge should be it possible to lay the basis for a Communist Party in Austria without which a successful revolution is a utopian dream.

NICARAGUAN ARMY INTACT; MARINES SLEW VILLAGERS

Kellogg Sneers at Cry For Independence

MANAGUA, Nicaragua, July 19.—A new attempt by the forces of General Sandino to check the raids and depredation of the mixed force of U. S. marines and Diaz constabulary at Ocotal is under way, according to dispatches received here.

The latest news is that the defenders of Nicaragua have cut off and surrounded the marines in the town of Ocotal, and have shot down one of the marine airplanes which had been bombing groups of agricultural workers and sleeping villagers throughout this vicinity under pretext of "preventing troops concentrations."

Soldiers Not Killed.

It appears that the majority of the 309 Nicaragians killed by the invaders in the battle day before yesterday were not armed liberals attacking the town, as the marine commander boasts, but merely sympathizers who cheered a small detachment of the Sandino Nicaraguan liberal or nationalist army when it was surprised by the marines and took position for defense. The liberal army deployed and formed a thin skirmish line, so was not severely cut up even by the bombs dropped from five American airplanes. But the airplane pilots soon shifted their aim, and took for target every dense group of non-combatants they saw, with fearful slaughter.

Anti-Imperialist Denounced.

WASHINGTON, July 19.—The conference here of the All-American Anti-Imperialist League has issued a ringing denunciation of the slaughter in Nicaragua, and brands it "one of the most infamous exhibitions of Imperialism and tyranny in all history."

A resolution has also been introduced into the Pan-American Labor Congress now in session by delegate De la Selva, of the Nicaraguan Federation of Labor severely condemning the action of the marines in killing the inhabitants of Ocotal.

Vultures Hover.

The preamble of the resolution referred to press reports of the conflict of Ocotal, how the field was left resembling "a huge graveyard" with vultures hovering over the scores of bodies.

"There does not exist a state of war between the United States and Nicaragua," the resolution set forth, "and there exists no dispute between the people of the United States and the people of Nicaragua."

Workers Slain.

A substantial number of those killed by the Americans, De la Selva asserted, were "members in good standing" of the Nicaraguan Federation of Labor, who took up arms because of their inability to redress their wrongs through political means.

"And," the document continued, "the Nicaraguan Federation of Labor solemnly declares in this Pan-American Congress that there will be no permanent peace in Nicaragua while intervention lasts, and that the organized workers of Nicaragua are ready to maintain their opposition to American or other foreign intervention in Nicaragua, perfectly conscious of the sacrifice that this implies."

By HARVEY O'CONNOR.

WASHINGTON, July 19 (FP). — Dramatically the issue of Yankee imperialism in Latin-America was thrown into the opening session of the fifth congress of the Pan-American Federation of Labor when a Nicaraguan delegate pledged that his people would "die fighting American marines."

At the close of the session, Salomon de la Selva, of the Nicaraguan Federation of Labor, rose to his feet and in turbulent flow of Spanish, declared he had just received reports that 300

JOHN PEPPER, AMERICAN REPRESENTATIVE ON THE PRESIDIUM OF THE COMMUNIST INTERNATIONAL

MOSCOW, U. S. S. R.—John Pepper has been selected as the representative of the Workers (Communist) Party of America to the Communist International. As the representative of the American Party he will also be a member of the Presidium of the Comintern. Pepper attended the recent plenum of the Executive Committee of the Comintern as a delegate of the American Party.

The Defense Can Win Only

If the Party members and sympathizers rush their help. No other means will pull us through. Thus far our case has taken many months. It has dragged through the Magistrate's Court, the Court of Special Sessions, and now the Federal Court is handling it.

Perhaps you are giving way under the long strain. But the bosses and Dollar Patriots, and the Federal Government, are not tiring. On the contrary they are bringing new pressure to bear upon our paper, and new forces are being mobilized in order to destroy it. The bosses have just begun to fight.

But in spite of the strikes and many other demands which are being made upon us, in spite of the severe pressure which is being brought to bear upon the Party and the left wing, we will show that no matter how long the fight lasts, the ruling class will not succeed, in destroying our paper. Already the GUARD THE DAILY WORKER FUND Certificates have been placed into the hands of our loyal comrades and supporters. Everywhere they are being received eagerly. We are looking forward to the opportunity to publish in The DAILY WORKER, the name of the first comrade, who sells a full book of certificates. Will you be the first?

British Soldiers and Police Murder a Group of Natives of India

SIMLA, Punjab, British India, July 19.—Three natives were killed and more than a score seriously wounded today when a body of British soldiers and police sought to disperse a crowd that had congregated.

The policy of the imperialist marauders in this part of India is to prevent even a small number of people congregating for fear of outbreaks against them. The crowd, numbering perhaps forty, did not disperse fast enough so a volley was fired point-blank into their midst, killing and wounding more than half of them.

This sort of terror rages through all the interior and the masses everywhere are seeting with discontent.

Seize Political Boss In Hotel Drug Raids

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J., July 19.—Five hotels and rooming houses were raided, twenty-six persons were arrested, and drugs valued at $60,000 seized here today. Federal, county and city authorities joined in the raids.

Among those arrested was George Stoess, political leader of the Third Ward and alleged proprietor of the Brevlin Hotel, one of the places raided. Two women were among the prisoners taken. Hundreds along the boardwalk watched the raiders, most of the places entered being just off the famous sea promenade.

State Servant Suicides.

DOYLESTOWN, Pa., July 19.—Ernest E. Rieker, 32-year old South Langhorne, Pa., resident, and former New Jersey State employee committed suicide in the county jail here last night, where he was awaiting trial on a double charge of murder. The body was discovered this morning by jail attendants.

CHIANG SEARCHES SHIP OF U. S. S. R.; MAKING ARRESTS

Insurrection Spreading In South China

SHANGHAI, July 19. — Chinese military authorities under Chiang Kai-shek together with white Russians raided today the steamer Henley chartered by the Soviet Commercial Fleet Syndicate before she left for Vladivostok.

Seven Soviet Union citizens were taken from the steamer; among them were several who had worked for a long time with the Nationalist Armies and advisers and were returning to the Soviet Union. Chinese passengers were also taken from the steamer, one of them a woman. All prisoners were immediately handcuffed. The Soviet citizens and Chinese were taken by a motor boat into the Chinese city.

Look For Borodin.

Those in charge of the illegal search stated several times they were looking for Borodin. All day today, beginning in the early morning, rumors have been afloat here that Borodin was due to arrive.

The Soviet consulate has taken steps to release those who were arrested. The steamer is detained here.

New Rising In Canton.

CANTON, July 19.—The insurrectionary movement has arisen again in the Shaokwang district (Kwangtung).

The Canton Military Command has dispatched troops with artillery to put down the uprising. The police have raided the students' boarding house attached to Sun Yat-sen University and have arrested many students.

However, his weakness consists in that he cannot count on the support of the peasants and workers who are organizing rapidly, and actually make up the larger part of the Chinese political organizations. Sacco and Vanzetti Do Not Eat; Determined to Die to Escape Tortures

BOSTON, July 19.—The Sacco-Vanzetti hunger strike continues. In their cells in the Cherry Hill section of the Charlestown prison, the condemned workers have refused all food since last Sunday.

Unless a favorable decision is handed down soon, it is feared that the men will not live long without food as they are in weakened condition due to their seven year confinement.

At breakfast yesterday Sacco refused all food and Vanzetti wetted his mouth with some black coffee.

News that the strike has been in progress for four days Warden Hendry confirmed the fact of its existence.

OHIO OPEN SHOP COAL OPERATION ENTIRELY FAILS

New York Coal Co. Has Few Scabs Cleaning Up

COLUMBUS, Ohio, July 19.—Open shop coal operation, which mine owners threatened for the middle of July, has resulted in a complete failure. Miners who went without orders from their officials in a body to Big Run, twelve miles south of Bellaire, to picket No. 3 mine of the Rail and River Coal Company returned today, reporting the company was not trying to mine any coal.

This was one of the concerns which took part in the ultimatum of several weeks ago, that if the miners' union did not settle on a basis of a wage reduction, the mines would be opened and run by strike-breakers.

The only coal company which is making a gesture at operation with scab labor is the New York Coal Co. Miners are picketing their workings at Lehrig and at Mine No. 3, at Buchwel. No coal is being mined at these places, but some men are cleaning out the mines.

Endowments for Harvard Balanced Against the Two Italian Workers' Lives

BOSTON, July 19.—Sacco and Vanzetti are doomed unless freed by mass protest. Either they will burn early in August in the electric chair at Charlestown State Prison, or they will be condemned to serve a worse fate—life imprisonment within the dark walls of the Charlestown prison.

Preferring death to the possibility of lingering torture of life imprisonment for a crime of which he is innocent, Vanzetti has started on a hunger strike which can end only in death, for Massachusetts is determined that there will be no justice either for him or Sacco.

Governor Fuller has made up his mind that the verdict ordered by the Infamous Thayer shall stand. Defense witnesses are browbeaten when they appear before him; all the prejudice of New England's wealthiest automobile dealer, whose fortune is estimated at $13,000,000, break forth when friends of the two condemned workers and independent witnesses try to tell him the truth. Mrs. Rose Sacco was among those put on the rack and beaten with a pitiless whip of three degree cross-examinations.

William G. Thompson, chief of defense counsel, whose respectability and brilliance were supposed to have determined the case in favor of Sacco and Vanzetti when he entered it, has been brushed to one side by Fuller. All the careful work of years of patient investigation has practically been tossed in the waste basket. The entire Madeiros confession, pointing to the Morelli gang as the real criminals who killed the paymaster and his guard at South Braintree, seven years ago, has been dismissed altogether.

Boston Plutes.

Boston, dominated by clerics and smug business men, is howling for an end to the investigation. "When in God's name are they going to execute those two rats," is their attitude. Rushing the two workers from Dedham to Charlestown prison, where they are to be electrocuted was hailed in the clubs of the wealthy as a real

VIENNA WORKERS GRIM AS TRAITOR LEADERS SCHEME

Communists Call Upon Labor to Act

VIENNA, July 19.—The city is quiet, following the calling off of the general strike by the Socialists, after their surrender to the Selpel government. But the masses feel cheated and may revolt again. The greatest precautions are being taken by Selpa and the Socialist mayor, Seitz, to prevent any demonstration on the day of the funeral of the 85 workers killed by police. Only the families of the victims and the Socialist officials will be there, according to present plans.

The cabinet and Mayor Seitz are still quarreling quietly over the question of the legality of the "municipal guards" created by Seitz to suppress the labor demonstrations. The government wants it done in future by the regular army.

COMMUNIST INTERNATIONAL HAILS UPRISING OF WORKERS IN VIENNA

MOSCOW, July 19.—The Executive Committee of the Communist International has issued the following manifesto on the Austrian situation:

TO THE WORKERS OF ALL COUNTRIES AND TO THE AUSTRIAN WORKERS:—Events of the greatest importance to the working class of the whole world are now taking place in Central Europe. The workers of Vienna have risen and for four days already the proletariat of Vienna and whole of Austria has been carrying on heroic struggle.

The general strike, the uprisings, the revolutionary mass conflicts in Vienna affect the very heart of Europe. The workers of the world take this as a fighting signal and watch their Austrian brothers with enthusiasm and inspiration. They know that the working class of Austria, which suffered greatly during the war and under the capitalist regime of "sanation" are fighting against the universal unbridled economic offensive of Austrian capital, the ally of other predatory imperialist powers.

Offensive Against Labor.

The Austrian bourgeoisie, at the behest of their imperialist guardians, want to destroy completely the eight-hour day and wipe away all social legislation for the workers. They want to make still worse the conditions of the working class, break up their organizations and adopt an open reactionary fascist policy.

Increased misery and want, the political slavery and the strengthening of fascism menaced the whole working class of Austria. This fact gives revolutionary impetus to the struggle of the Austrian working class. It is this that they are fighting against.

Weakness of Stabilization.

The sudden outbreak of the revolutionary workers in Austria exposes the precariousness of capitalist "stabilization" throughout Europe. This outburst shows that in epoch of "stabilization" revolutionary conflicts may break out at any moment. It also shows how the workers must fight against the capitalist offensive.

The working class of Austria must not stop half way in its anti-fascist struggle. The time has come when it is imperative to act; act boldly and with revolutionary determination.

Fate of Austrian Workers at Stake

The outcome of this struggle will affect the workers of all countries and also have tremendous influence upon the war projects of imperialism against the Union of Socialist Soviet Republics. Hesitation and half way measures or a withdrawal from the struggle at the present time would be tantamount to committing suicide. The workers of Austria must never forget that that is how the Italian proletariat could not carry its revolutionary uprising to the end and was beaten. The fight, now started, must be fought to the finish, otherwise Austria will become the victim of fascism and the imperialist powers.

It is precisely at this point that the bankrupt and treachery of the "le revolutionary," social-democratic, the ranks of the second (socialist) international, becomes revealed. For several years these "left" social-democrats have restrained the proletariat of Austria from the start of serious action against their enemies and deceivers, from any real struggle against reaction. For years these people have pursued a policy of close collaboration with the bourgeoisie and it was only to screen this disgraceful policy that they resorted to "left" phrases, with the help of which they held the workers within their ranks.

Parliamentary Illusions.

The social-democrats pacified the workers of Austria by maintaining that fifty-one per cent of the votes will suffice to secure peaceful realization of "socialism." They now have forty-five per cent of the electorate of the country and a considerable majority in Vienna. They are supposed to have transformed Vienna into a socialist island in a capitalistic ocean through their municipal policy.

Whither has that led? The social-democrats have forty-five per cent of the votes, but the fascists can kill workers and trample their most elementary right under their feet with impunity.

Beat Down Workers' Conditions.

The social-democrats have Vienna municipality in their hands but the police employ hundreds of machine-guns in shooting down workers in the streets of Vienna. The social-democrats have made Austria a "model democratic country," but in this very country the white terror menacingly raises its head." The social-democratic party even created an army of its own which is let loose against the workers, they surrendered ammunition from arsenal to bourgeoisie and now fascist and reactionary police use it to murder workers in the streets.

But the reformist policy of the social-democrats could not restrain workers from action. The masses began to act in spite of the social-democrats and when the time came for the actual struggle they acted in a revolutionary manner, against the will of the leadership of the social-democracy. And now, when the masses are actually fighting in a revolutionary manner for life or death the Austrian social-democrats are concerned only with one thing—to stifle the struggle as soon as possible.

Austro-Marxism Exposes Itself.

Brought face to face with historical tasks the "left revolutionary" leaders of the Austrian social-democracy show they are no different than Noske and Schiedemann. The formation of a special "Committee of Action" by these forces, consisting of members of the social-democratic "republican Schutzbund" which together with state police "restore order" and struggle against Viennese workers, throws glaring light upon the despicable role of the Austrian social-democrats and shows clearly that they (Otto Bauer & Co. leads. The bankruptcy and treachery of the Austro-Marxism must be exposed and must decisively be condemned in the eyes of the workers of all the world.

Fight Social-Democratic Leaders.

Comrades! Workers! Expose the betrayal of the Austrian social-democrats! Refuse to follow their compromising, treacherous instructions. Put an end to the parliamentary intrigue and bargaining of the social-democratic leaders who dream of coalition government. Do not stop the strike and continue the struggle until you attain your goal. Anyone who surrenders or shows weakness at the time of the decisive struggle of the working class against the fascist bourgeoisie is doomed. The general strike must be continued until the Seipel government is overthrown.

Fight for the arming of the workers and disarming the fascist organizations and police. Fight for the formation of Workers' Soviets in Vienna and the whole country for mobilization of the masses and as organs of leadership in the struggle. Fight for the establishment of a workers' and peasants' government. Stop the fierce campaign against the Communists! Hundreds of workers, most of them Communists, have been arrested. The headquarters of the Communist Party and the Young Communist League of Austria have been closed down. The whole class struggle is pictured as "the Moscow affair." This happens in a country where the social-democracy has hundreds of thousands of members, a country which is pictured as a social-democratic "paradise."

Yes, the Communists did stand and they stand today in the front ranks of the struggle. They fought together with the masses, not against them as did the social-democrats. The working masses are now fighting for the revolutionary battle-cries of the Communist Party, not for the bankrupt reformist policy of the social-democrats.

The Communist Party of Austria has fulfilled its duty today and will in the future fulfill its revolutionary duty. Hence the hatred of Communists by the social-democrats and the bourgeois government. Hence, also the international and Austrian proletariat must show their full solidarity with the Communist Party of Austria, and hence Austrian workers must follow its leadership.

Intrigue of Seipel Regime.

The reactionary Seipel government, which is but an instrument in the hands of the imperialist powers is ready to fight against the workers to the end. Not content with the bloodshed that has already occurred it calls up new forces from the rural districts, declares martial law, threatens the intervention of foreign troops.

This reactionary government must be overthrown!

The forces sent against the workers must join them with arms in their hands. Not a single foreign soldier should enter Austrian territory to crush Austrian workers.

Fearful of their moneybags the "national" bourgeoisie wants to sacrifice country to monarchist Hungary, fascist Italy, Czecho-Slovakia and the imperialists and drown it in the blood of the working class. This must not be!

Workers of the countries bordering Austria are duty bound to fight with all means at their disposal against interventionist plans of their governments. The workers of Germany, Czecho-Slovakia and other countries must give all possible support to the Austrian working class in its revolutionary struggle. By doing so they will at the same time fight for their own vital interests because the defeat of the Austrian workers will lead to an attack on the workers of other countries and the transformation of Austria into an obedient instrument of imperialist cliques which are now preparing military offensive against the Soviet Union.

Must Carry Out Revolution.

The Communist International sends its warm revolutionary, militant greetings to the workers of Vienna and of Austria. Let the workers of Vienna and of Austria know that in this moment of trial the workers of all countries are with them. The struggle will continue no matter how the social-democratic leaders try to choke Austrian uprising.

The July storm which broke out in Austria opened up a new path to the Austrian workers. Great revolutionary tempests are ahead. Barricades in the streets show how capable the working class is, how it will fight for its interests in the cause of the proletarian revolution.

Workers, toiling peasants, young workers, soldiers, rally to the battle for the victory of the revolution!

Rally to the assistance of the Viennese workers and the Austrian proletariat!

Down with the social-democratic traitors!

Long live merciless struggle against fascism and reaction!

Long live the armed proletariat!

Long live Workers' Soviets in Austria!

Down with the Seipel government!

Long live the victory of Red Vienna and the victory of the Austrian working class!

Lindbergh delivered a speech to 2,000 workers and thanked them for helping him make his flight possible.

of his fellow-countrymen had been shot down by American marines.

Will Fight to Death.

"I" declare, in behalf of the Nicaraguan Federation of Labor," he cried; "that if the United States marines are not withdrawn, they will have to destroy the entire Nicaraguan people. We prefer death to slavery. We will not submit to imperialism. Rather we will die fighting American marines than become slaves in our own country."

Later De la Selva told Federated Press that the Nicaraguan Federation does not recognize the "peace" dictated by Henry L. Stimson, Coolidge's private envoy, "The liberals and conservatives made that peace," he declared, "not the laboring people. We are not concerned in the quarrels of those two political parties and certainly are not bound by their private agreements."

General Moncado, who signed the peace with Stimson, has broken with Juan Sacasa, the constitutional liberal president, according to De la Selva. The masses of the people however are still as fiercely opposed to Yankee aggression as ever. Given leadership, they will fight until either liberty or death is won.

"General Sandino," the brilliant young Nicaraguan added, "is no bandit chieftain, as reported in the papers. He is a patriot, surrounded by hundreds of my country's best men. They will not lay down their arms. They represent the best elements in Nicaragua."

De la Selva appealed to the Pan-American Congress to demand the withdrawal of American marines.

Green Favors Intervention.

President William Green of the A. F. of L., in a letter to Secretary of State Kellogg, although not asking the withdrawal of American forces, urges him to "prevent the use of armed force in Nicaragua." "The exercise of force, which would result in the loss of human life," he wrote, "would no doubt create great resentment against the government among the people of Latin-American republics and cause feelings of profound regret in the minds of many people residing within our own land."

Kellogg Sneers at Nicaragua.

WASHINGTON, July 19. — Secretary of State Kellogg replied to the letter of President Green of the A. F. of L., with a terse letter, brutally insulting to the Nicaraguan nationalists who do not wish to be conquered and ruled by the U. S.

"General Sandino," said Kellogg, "is a bandit and his followers are common outlaws." Kellogg intimated that the American forces in Nicaragua would continue to regard all independence movements as banditry.

A Big Killing.

It is pointed out here that 300 men killed is a considerable slaughter, not that many men fell during the invasion of Mexico by "Black Jack" Pershing some years ago.

That section of congress which has all along opposed the conquest of Nicaragua by the U. S. and those who find that such incidents as that at Ocotal shock their constituencies are expected to severely criticize the administration. Administration strength is weaker in the coming session, and most of the newly elected congressmen are opposed to such a crude form of imperialism as that of the U. S. in Latin-America at present.

Two liberal organizations have protested to President Coolidge against further American occupation of Nicaragua.

The Women's International League in a telegram petitioned President Coolidge to "forbid any repetition of hostilities, especially the bombing of unfortified towns, endangering the lives of non-combatants and children."

The People's Reconstruction League requests recall of marines from Nicaragua, China, "and other places where they are illegally conquering or threatening peoples to entrench American exploiters, in order to make possible some degree of success in disarmament."

Indians Flatter Cal With Name of "Leading Eagle"

RAPID CITY, S. D., July 19.—The political publicity managers of Cal Coolidge who have been encouraging his clownish huffoonery have at last hit upon a name for the Indians to give him. He is to be called "Leading Eagle," by virtue of his initiation into the tribe of the Sioux. As Pocohontas conferred certain Indian blessings upon Captain John Smith in the early days of the Virginia settlement, so Coolidge is to have his Indian maiden named "Rosebud Yellowrobe," daughter of "Chief Chauncey Yellowrobe." The ceremony is supposed to be followed by smoking the pipe of peace and an Indian dance to the accompaniment of tom-tom music.

workers' own viewpoint they as yet know nothing about the cruel tactics employed to suppress the labor movement by the Nanking military authorities here."

General Yanz Fu, Shanghai defense commissioner, has raided a number of labor organizations and arrested forty persons, eight of whom were taken from the foreign concession with the assistance of the municipal police.

(By Nationalist News Agency).

SHANGHAI, July 19. — J. B. Powell, publisher of the China Weekly Review, in an editorial declares that the Chinese strike against taxation without representation has forced the municipal council to appoint a committee to investigate the matter of redneing municipal expenditures. He refers to municipal extravagance and inefficiency caused by the British clique in maintaining the settlement to "provide a host of Englishmen and Scotsmen with nice fat jobs whereas merchants have to scrape and save in order to pay expenses.

"Many United States governors would look with envy on the salary paid to heads of departments whose principal qualifications have been being good propagandists to maintain and extend foreign jurisdiction.

The cost of running this municipality is way out of proportion to the benefits which the general public, foreign business men included, receive. At least half the foreign employes of the settlement could be dispensed with without detriment to the service."

"White" Russian Gunmen.

Powell further points out that money is wasted by employing "White" Russians wholesale as a sort of standing army.

The investigating committee incindes only Englishmen and the Britlicized American, Stirling Fessenden, who is the chairman of the Municipal Council. Therefore Powell has little hope that much good will come out of the committee, for the English are unlikey to urge a reduction of their fellow Britishers' salaries. If they did they would likely be called "Bolsheviks."

Japan Steals Railroad.

Under the heading, Japanese Grab Shantung Railway," Powell points out that the Japanese troops have not only taken over the railway from Tsingtao to Tsinan, but have brought along a complete staff of railway operators, including engineers, telegraphers, station-agents, etc., indicating a long continued occupation. He declares that Japan aims to prevent the Nationalists from getting to Chihli where they would menace Chang Tso-lin, the "Manchurian bandit puppet who has protected Japanese interests in that area for so many years."

Rank and Hapgood, Strike Leaders, at Chautauqua of Labor

By ART SHIELDS

PASSAIC, N. J., July 15. (FP).—The Passaic Labor Chautauqua brought quick returns. More than 200 workers, inspired by the 7-day series of meetings, have applied for membership in the trade unions, says Paul W. Fuller, who conducted the affair. Robert Bardley, president, and George Walsh, secretary of the Passaic Trades and Labor Council, were enthusiastic at the results of this new method of education and organization.

Both the Paterson and Newark central labor bodies are bidding for the next chautauquas. Backed by the officers of the New Jersey Federation of Labor, Fuller expects to stage two weeks more of frolicking entertainment and organiation campaigning in the north end of the manufacturing state.

Rain Interferes.

Only a thunder storm prevented the biggest workers' gathering since the strike on Sunday afternoon session, the seventh day. Six thousand assembled at First Ward Park till chested rain and lightning broke up the meet. A thousand of the braver spirits, however, collected at the Public High School auditorium where the regular sessions were held.

It was a great week for the Passaic workers. As the days went on the fun became faster at the chautauqua sessions. Clara Johnson, Fuller's assistant, in charge of entertainment, found new and gayer talents coming forward day by day. Textile union choruses, hosiery union dancers, and brilliant labor singers from New York, led by James Phillips, a radio star, jazzed up the nights to the joy of the workers and their children.

Spencer Miller, Jr., national executive secretary of the Workers Education Bureau, spoke at the opening and closing sessions. Thomas F. McMahon, president and Sara Cotboy, secretary of the United Textile Workers of America, spoke, urging the still unorganised workers to line up with their union brothers. Dr. Jesse Holmes, professor of philosophy at Swarthmore College and Theresa Wolfson, labor author, were among the dozen speakers who took the platform at the closing sessions.

The 1926 strike came to the foreground with the appearance of Gustav Deak, president of the Botany local of the U. T. W. and one of the most popular leaders of the late struggle. But though Deak personifies the spirit of the strike his talk was that of a conservative unionist, and he pledged the support of the Passaic textile workers to the work of the Workers Education Bureau in Passaic. Powers Hapgood, striking coal miner, drew cheers as he told of the gallant struggle of 170,000 bituminous coal diggers.

The night strike is over and 16,000 textile workers, most of them unemployed, face a difficult month till the busy season opens. But their union, still a minority movement, has been braced for the task before it.

Govt. to Probe Ticket Scalping for Big Bout

The government evinced a keen interest today in the forthcoming Dempsey-Sharkey battle. On order of U. S. Attorney Tuttle, an investigation of the ticket sale for the fight was opened before U. S. Commissioner Coller.

Tuttle is said to have been informed that choice ringside seats have fallen in the hands of scalpers who are disposing of them for premiums of $10 to $75 above the box office price. The informer said none of these tickets have been obtainable by the public through the box office.

To Explain Rail Tearing.

The president of the Long Island Railroad, George Le Boutillier, is to appear today at the hearing of the Transit Commission on the proposed unification of rapid transit lines, to explain the action of the railroad in beginning the tearing up of the railroad track on the old Manhattan Beach line from Neck Road south to Sheepshead Bay.

L. L. D. Announces Four Sedition Cases Thrown Out of Court; One Held

PITTSBURGH, (FP) July 19.—Quashing of indictments against 8 defendants arrested in the "red raids" of May Day 1922, and indicted under the Pennsylvania sedition act has been announced by the International Labor Defense. The defendants, held 4 years under $5,000 to $10,000 bail, were Max Jenkins, Tom Myerscough, Margie Pasternak, John Urban, A. Rubens, George Katulelis, A. Voytulik, and J. Kovalsky.

In throwing out the case the court said that "the indictment does not contain any sufficient allegation to sustain a conviction under any of the courts." Yet Heracek, who went to trial was found guilty on two counts, though he is out on appeal.

lished here today, exposes the treacherous role of the leaders of the Austrian Social Democracy and points out the complete bankruptcy of "Austrian Marxism." The Comintern calls upon the Austrian proletariat to continue the general strike, overthrow Seipel's government, and demand the arming of the workers, disarming of the Fascist organizations and police, the creation of Soviets thruout the country for mobilizing the masses and leading their struggles, and the creation of their workers and peasants government.

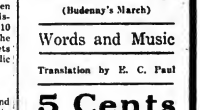
Pravda Denounces Socialists.



The Moscow Pravda in a leading article published today points out that the Austrian socialist have for many years poisoned the Austrian proletariat with parliamentary illusions. Today, Pravda states, the workers can see for themselves how this renowned parliamentary democracy turns out to be for the workers the most ruthless and open dictatorship of the Bourgeoisie.

Communists Lead.

In these days of the greatest revolutionary enthusiasm of the masses, says Pravda, and of the unprecedented betrayal of the workers by the socialists, the Austrian Communist Party is again and again acting as the only party of the revolutionary proletariat and as the latter's true revolutionary vanguard.

Emancipation from Austro-Marxian influence, declares Pravda, is actually a question of life and death for the Austrian proletariat. Only by going contrary to social democracy, by arming itself, by organizing soviets, and again, counter to the social democracy, putting up squarely the question of dictatorship can the proletariat win any actual rights.

BUFFALO WORKERS RESPOND TO THE CALL FOR "WAR AGAINST THE WAR!"

BUFFALO, N. Y., (By Mail)—Workers of Buffalo joined the "War Against the New War" campaign of the Workers (Communist Party at a gathering addressed here by J. Louis Engdahl, editor of The DAILY WORKER, who has just returned from the Soviet Union.

This was the sixth gathering of this kind that Engdahl has addressed recently, the others being held at Boston and Worcester, Mass.; at Philadelphia and Pittsburgh, in Pennsylvania, and Cleveland, Ohio.

"One of the big dangers in the face of 'The New War Danger' is that the American working class may lull itself into inactivity in the belief that there is no war danger," said Engdahl. "This is the worst kind of a delusion."

Engdahl pointed out that war is actually being carried on at the present time against Nicaragua and China, but, this is only preliminary to the new war that is being developed against the Soviet Union, the open hostilities of which were actually inaugurated with the assassination of Peter L. Voikov, the Soviet Ambassador to Poland, who was shot down on the platform of the railroad station at Warsaw.

Engdahl pointed out that while a host of British spies and provocative agents were operating against the Soviet Union, the international bankers of Wall Street were busy in their way making loans to the fascist borders states along the western frontier of the Workers' Republic. He cited the financial aid recently given the Pilsudski reaction in Poland, the catspaw of the world reaction. James Campbell, member of the Moulders' Union, and delegate to the Buffalo Central Labor Council, acted as chairman.

THE DRUJELOVSKY CASE

MOSCOW, July 6 (By Mail). — On the 8th of July, the Military Division of the Supreme Court, in Moscow, there began the hearing of the case of Drujelovsky, the notorious forger, against whom was preferred the charge that while in the service of the Second Section of the Polish General Staff he was engaged in espionage against USSR and that he had been commissioned by secret intelligence service of foreign states to compose for them false forged documents allegedly belonging the Soviet government and Comintern and liable to cause the rupture of treaties and diplomatic relations entered into with USSR.

Having deserted from the Red Army in 1919, Drujelovsky illegally crossed the frontier into Finland and from there was sent into Yudenitch's army. After the latter had been finely defeated, Drujelovsky entered the service of the Second Section of the Polish General Staff and executed various secret tasks imposed by the latter. At the end of 1923, Drujelovsky settled in Berlin, where he soon organized a "fabric" of forged documents which he was asked to supply not only to agents of various Intelligence services but even to ambassadors and envoys. Thus, the Bulgarian minister at Berlin, Popoff, many times addressed himself to Drujelovsky with various orders. One of these orders was the "Comintern's letter of instructions" which, for all its patently gross forgery figured as one of the genuine "documents" in the judging of the case of the blowing up of the cathedral at Sophia. The same documents were presented as genuine to the Council of Ambassadors in Paris and thanks to this the Bulgarian government obtained permission to increase its armed forces.

In the middle of 1925, a Rettinger, an agent of the Polish Intelligence service at Berlin, proposed to Drujelovsky that he should compose a forged document as to the railway catastrophe in the Danzig corridor having been caused by German communists. This document Drujelovsky could not prepare in time as he was arrested by the Berlin police. He was released at the request of the Bulgarian minister Popoff, but was soon re-arrested and kept in jail until November, 1925, when he was released and told to leave Prussia, and of June, 1926, Drujelovsky illegally crossed the Soviet frontier and was arrested by the State Political Department.

Drujelovsky confessed his guilt in all the accusations against him, outpointing however that in the composition of forged documents he was only a technical executor while the real authors of the forged documents were the governments which were conducting and organized anti-Soviet campaign.

Finance Minister In Spanish Cabinet Resigns His Post

MADRID, July 19.—Jose Calvo Sotelo, minister of finance in the fascist cabinet of Primo De Rivera, resigned officially today because of the stringent financial condition of the government which is facing a crisis. Taxes have enormously increased under the bloody and extravagant regime of the bandits and the small bourgeoisie are complaining about their lot as victims of the rapacity of the government. Repressive measures have been taken against lodges and other middle-class societies. The radical workers are endeavoring to capitalize the discontent of large sections of the population for a movement against the dictator.

So dangerous is the situation that the official announcement of the resignation has been held up until a successor has been appointed.

Lauch Bronx Ferries.

Fitting ceremonies marked the launching today of two new ferryboats which will be used to connect the Bronx with Harts Island, North Brothers Island and Riker's Island. About two hundred city officials and prominent citizens of upper Manhattan and the Bronx were gathered at the foot of Twenty-third street, Brooklyn, to watch Mrs. Alfred E. Smith, wife of the Governor, christen the "Greenwich Village," and Mrs. Joseph V. McKee, wife of the President of the Board of Aldermen, christen the "Mott Haven."

Advisory Commission Frames Sacco, Vanzetti

forerunner of the governor's ultimate decision and was greeted by little short of cheers.

Commission Against Defendants.

The advisory commission is dead set against Sacco and Vanzetti. Grant, the two by four politician-author, was convinced from the start that the "investigation" was unnecessary. His mind was made up before the first witness had been heard. And Stratton and Lowell, both university heads, with heavy endowments to raise, have to think of where the money would come from if they decided in favor of justice for two "reds." Already Harvard has lost money, it is reported, because members of the law faculty have been unduly favorable toward mere justice.

When his decision is made public condemning Sacco and Vanzetti either to burn or rot, Fuller will of course have a smug little statement ready for the press. With all its polite phraseology, it had might well read: "Turn on the juice, boys, while we sing the Star Spangled Banner."

BOSTON, July 19, (INS).—The hunger strike of Nicola Sacco and Bartolomeo Vanzetti, convicted of murder and sentenced to die in the electric chair the week of August 10, did not have any effect upon the investigations of their cases by Governor Alvan T. Fuller and the special advisory committee, appointed by the chief executive.

As usual the conferences were behind closed doors and the witnesses declined to comment upon their discussions.

Hunger Strike Against Secrecy.

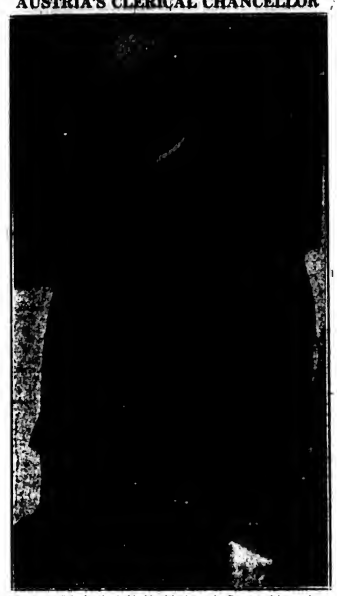
(By Federated Press).

BOSTON, July 19, (FP). Sacco and Vanzetti are starving themselves to cheat the electric chair. The two Italian workers believe their doom is sealed.

They are protesting against the secrecy with which Governor Alvan T. Fuller is surrounding his inquiries into their case. They protest his denying them a chance to refute false witnesses. Not even their counsel is permitted to challenge the untruths told to the governor in secret hearings. Defense attorney William G. Thompson is not given the names of witnesses appearing before Fuller nor has he been invited to argue his case.

Hostile to Defense.

Defense witnesses before Fuller and his advisors have been received with little-concealed hostility. Mrs. Lois B. Rantoul, grand-daughter of James Russell Lowell found Fuller apparently accepting the discredited state's witnesses. He threw the prosecution's arguments to her, those based on testimony of Lola Andrews, who repudiated her testimony, denied her repudiation later, and repeated repudiation and denial of it again.



Ignore Editor of "Life."

Robert Benchley, dramatic editor of Life, was challenged by Fuller to show where in the record the trial was unfair. Benchley thought he had been called because of his affidavit on Judge Webster Thayer's prejudice against Sacco and Vanzetti. But he was not asked about that.

Fuller scornfully told 21-year-old Beltrando Brini, Boston University student, "your parents taught you the story." Brini was the 14-year-old Plymouth boy who assisted Vanzetti sell eels the Christmas Eve of the Bridgewater crime for which Vanzetti got 12-15 years.

THE archduke not being able to hold his own with plebian artists in Hollywood decided to make a touch. He wired the Hungarian minister at Washington, with the request that the latter assist him in getting a loan from Hungarian friends in New York. The minister replied that he did not want to turn the embassy into a relay station for funds for the aristocratic dead beat. This angered the archduke very much who retorted that the count was only a hickey in his family before the revolution. He might have added that this former lackey had sense enough to marry one of the Vanderbilt girls which makes it possible for him to be a minister and entertain without having to perform menial tasks in a studio.

ON receipt of the minister's telegram the archduke grew as violent as a hungry aristocrat could grow under the circumstances. It is bad enough to be refused a loan or hampered in its pursuit by anybody, but to be treated with contumely by a former butler in your family is positively unbearable. What would you expect an aristocrat to do? Let the archduke speak for himself:

"I received today your offeuding telegram. It is diffieult for me to answer it because you were before the war only a lackey of my family. But I will say that a duel can be arranged and I slap in your face my fighting glove." Thus spaketh the archduke. But his troubles are not nearly over. The poor fellow cannot very well fight a duel in the United States since the practice is almost as hazardous here as publishing an intelligent novel. And he has no money with which to pay his passage to [illegible]

WE respectfully suggest to the Hungarian minister in Washington that it would be a decent thing for him to pay the Archduke's passage with some of the Vanderbilt money. How the devil can an archduke fight if he does not want to fight in an alley or go to Cicero, Illinois? But even a brave archduke does not care to fight when the chances are all against him. So we move that a collection be taken up to provide him with his fare to Europe.

ANOTHER glorious victory can be chalked up to the credit of our gallant marines. One of the neatest slaughtering jobs ever pulled off outside of Chicago stockyards was the butchering of two or three hundred Nicaraguans by American marines and aviators with only one man killed on the American side. This is cause for national congratulation. Why not bring back the body of the dead marine and bury him alongside the unknown soldier? Surely Nicaragua must be punished for such an insult. The idea of a group of "outlaws"—that's what our Mr. Kellogg called them—daring to insist on the right to live in their own country! Such impertinence must be punished. What of it if one of our reasons for going to war with Germany was to defend the right of self determination for small nations?

WHEN the king of England goes to Scotland to shoot grouse he is driven in a wheel chair to the hunting grounds and the fat lazy, birds are prodded into a semblance of activity. Between cocktails and highballs his majesty takes shots at the birds. Outside of the casualties among the Scotch—chiefly of the highball clan—the dead are all fowl. The king is not taking any chances but compared to the cowardly conduct of the American marines in butchering almost unarmed Nicaraguans the king's diversion equals in bravery and disregard for personal safety the action of the famous yokel from Tennessee, captain Alvin York, who single-handed captured a German battery and put a regiment to [illegible]

Chinese Workers and Peasants Beg Aid to Stay Toll of Famine

When in 1921, the Russian proletariat called upon the workers of the world to stand by, the International Workers' Relief issued a call for aid, that resulted in over a million dollars being raised in support of the famine stricken revolutionary workers and peasants of the Soviet Union.

In every country of the globe the workers formed relief organizations in defiance of capitalism and supported the Russian revolutionary army—workers and peasants—and today ten years after the revolution that country stands as a bulwark for the protection of the entire working class the world over.

Unfetter China.

Imperialism is again preparing to send the four horsemen over the land. China is the center of attraction—through China the blood sucking vultures of capitalism and imperialism hope to reach at the heart of Soviet Russia where a decade ago the chains of slavery were broken and the death sentence of capitalism pronounced.

China today faces the alternative, either to be a free race of Chinese people, governing their own land, or remain miserable slaves of capitalist exploitation. China is fighting, millions of workers and peasants have taken up arms. Their cry is down with capitalism and imperialism, away with exploitation—China for the Chinese—Long live the Workers' and Peasants' Government—Equality of opportunities and justice.

Weapon of Starvation.

Starvation is a favored weapon of capitalism, the revolutionary army of China is bleeding and hungry. The international working class and every friend of working class emancipation must rally to the support of the revolutionary army of China, even as they did in 1921 when capitalism was defeated in its war of starvation against Soviet Russia. The revolutionary workers, peasants, and army of China depend upon the workers and lovers of freedom of all countries to supply them with the means that will stop the bleeding of their wounds and the hunger of the children, women and fighters of the revolution. Long live the workers' and peasants' dictatorship, over that of capitalism.

The International Workers' Aid, "the only working class organization in America," calls upon all who believe in the cause for which the Chinese workers and peasants are fighting to immediately send every dollar they can possibly spare to the I. W. A. national headquarters, 1653 W. Madison St., Chicago, from where it will be forwarded through the Central Committee of the W. I. R. to Mme. Dr. Sun Yat Sen in charge of the relief work of the revolutionary army in China.

Mussolini Gloats Over Liberties of Italians Buried Under Fascism

ROME, July 19.—Mussolini, in his preface to the resolutions of the Grand Council of Fascismo, now collected in book form, terms it the "book of our faith" and calls upon every fascist to use it as the "infallible compass of their every activity."

The collected resolutions cover a period of four years, from the first sitting of the Grand Council in January, 1923, to April, 1927, and purport to show the gradual evolution of the fascist doctrine and the building up of the fascist state.

Mussolini's preface is full of paranoic drivel about the "glorious edifice of fascismo" built upon the ashes of the old liberal democratic regime. He attributes the capture of power by the fascist party to the organization of the fascist militia, which murdered and harried the workers and burned and pillaged their homes, newspapers and social clubs, and forced them into the fascist unions at the point of the bayonet. The fascist militia, he says, literally signed the death warrant of the old liberal democratic form of government, "which fascismo has buried forever."

He boasts that "the twantieth century in Italy will be known by only one name—Fascismo," but neglects to add that this name will stand for a bloody terror and repression that has never been surpassed in history since the days of Nero, and that it will be remembered with hate and execration long after the puny Duce will have been swept into the limbo of oblivion by the onward march of the Italian workers toward economic freedom and liberty.

Mental Dynamite

This is what the Los Angeles troops call the Daily Worker. When a bundle of Daily Workers strikes into the midst of a group of workers, whose minds have been closed by years of buncombe from the columns of the capitalist press, they have all the stimulating and explosive power of a stick of dynamite.

Conservative and anti-labor ideas are blown up like so much debris after an explosion. In the drive for Five Thousand New Readers for the Daily Worker we have in mind the planting of thousand of such sticks of mental dynamite in the minds of workers throughout the country.

The resulting explosions will rock the structure of capitalist society to its very roots. It will crack the imprisoning wall of capitalist culture and open the way for the ideas which will eventually free humanity from the yoke of capitalism.

Are you doing your share to explode the cobwebs with mental dynamite. Are you doing your share to spread the Daily Worker in the drive for Five Thousand New Readers.

Smash the Massachusetts Death Plot!

Every day it becomes clearer that the state of Massachusetts has no intention of granting Sacco and Vanzetti a new trial or of freeing them.

They will go to their fiery deaths in the electric chair on August 10 or to a living death in a Massachusetts prison cell until life leaves their tortured bodies.

The "investigation" authorized by Governor Fuller is a dance of death.

It is the sole concession made to the millions thruout the world who know that Sacco and Vanzetti are being sacrificed to satiafy the blood-lust of a brutal ruling class. The "investigation" is a ghastly farce and the Back Bay clubmen loll and laugh as Sacco and Vanzetti stare at the blank walls of the death-cell and count the hours left to them.

Authentic information as to the attitude of Governor Fuller and his advisory commission has been obtained and there is no mercy in their hearts for Sacco and Vanzetti. They are making a gesture to save the "fair name of Massachusetts justice" but their purpose is deadly.

The sole purpose of the "investigation" was to arouse false hope and still all protest. It has succeeded in a large measure. It is still easy in America to deceive the masses.

But everyone has not been fooled. There are workers who know that only mass protest, rising ever higher, is the only guarantee that Sacco and Vanzetti will not be murdered, that they will be freed.

From now until Sacco and Vanzetti are out of prison, in the ranks of their comrades, there must be no let-up in the mass demand that the Massachusetts conspiracy against two innocent workers end. Its long-drawn out torture of two workingmen must cease.

Sacco and Vanzetti must be freed.

Unity of all forces in the struggle, tireless exposure of the frame-up, unending protest whose din will give the Massachusetts authorities no rest, uncompromising loyalty to the struggle of the working class which they symbolize—these are the means at hand and they must be utilized to the utmost.

With the Pollyannas who were so elated by the appointment of the "investigation" commission that they abandoned the fight for freeing Sacco and Vanzetti, there must be no further compromise. If Sacco and Vanzetti go to the electric chair or are imprisoned for life these elements must take the blame. Never has it been more apparent than now that Massachusetts justice is class justice, that Governor Fuller represents the capitalist class and that the Sacco and Vanzetti case is a class case.

Likewise, those workers and representatives of workers who fail to do their utmost to arouse the working class to the fact that not only Sacco and Vanzetti but the whole working class movement of America is on trial, have strengthened the hands of the executioners.

Let there be no more parleying and diplomacy.

Two innocent workers await death in Massachusetts—a quick death in the electric chair or a lingering death in prison. If this murder is committed, the working class in the years to come will pay in blood and tears for their weakness.

Sacco and Vanzetti must be freed!

Imperialist Murders in Nicaragua and the Role of American "Labor Leaders."

Work has begun on the American canal across Nicaragua.

American imperialism has murdered more than 300 Nicaraguans and the American working class can see clearly now the bloodthirstiness with which Wall Street carries out its plans for the subjugation of Latin America.

Likewise, Latin American workers and peasants will now know how to appraise the recent trip of the "good will" flyers and the protestations of friendliness for Latin America made by Coolidge and Kellogg.

Cold blooded butchery is the only phrase which in any way characterizes the slaughter of these Nicaraguans. Swooped upon by airplanes against which no defense was possible, bombed and raked with machine-gun fire from above, the poorly armed Nicaraguan soldiery were slaughtered like sheep.

Another great victory for American arms has been recorded. We quote from an Associated Press dispatch:

"Major G. D. Hatfield, commander of the marines at Ocotal, and his fellow-officers today were receiving congratulations from the Nicaraguan government on the bravery shown by the American forces in the face of such great odds."

Needless to say this "Nicaraguan government" is the creature of Wall Street-Coolidge-Kellogg government and its sole support in the country consists of American armed forces.

The blood of 300 Nicaraguan workers and peasants has moistened the soil for American steam-shovels, the canal has been most appropriately christened and Wall Street again has brought enlightenment to a "backward" people by means of bombs and bullets.

In such a situation, with the murderous purposes of American imperialism plainly apparent, with the Pan-American Federation of Labor in session in Washington, headed by William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, another opportunity is given the leadership of the American labor movement to take the lead in a ringing denunciation of this latest bloody act. But they act their usual traitor role.

What happens?

A protest resolution comes from a Nicaraguan delegate. President Green refuses to allow action on it and states calmly that the matter must come up later in the regular course of business.

The regular course of American imperialism's business must not be interfered with even if this means that 300 Nicaraguans have been murdered and 100 more lie bleeding under a scorching sun while vultures devour the mangled bodies of their comrades.

Furthermore, President Borno, the puppet of the national city in Haiti, has jailed the entire Haitian delegation, and newspapermen accompanying it, just as it was leaving for the Pan-American conference. Here is another reason for protest and action but the official leaders of the conference are too busy denouncing the "reds" to pay any attention to such minor manifestations of reaction in American dependencies.

The labor movements of Argentine, Brazil and Chile have shown excellent judgment in sending no delegates to a conference which, dominated by American imperialism's labor agents, has no other purpose than to paralyze the resistance of the Latin American peoples to Wall Street aggression.

There is no better way to fight American imperialism than by exposing the true role of the leaders of the Pan-American Federation and aiding in every way the organization of the Latin American masses for struggle against all it stands for.

More Tory Lies and Provocation.

News dispatches from London relate that Manuel Quezon, president of the Philippine senate is in Shanghai, China, with the object of interviewing Michael Borodin, former advisor to the Wuhan government, who is a citizen of the Soviet Union. It is noteworthy that none of the dispatches from Shanghai mention any such proposed conference. As a matter of fact no such conference was contemplated. Borodin, himself, is right now being sought in China by counter-revolutionary mercenaries bent upon his destruction, so it is ridiculous to assume that it is physically possible for him openly to participate in a conference in Shanghai.

The motive for this latest crude lie is easily perceived. The tory government of forgery, provocation and murder, views with alarm the increased demands from American interests desiring to trade with Russia, for recognition of the Soviet Union by the United States, and so endeavors by low intrigue and vicious propaganda through its news agencies to prevent such recognition because it would be a heavy blow to its own industrialists as well as a rebuke to the Baldwin governmental policy against Russia.

The recent revelations of the international spy and forger, Drujalovsky, who confessed to forging documents used by the United States state department against those advocates in the senate of Soviet recognition have discredited the methods of the forgers and provocateurs against the Soviet Union and it is hardly likely that even such a troglodyte as Secretary of State Kellogg will have the audacity to try to use this latest fairy-tale against advocates of recognition. As the only government of the old world that is steadily increasing its productive forces the Soviet Union is attracting investment capital from the enormous surplus held by American capitalists who must, of necessity, find some place to dispose of it or face stagnation. Russia needs this capital to enable her to obtain the enormous amount of productive machinery necessary to carry out her economic program. In face of these facts the provocations on the part of the discredited tories and their ilk will fall flat.

Especially should American labor strive for recognition by this government of the Soviet Union if for nothing other than the fact that the millions of dollars that can be spent for American industrial products will employ many thousands of workers.

VIENNA CROWDS ON THE VERGE OF REVOLUTION.

Just before the shooting started. Great crowds marching past the Votivkirche, Vienna.

South Is Challenge to Organized Labor

By HARVEY O'CONNOR.

WASHINGTON, July 19.—(FP)—America's trade unionists had better look sharply to the south if they do not want a regime of open shop paternalism hitherto unequalled in labor history to spread northward, engulfing unionism as it goes. Even if the Dixie type of industrial feudalism does not spread, it is becoming each year a greater menace to the maintenance of union standards in organized northern industries.

New England's 400,000 textile workers can speak eloquently of what the south's "new era" of low paid industrial labor means in northern mills. The coal miners, who find the very existence of their union jeopardized by non-union West Virginia, now becoming the dominant fuel state, can give further testimony. Pittsburgh's iron and steel workers, forced to compete against Birmingham, know what it means to have a low wage, low standard producing center less than 500 miles away.

Confident Tryouts.

Under a crass and arrant employing class, confident in the docility of their laborers, southern industry is striding forward in seven league boots. Last year her manufactures exceeded in value the entire nation's in 1900; one third of the country's post war increase in factory and mill production came from south of the Mason and Dixie line. Drawing added power from the Appalachian mountain streams, she boasts 50 per cent of all newly developed hydroelectric energy. With more than 1,000 cotton mills, the south has 57 per cent of the country's active spindles and processes in her own mills two thirds of all the cotton she produces.

More Mills.

A billion dollars is invested in southern cotton mills and another billion represents their yearly output. Thirteen new mills go up each year, to say nothing of additions and improvements to existing plants; 60 New England textile firms now have southern mills.

The south claims four great advantages: climate, water power, raw materials and labor, and of these labor is the greatest. Critics may pick flaws in her other claims: the warmer the climate, usually the less energetic the laborer; the power trust, through financial legerdemain, may make electricity relatively expensive, especially in view of the refinement of coal combustion processes in northern steam plants; the Carolinas are exporting most of their cotton, the fiber being too short for profitable spinning, and importing the raw material from Texas. But in cheap unskilled labor, the south's claim to supremacy is hardly challenged.

Use "Poor Whites".

The mill owners are drawing their labor power from a vast reservoir of half-famished mountaineers whose standard of living is the lowest in the United States. From wretched huts in the Carolina hills, the "poor white trash" gladly troop down to the mill towns. So infinitely superior are these villages with their monotonous rows of four room shacks, many of which have running water and even electricity, to the primitive cabins of the "hill-billies" that they willingly sacrifice freedom of action and submit to the baronial tyranny of the employer, who owns homes, schools, church and the entire community.

Even the low wages paid in the mill seem princely to the mountaineer who hardly handled $100 in cash the year round. In addition his wife and children are privileged to toil in the same mill and so for the first time the family escapes the generation—old semi-starvation of the hill regions.

Suborn Preachers.

Employers hire the village preachers, who in turn laud the mill owner and make religion the vehicle for feudal submission. Race pride is fostered by references to the "finest Anglo-Saxon strain in America" and enmity against the Negro is cultivated by veiled references that he will be brought in if ever the white workers lose their proper humility. With the nightmare of the hill life behind him and the terror of Negro competition before him, the southern textile operative is a nearly "union-proof" as any worker in the land.

Letters From Our Readers

"World" In Doubt About Slums.

To The DAILY WORKER:

The "World" recently carried an editorial lauding "a new plan for the elimination of the so-called 'slums' of New York" and the construction of model apartments for workers." This plan was submitted "at a conference of Mayor Walker with a large number of real estate operators, bankers, philanthropists, and capitalists." What can bankers, capitalists, and realtors be doing at such a conference? This is the answer: found at the end of the editorial. "The feasibility of the plan depends, of course, upon its appeal as a business proposition to the capitalist."

Now, I'd like to ask one little question. If the plan is a good business proposition, and if a 10 per cent return on the investment, as it is claimed, is assured, why cannot the government undertake the project?—instead of some capitalist whose primary concern is his own benefit.

DRAMA

Conrad's 'Rescue' Planned by Hampden—Benefit Concert Next Saturday

Due, to the rain last Saturday night, the concert for the benefit of the Cloakmakers and Furriers, which was to have been given at the Coney Island Stadium, will be held next Saturday.

"Dear Little Rebel," a musical playlet, with Nancy Gibbs, Robert Vernon, P. J. O'Connor and Dick Trout, book by Edwin Burke and Lyrics is the feature at the Palace this week. The other acts are: Rosa Low, Soprano; Paul Tisen and His Orchestra with Holland Barry; Frank Fay, third week as Master of Ceremonies; Senator Murphy, and Harry and Dennis Dufor.

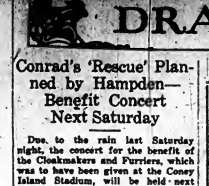
The Albee in Brooklyn has on its bill this week, Vanneasi & Co.; Mr. and Mrs. Coburn; Yates and Lawley; Treasure Land; Barry & Whitledge; Marino and Martin; Cardini; Tom and Bett Waters; Alan and Jean Corelli.

Walter Hampden is planning to do a dramatization of Joseph Conrad's novel "Rescue" among the features of his schedule for next season at the Hampden Theatre. The season may open there the last week in September with "The Light of Asia" or Ibsen's "An Enemy of the People."

Anyhow, what are "the philanthropists" doing at this conference if the "feasibility of the plan depends, of course, upon its appeal as a business proposition to the capitalist?"

Sincerely,—S. W. Kass.

Investigate Murder Beating.



An investigation was started yesterday by Police Captain Harry Walsh of the Seventh Precinct, Jersey City into the death of Charles Walls, 52, of that city who died on July 6th. He will try to determine if his death was caused by a beating he suffered while under arrest that day. The charge was made by Wall's father-in-law. He said the body will be exhumed to secure proof of the charges.

ORGANIZED LABOR—TRADE UNION ACTIVITIES

NEWS AND COMMENTS ON LABOR EDUCATIONAL LABOR AND ECONOMIC TRADE UNION PROBLEMS

BOSSES START DRIVE ON NEW YORK UNIONS

Breach Scores Eidlitz, Woll's Side-Kick

New York builders have removed their war on the building trades unions.

Following the attack of Charles Noyes, president of the New York Building Association, on the plumbers, Charles L. Eidlitz, open shop president of the Board of Governors and chairman of the National Civic Federation, of which Matthew Woll is acting president, has notified the Electrical Workers Local 3 that it will not renew its agreement with the union.

Eidlitz's action follows the expulsion of the corrupt officials headed by Richard L. O'Hara from the local. O'Hara and other former officials ousted by International Vice-president H. H. Broach, applied to Supreme Court Justice William Harris-man Black yesterday for the appointment of a receiver to take over the funds and the business of the local.

Eidlitz Supports Ex-Officials.

That Eidlitz is actually supporting the expelled local officials, was the charge levelled by International Vice-president Broach in an interview with a representative of The DAILY WORKER.

"Eidlitz has admitted that he is assisting and aiding the expelled corrupt officials who were expelled from the union. Since none of the expelled officials has worked since the local was cleaned of corruption, I assume that Eidlitz has been supporting them."

Organization Drive.

The organization drive that is now being conducted by the local and the refusal of local officials to agree to the violation of provisions of the building codes were other reasons given by Vice-president Broach for Eidlitz's action. Twenty-five organizers are now working for the local in an attempt to bring repair men and men on contract jobs into the union.

Taking advantage of the jurisdictional fights among the New York building trades and of the refusal of many locals to organize their unorganized, the Employers Association is girding its loins for a war on the building unions.

Strike of Tie Workers Is Possible August 31 When Contract Expires

A strike by the 5,000 tie workers of this city is possible August 31 when the union's contract with the bosses expires.

In a statement issued by the union it is pointed out that the home work on ties is endangering the welfare of organized workers. "The ties served at home," the statement continues, "are being sold in the market as the most expensive ties. Meanwhile compensation for work on these ties is far below the wages paid those who work in the factories and sew the ties by machine."

Rainey Miners Strike Against Indirect Cut

BROWNSVILLE, Pa., July 19.—The Rainey Coal Company is trying to force an indirect wage cut on the miners in Allison Mine 1 and 2. On Monday, July 11th, many of the day men were discharged and the boss' straw men were sent into the mine to notify the miners that in the future they must timber their own places at 4 ½ say their own track without pay. Any worker who dared disobey this order was threatened with immediate dismissal, 50 cents to be paid for 10 feet of cross bars.

Defy Company Injunctions.

The following day 80 per cent of the miners stayed out in protest. The Rainey Company retaliated by serving eviction notices on all the men who lived in company houses and who had stayed out in protest against the indirect wage cut. This brought the men out 100 per cent, as well as a few diggers from Mt. Braddock Mine, Revere Mine and Royal. These mines are also the property of the Rainey Coal Co., and had received the same stimulum from the bosses.

These miners are now receiving an average pay based on the 1917 scale. They complain that they cannot meet the high cost of living in the mining towns. Single men pay an average of $11 to $12 a week for half board.

Pittsburgh Will Have Boat Excursion and Dance This Saturday

PITTSBURGH, Pa., July 19.—A boat excursion and dance, arranged by The Daily Worker and Freiheit, will take place Saturday evening, July 23rd. Steamer Julia Belle leaves the Old Sixth Street bridge, N. S., Pittsburgh, at 6 p. m. and will return 11:30 p. m. Music by the well known Franklin Union Orchestra. A good time will be shown to everyone. Admission, $1.00. Everybody welcome.

Wall Street Labor Leaders Holding a Confab in Capital

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 19.—The Pan-American Federation of Labor opened the first session of its fifth congress here today. In reality this is not a federation of labor but an instrument of American imperialism in Latin America.

Thirteen countries are supposed to be represented here but the workers of the great majority of these countries had little or nothing to say in determining who should represent them.

The American officials of the Pan-American Federation of Labor are a collection of red-baiters. They are: William Green, president; Matthew Woll, treasurer; Chester M. Wright, English language secretary.

Luis N. Morones of Mexico is vice president and Santiago Iglesias of Porto Rico, in Spanish language secretary.

It is reported that one of the questions to be taken up by the delegates will be the Mexican situation. Green is expected to induce Morones to become more active in the war on the radicals in Latin America and to discuss with him the relations between the United States and Mexico. It is rumored that Morones favors the appointment of Charles Beecher Warren as ambassador to Mexico and is trying to enlist Green's support for this appointment.

Philadelphia Youth to Leave Sleepy City for Y. W. L. Picnic, July 23

PHILADELPHIA, Pa., July 19.—On Saturday, July 23rd, Philadelphia will once and for all earn its reputation as a "sleepy city." On that day all the lively, youthful, and energetic elements will desert the city en masse. The excursion to New River-view Beach arranged by the YOUNG WORKERS LEAGUE, district three, is acting as the magnet for the emigration. The steamers of the Wilson Line will leave the Chestnut Street wharf at 9:30, 10 a. m. and 2 p. m. carrying their happy load of excursionists (young and old), who can bribe their way to a cool and joyous boat ride, and a day full of fun at the beach for the trifling sum of sixty cents. Children's tickets are thirty cents.

Various kinds of entertainment will be served up by the entertainment experts of the league. Chief among these will be an exhibition of the Charleston, by Oscar (kid) Orrutsky, duet vocal numbers by B. Morgenstein and Jack Cooper (with the bass parts by Cooper), and a pantomime "The Jungles of Asia" by the DEC. Amendments and substitute "motions" and other stage effects by Vigman. A free exhibition of his new cast of tan secured at the Pioneer Camp will be given by Manny Epstein. Bring your bathing suits and happy dispositions to the Chestnut street wharf on Saturday, July 23rd. Buy tickets in advance at the district office, the Freiheit, or from any Young Worker League member.

Miners' Relief to Hold Picnic Near Pittsburgh

PITTSBURGH, July 19.—The Miners 'Relief Conference will hold a picnic on Sunday, July 24th, at Eldorado Park, which is situated in the midst of one of the most picturesque spots of the Monongahela valley. The park lies between Monongahela City and Charleroi, Pa. Many excellent features have been arranged for, including a concert by the Monongahela City band, the showing free of charge in the evening of the motion picture, "Breaking Chains," and speeches by John Brophy and others who will discuss the four months' struggle already endured by the miners of this district. Tickets for the picnic are only 25 cents in advance for men and 25 cents at the gate, while for women they are 15 cents in advance and 25 cents at the gate.

To reach the park from Pittsburgh, take Charleroi car every hour at Grant and Liberty Avenues, near the Pennsylvania station. By auto, follow Castle Shannan road to Monongahela City pike, follow it to park. From Washington, Pa., take Pittsburgh car and change at Castle Shannon Junction to Charleroi, Pa.

Woman Flier Leaves For Coast.

EL PASO, Tex., July 19.—Miss Mildred A. Doran, the "Flying School Ma'am" from Flint, Mich., who hopes to be the first woman to cross the Pacific Ocean by airplane, hopped off from here today on her way to the Pacific Coast.

Miss Doran would not state definitely whether any stops will be made here and the coast. The plane has a fueled fuity for a flight to San Diego.

THE LEFT WING FUR WORKERS UNION ELECTS ITS TICKET IN BOSTON, MASS.

BOSTON, Mass., July 18.—A sweeping victory for the left wing of the furriers' union was recorded in Saturday's election, when the progressive group elected their entire slate.

The right wingers went down in complete defeat before Max Perlman, who was elected president; A. Rosenberg, vice president and A. Frank, secretary.

The new executive board will consist of Dave Mathoff, L. Garftakle, M. Miller, W. Litvin, I. Steinberg, M. Dorfman and J. Levenstein.

A. F. of L. To Blame.

According to Ben Gold, manager of the Furriers' Union Joint Board, the collapse of peace negotiations in Canada is due to the action of the A. F. of L. officials, and he adds:

"The Joint Board lays full responsibility for the continuance of the struggle in the fur industry upon the A. F. of L. officials and charges that they are the cause of the reduced wages, and the contracting sweat-shop system which now prevails.

"The Joint Board charges that the A. F. of L. gave these as concessions (1) for the continuance of the struggle in the fur industry upon the A. F. of L. officials, and charges that they are the cause of the reduced wages, and the contracting sweat-shop system which now prevails.

"The Joint Board charges that the A. F. of L. gave these as concessions to be taken up by the delegates to the Montreal situation. Green is expected to induce Morones to become more active in the war on the radicals in Latin America and to discuss with him the relations between the United States and Mexico. It is rumored that Morones favors the appointment of Charles Beecher Warren as ambassador to Mexico and is trying to enlist Green's support for this appointment.

"The unsuccessful peace conference, Gold says: "Ever since the A. F. of L. instituted its splitting tactics in our union, the Joint Board has stated many times that it desires unity in the International. Therefore it responded to the request of Magistrate Rosenbluth to attend a conference on the question of unity, and Isadore Shapiro, president of the Joint Board, and I were present with Magistrates Rosenbluth and Brodsky, and Mr. Markewich, who represented the A. F. of L.

"Magistrate Rosenbluth informed us that prior to this meeting he had held a conference with the A. F. of L. representatives and learned their terms for peace. At the magistrate's request we repeated the Joint Board's peace terms which called for (1) Reinstatement of all expelled members and local unions; (2) an election to be held for officers of the Joint Board under the supervision of an impartial committee on which the New York Central Trades & Labor Council and the American Civil Liberties Union should be represented; (3) following this election, a convention of the International to which delegates should be elected on the basis of local union membership; (4) abolition of gangsterism in any section; (5) to begin immediately the enforcement of the contract signed with the Joint Board at the close of the strike last year.

"At the conference held at the conference that the A. F. of L. would agree to peace if it could save its face in any way; so in the interests of peace and unity and to bring an end to the struggle I agreed not to run for any paid office at the coming election. This Mr. Markewich interprets, in a statement made yesterday, to mean that the leaders of the Joint Board are interested in personal prestige and are fighting for selfish motives"—which seems to me queer reasoning.

"Perfectly Ridiculous."

"Mr. Markewich also says that I sought reinstatement in the union because I plan to go to Russia and want to be a member of the A. F. of L. in good standing. This too is a product of his imagination and is perfectly ridiculous.

"I will take no trips to Russia, or any place else. I will continue with the fur workers in their fight until they win democracy in their union and a guarantee of union conditions.

"The rejection of the Joint Board's terms of peace revealed more than ever before that the A. F. of L. leaders fear an honest election and that they seek to deprive the fur workers of the right to choose their own representatives."

Frenchy's Gang In Action.

Morris Nemser, active member of the Workers (Communist) Party, was brutally beaten up by members of Frenchy's gang Friday evening when they broke up an open air meeting at 110th St. and Fifth Ave., being conducted by the Unity Committee of the furriers, cloak and dressmakers.

When H. Schiller, who was the first speaker had been addressing the meeting for several minutes a man in the crowd who was carrying a small bag, started to interrupt him. When members of the committee requested him to keep quiet he gave a signal, and over 60 gangsters who were recognized as members of Frenchy's organization, rushed into the crowd hitting in all directions. No one was spared as the black jacks and lead pipes were first driven down on the heads of the workers. Among those who were more severely beaten up was Frank Brownstein, a member of the Workers' Union.

When the workers had been chased in all directions, the thugs divided themselves into small committees to hunt for militant workers to beat up. While this fight was going on, the police car was conspicuous by its absence.

A little over an hour later, a committee of gangsters spied Morris Nemser, who was walking with several other workers. When one of the right wing scouts who was attached to the committee by the question of guide, pointed him out to his colleagues, they started to chase him.

After running for three blocks Nemser was overtaken by the right wing hoodlums who felled him with a blow. While he was helpless on the sidewalk the gangsters kicked him in the ribs.

When taken to Mount Sinai Hospital, three stitches were necessary to sew Nemser's head. It was also discovered that he was suffering from broken ribs. He is now confined to bed in his home in the Bronx.

When workers went to the 109th St. police station to notify them of the assaults, the police refused to give any attention to the workers' complaints. The workers were told that as far as the police department was concerned, there had been no trouble and they would not make any attempt to arrest those responsible. When informed of this, many workers compared this point of view with the way the police act when they arrest workers wholesale in the fur market, when they conduct peaceful picketing.

Big Picket Demonstrations.

A large picketing demonstration was held in the fur market yesterday morning. There were no arrests, although the police department was represented by mounted men, patrolmen and the industrial squad, who were eagerly waiting for an opportunity to get into action against the striking workers.

Airplane Building Program Announced By Commerce Dept.

WASHINGTON, July 19.—By the end of this year 1,000 airports and intermediate landing fields will dot the United States, William P. MacCracken, the secretary of the commerce department announced today following a national survey of aeronautical facilities.

Huge Air Program.

With 864 airports already in operation, more than 100 cities in all sections of the country have appropriated funds lately or have stated the construction of modern fields to stimulate the development of commercial aeronautics, the survey disclosed.

Despite the great development of civil aeronautics in Europe, MacCracken believes that America has been awakened at last to the possibilities of this new form of transportation and within a few years will have surpassed the progress abroad.

"Chambers of commerce, business clubs and civic organizations are cooperating in the effort to build up a complete airway and airport system for the United States," he declared.

Airports now in operation include 307 municipal fields, 183 commercial and private fields, 124 commerce department intermediate fields, 257 miscellaneous intermediate fields, and 93 army, navy, national guard, treasury and agricultural department fields.

Landing Fields.

The commerce department has provided for about 3,000 unimproved emergency landing fields in all sections. These include pastures or similar areas on which landings and take-offs can be made when necessary.

Buffalo, at a cost of $727,000, has developed a 518 acre airport, with an extensive system of runways and modern equipment. Chicago's municipal airport, according to MacCracken, is another example of progress in the right direction. New Orleans and Cleveland were other cities mentioned as contributing toward future commercial aeronautical success.

Snuff Company Ordered To Stop Price Fixing

WASHINGTON, July 19.—The American Snuff Company of Memphis has been found guilty of unfair price maintainence by the Federal Trade Commission almost simultaneously with its announcement that the charges against the American Tobacco Company and the Chicago Tobacco Jobbers' Association has been dismissed.

The snuff concern is directed by the commission to discontinue its use of "fair price" agreements, contracts, or other representation of competitors and their products. The commission in its order directs the company to stop its practice of entering into agreements with the jobbers to maintain prices designated by it. The company is required to put this order into effect within 60 days.

Hosiery Workers on The Air Again; Set Up a Radio Station

READING, Pa., (FP) July 19.—A new radio station, owned and controlled by organized labor, is now in prospect. It will give powerful aid in the present organization campaign.

The Reading branch of the American Federation of Full Fashioned Hosiery Workers has the formal application, right of Federal Radio Commission for a license to erect and operate a radio broadcasting station in this city. John Edelman, research director of the hosiery organization, expects early approval.

Reading and vicinity there are some 15,000 men and women in the textile branches of the full fashioned hosiery industry. Dominated by the Berkshire Knitting Mills the manufacturers have for years fought to make the words "trade union" taboo. The employers' elaborate spy system made it very difficult in many cases for representatives of the union to visit knitters in their homes. But last spring, when the union went on the air, these knitters tuned in by the thousands.

In those 10 weeks more useful agitation was created in behalf of the trade unions than had been accomplished in the previous ten years. The knitters' union found that radio had become indispensable to the labor organization that would "sell itself to the workers in a spy-infested community.

The entire labor movement in Reading is back of the knitters' project. J. Henry Stump, president of the Federated Trades Council, and James H. Maurer, president of the Pennsylvania Federation of Labor, are among the labor leaders giving vigorous support. It is felt that the organization of the full fashioned hosiery workers has become the key to the labor situation in Reading and only when the Berkshire autocracy has been broken can trade unionism expand as it should in other industries.

Synthetic Gas Will Save Motorists $50,000,000

STATE COLLEGE, Pa., July 19.—Synthetic gasoline, free from sulphur compounds, can now be made and eventually will save motorists $50,000,000 annually, Dr. Hans Tropsch, of the Kaiser Wilhelm Institute, Mulhoin Ruhr, Germany, told the American Chemical Society here today.

Dr. Tropsch said that the laboratory, "with which he is connected," has been able to produce all the useful constituents of petroleum from carbon monoxide and hydrogen. The laboratory has been able to duplicate nature's method of farming gasoline but excluding non-desirable elements.

The present method of extracting gasoline from crude oil, according to Mr. Tropsch, makes necessary an expenditure amounting to approximately fifty millions to eliminate sulphur products. This cost is saved in the synthetic product, Tropsch explained.

BOSTON, (FP) July 19.—All Boston cement finishers of local 534 hope to get the 12½ cent increase awarded their brothers employed by the Water Proofing Co. by an arbitration board. The new rate is $1.37½ an hour. President Edwin E. Garvey of the United Building Trades Council and neutral arbitrator Elijah Adlow gave the decision, G. W. Allison representing the employers' association dissenting. The award is retroactive to January 1st. Arbitration proceedings followed a strike at the Water Proofing Co. Business agent Jeb Carpenter of local 534 believes the award applies to all Boston cement finishers in the union.

RADIO TRUST GRABS THE AIR

NEW YORK, July 19 (FP).—"Free air" may be a true sign at gasoline filling stations and garages but it isn't true for radio as concerned. The history of the growing radio trust recounted by Maurice A. Hallgren in this current Nation gives the details.

From the organization of the Radio Corp. of America in 1919 by General Electric, the trust has made international connections. Leading concerns of England, France and Germany are linked with the American firm in a special corporation controlling all wireless communications to and from the countries. The four considerations which held these nations and have been the directors each, except that a ninth [illegible] director is added to uphold [illegible]. Monopolistic Hallgren does not look upon General Electric's statement that "the Radio Corp. of America was created in order to carry out the expressed desires and wishes of the United States, communicated by [illegible] officers and servants."

[illegible] d. And withal the radio trust corporate graph and its child Western Electric; United Fruit Co.'s Tropical Radio Telegraph Co.; Westinghouse Electric & Mfg. Co.; and Int. Radio Telegraph Co.; Federal Telegraph Co., which has a firm foothold in China.

And withal the patriotic aura is thrown around the trust by its members testifying to the Federal Trade Commission inquiry. (Most of Hallgren's data seems to come from this investigation not unfinished.) Hallgren notes General Electric's statement that "the Radio Corp. of Amer[illegible] Morgan is not unrepresented. The [illegible] suggests half-heartedly government ownership of radio, despite the fact that Rear Admiral W. H. G. Workers Menaced By Frame Houses In Queens Slums

The acres of cheap flimsy matchbox houses that line the outlying streets of Queens and that promise to become the worst slum in New York were investigated yesterday by Senator James L. Whitley and his associates who have been investigating housing conditions in the city. The investigation is being conducted in connection with the proposed revision of the tenement house law.

The lives of thousands of workers are in constant danger because of the fire hazard. "There is no doubt," said Frederic Wright, architect and housing expert, "that if a fire broke out in the southern part of Queens and in the neighborhood of Rockaway Beach or other summer resorts where there was a strong wind blowing from the east it would take in the entire section."

Fisher Profits Soar Thru Vicious Speed-Up and Lowered Wage

CLEVELAND.—Fisher Body Ohio Company of Cleveland is owned almost body and soul by the General Motors Corporation. There are 100,000 shares of stock, 99,800 of which are owned by the General Motors Corporation.

Fisher Body wishes to exchange the stock for other stock, and has made an offer to the minority holders of 200 shares of Wright Aeronautical stock for 500 shares. These men refuse to change their stock, and make the following declaration: The stock of Fisher Body originally was valued at $100 in 1919. It now has a book value of $236—and last year alone each share earned $125.

The wages at Fisher Body have been reduced in the past year—and at the present time in most cases are going through a speeding-up process that is unparalleled in the history of the company. In addition the scale in some departments has been reduced from 35 to 60 per cent.

There is no wonder, therefore, how the Fisher Body earns such high profits—more than 50 per cent. It comes out of the sweat of the workers.

Coolidge Campaign Hit Severe Blow; Dry Raids At Rapid City Jail 20

RAPID CITY, S. D., July 19.—The territory surrounding the summer white house was as dry as the desert today following a week-end of raiding by E. L. Senn, state prohibition director, and a squad of selected "under cover" men.

Eleven alleged bootleggers fell into the hands of the law at Rapid City, half a dozen more were arrested at Deadwood, and isolated raids in the hills brought the grand total up to twenty. Great dissatisfaction is apparent among the political visitors to Rapid City.

Postpone Boxing Stadium Affair To Saturday Eve.

To Sue Arena Owner for Breach of Contract

On account of the terrific rain storm which struck New York Saturday, the bouts of the contract scheduled to take place in the open air arena of the Coney Island Stadium on that night have been postponed until next Saturday, at 8 P. M.

As a result of this, the Joint Defense and Relief Committee, 41 Union Square, sponsors of this affair, have started legal action against the Coney Island Resorts, Inc. for breach of contract. Ludwig Landy, campaign manager of the committee, stated that he had signed a contract with Isidore Silberman, president of the Coney Island Resorts, Inc. to the effect that in the event of postponement of the concert due to bad weather conditions on Saturday, July 16, it would be given the following night, Sunday, July 17. Inasmuch as a ball fight was advertised and presented at the Stadium Sunday, it was impossible to go ahead with the postponed concert.

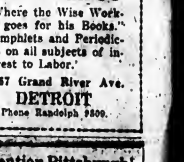
18,000 Turned Away.

It is estimated that at least 18,000 people jammed the gates commencing early Sunday afternoon, but were refused admittance because of the ball fight.

TRACTION STRIKE IN A WEEK OR SO SAYS UNION HEAD

Workers Refuse to Sign Yellow Dog Contract

That the city will see a subway strike of the first magnitude within the next few weeks seems to be a foregone conclusion. This is the opinion of J. H. Coleman, organizer for the Amalgamated Association of Street and Electric Railway Workers.



Hedley is reported to have said that if the company recognised the Amalgamated ninety-five per cent of its employes would strike in protest. In reply to this Coleman said that no one is his right senses would believe so ridiculous a statement, not even Hedley himself.

The new yellow dog contract which the I. R. T. is circulating among its workers for signatures is not meeting with success. Most of the men are showing a fighting spirit and the Brotherhood workers are having a hard time getting names.

A canvass among the militant subway workers reveals the truth of the statement that the men want to be organized and they will go thru a strike to attain their own ends.

French Communist Party Has Powerful Daily to Reach Oppressed Masses

By J. LOUIS ENGDAHL

All native Paris has open assely trained to recognize foreigners. The elderly woman, therefore, who tends the newsstand where the Rue de la Paix enters the Place del'Opera, thought it quite natural that I should purchase the Paris edition of the New York Herald-Tribune and The Chicago Tribune. But she was quite puzzled when I also asked for a copy of l'Humanite. Evidently she had not sold many copies of the central organ of the French Communist Party to American visitors in the French capital.

I had secured passage upon the Mauretania, the first fast boat to leave Cherbourg for New York. But it would not sail for three days. Three days in which to get acquainted with the French comrades and to study the French Communist movement! I was attracted first, of course, as if by magnet, to the offices of the l'Humanite, at 142 Rue Montmartre.

It was on the heights of Montmartre that the Paris commune made its first bid for power on March 18, 1871, when the Communards seized 250 cannons on La Butte and defied the government of Thiers. The revolutionists were dislodged by the government troops on May 24th and the batteries of Montmartre were then turned on the Communards posted on La Butte, Chaumont and Pere Lachaise. It is pointed out that some of the streets in this district are very narrow, making it easy to close them with hastily erected barricades.

Rue Montmartre is narrow and winding. The neighborhood of "No. 142" is clearly a printing house section, like Williams Street in New York City, or Federal Street in Chicago. l'Humanite is only one of many publications housed in the same building. The editorial and business offices occupy two entire floors.

The comrade who receives visitors speaks only French. So we have a rather difficult time of it; but only until he finds another comrade who speaks German, which offers a basis of communication. Marcel Cachin, the editor, is in the chamber of deputies, of which he is a member and the leader of the Communist faction. Jacques Doriot has just returned from China and is now before a committee of the French chamber of deputies replying to charges that he made seditious speeches at Canton, tending to disturb the tranquility of French colonial rule in Indo-China. Henri Barbusse, author of several books on the world war, who is literary editor, is out of town on his vacation.

I decide that on the morrow, I shall go to the Chamber of Deputies. So today I spend my time with Gabriel Peri, the foreign editor of l'Humanite, who speaks very good English, reminding me of Comrade Ickx, foreign editor of the Pravda, in Moscow. Peri is a constant contributor to the International Press Correspondence.

Founded by Jean Jaures.

L'Humanite was founded by Jean Janres, in 1904, and remained the central organ of the French Socialist Party for many years. During the war Jean Longuet founded another socialist daily, La Populaire. When the split came in France between the socialists and the Communists, the Communists took the l'Humanite with them and have kept it as the central organ of the Communist Party. Jaures was assassinated by a French jingo on the eve of the outbreak of the world war in 1914. Huge demonstrations are held annually by the Communists on the anniversary of Jaures martyrdom, and l'Humanite carries on its first page, upper left hand corner, "Fondateur, Jean Jaures."

Jean Longuet, who was used for years by the Second (Socialist) International as the butt of its attack on the Communist International, is now foreign editor of La Populaire, the socialist organ, of which the extreme right winger, Leon Blum, is now the chief editor.

L'Humanite Is Ably Staffed.

It is very evident that l'Humanite has an able staff. Comrade Peri tells me that 20 comrades are actively engaged on the paper. This reminds me of our own bare half dozen on The DAILY WORKER.

Cachin is the chief editor. Vaillant Conturier, also a member of the chamber of deputies, is an editorial writer. Peri is foreign editor. Barbusse is literary editor which also includes supervision of book reviews, theater and kino criticisms, and whatever concerns the radio that goes into the paper. Barbusse also selects available fiction. This does not mean that Barbusse does all this alone. He has at least five assistants collaborating with him. Peri also has four assistants. There are five in the trade union news department. Andre Delahy is the political writer. Considerable attention is given to sports, in fact, during my visit a long distance bicycle rider, who had attracted considerable attention, ended his race against time before large throngs that acclaimed him on his arrival in front of our Communist daily.

Quarter Million Subscription List.

The subscription list of l'Humanite now totals a quarter of a million readers. But it is the only Communist daily in France. The individual circulation of the German Communist daillies is much smaller, but there are 36 of these German dailies.

But today l'Humanite issuing a special edition against the new military law that is being foisted on the French working class with the aid of the socialists. In fact, the new mobilization law is sponsored by the socialist, Paul Boncourt. It provides for forcing all men, women and even children into the war machine immediately the war is declared. The Communists alone fight this law, that will wipe out all workers' organizations simultaneously with the new war's inception. The proposal by the socialist, Boncourt, has been accepted by the government as its own, glorying in the prospect of the "mobilization of every citizen without distinction of age or sex, in case of war."

News Service Well Organized.

Our French daily has a well organized news service. It gets the telegraph news of "Tass" (Russian Telegraph Agency) and of Havas, the official French telegraph service.

In addition l'Humanite has special correspondents in every city of any importance in France. There are 10 of these paid correspondents, while about 40 are unpaid. There are also paid foreign correspondents in London, Berlin, Brussels and Rome, while the closest touch is kept with the news sources in the Soviet Union.

Worker Correspondents in Paris.

L'Humanite has worker correspondents in every great factory in Paris. About 200 of these are organized into 20 Worker Correspondents' Groups.

A campaign has now been started to broaden this movement to all parts of the nation. Members of the trade union department of the paper will make a tour of the country for this purpose.

Thus the Communist Party of France builds its daily organ, bringing it into closer and closer contact with the masses of the French workers and farmers.

Pravda, in Moscow; Der Rote Fahne, in Berlin, and l'Humanite, in Paris, are the three leading Communist dailies in the world, that the Communists in the United States and other countries may well study in building more such mass organs of the workers' class.

CLARIFYING POLITICAL ISSUES IN THE MINNESOTA LABOR MOVEMENT

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn., July 15.—In order to estimate correctly the effect of the June 13th municipal elections on the Farmer Labor movement both locally and throughout the state, it is necessary to review briefly what the political situation was just prior to the elections, the attitude of the Labor Alderman then in office and also the position taken by the leaders of the trade union movement.

We must call to mind that before the elections of 1925 the Labor members of the Council numbered fourteen—a majority of the seats. In that year, due principally to the inroads already made by the Mayor Leach machine in the trade union movement (85 per cent of the Business Agents and other trade union officials were in this machine) six Labor aldermen were defeated after a campaign in which the left wing of the movement fought almost alone and without a candidate for Mayor because a treachery of the right wing of the trade union leadership, who, due to their "loyalty" to the so-called "good" candidate and "friend" of Labor, Mayor Leach, refused to allow the filing of a Labor Party candidate for the office of mayor.

In the last elections, the situation was substantially the same, except that the Labor Councilmen numbered only eight, who were, with the exception of Alderman Scott, opposed to the filing of a candidate for Mayor, and with Alderman Hanseon taking the lead in the fight within the Farmer-Labor Association to head off the endorsement of a full ticket. The Henrepin County Central Committee, just prior to the primaries on May 5th, sponsored the calling of a delegated Conference of all working class organizations, with emphasis on the Trade Unions, to air and fully discuss the question of a full ticket. At this meeting which was well attended, with representatives from trade unions, workingmen's clubs, women's auxiliaries and liberal organizations, the right wing labor leaders of the Leach machine and the Labor Councilmen who had opposed the full ticket idea within the Farmer-Labor Association, came together on common ground in the Conference, defeated the left wing and prevented the endorsement of a candidate for mayor.

It is also necessary, in order to understand fully the confusion within the movement, to show the forces involved and the reasons for the peculiar line-up on the important question of a full ticket:

1. The right wing trade union officialdom who are opposed in principle to the Farmer-Labor Party and who constitute the backbone of the Leach machine in the trade unions.

2. Part of the right wing trade union leadership and some center elements who are opposed to the affiliation of the trade union movement to the Farmer-Labor Association, but who support the Farmer-Labor Party as individuals. Their attitude on the question of working class political action renders first-class support to the right wing.

3. A small group of trade union leaders who accept the Farmer-Labor Association as the political organization of the workers and work for the affiliation of all local unions, but who have been terrorised by the drive of the A. F. of L. officialdom on the Communists and left wing in the labor movement, and who lack the necessary confidence in the rank and file to unite with the left wing and oppose openly the destructive policy of the right wing.

4. Outside of the trade unions, but working in complete harmony with the extreme right wing of the trade union leadership is the Van Lear machine. Van Lear, once Socialist mayor, controls the 'Daily Star," the paper stolen from the workers and now used to support Mayor Leach and to attack in the most vicious manner to the Labor Alderman and the Farmer-Labor Association.

5. The Labor Councilmen, who with the above-mentioned exception, opposed the endorsement of a labor candidate for Mayor, because of a gentlemen's political agreement to support Aldermen Turner, Republican Alderman from the 7th (Hanseon's ward) Ward, for Mayor; and, as Aldermen Henseon, their spokesman, expressed it—"not to be hampered in the campaign with a Labor candidate for Mayor who would act as a drag and would defeat the Labor Councilmen for re-election."

6. The left wing and the Communists, whose program can be briefly stated as follows:

(a) Affiliation to the Farmer-Labor Association of all working class organizations with particular attention to the local unions.

(c) Filing in all elections of full tickets.

(d) Regular meeting of the Hennepin County Central Committee.

(e) Placing of responsibility for the conduct of election campaigns in the hands of the regularly constituted organs of the Farmer-Labor Association.

ULDINE UTLEY, REV. STRATON'S NEMESIS

This Fresno, Calif. girl intended to go on the stage, but Aimee Semple McPherson, before her notorious "kidnaping" episode persuaded her there was more profit in religion. She preaches with considerable appearance of emotionalism, so much so that her sermons in the church of the reactionary fundamentalist, John Roach Straton, helped to convince part of his flock that he was leaning towards Holy Rollerism. It has also been charged several times that she becomes nervously unbalanced while in the pulpit. But the moron's fall for her in her tent by the Yankee Stadium.

Algy and Norman in Their Lighter Moods - - S. P. Leaders Fight War

(By Our War Correspondent.)

The Reverend Doctor Norman Thomas, and his cohort, "Professor" Algernon Lee, met out the other night "to help the young kids along." It happened that the Young Peoples Socialist League (in case you don't recall what the letters Y. P. S. L. stand for) was holding an anti-war meeting at 10th St. and 2nd Ave.

Algy and Norman were among the speakers. The meeting was scheduled for 8 o'clock sp, according to the writer's information, the Rand school twins drifted around at ten after.

Norman was dressed characteristically. Wearing dark suit, carefully creased trousers, shirt open at the neck, his hair combed back, in the opinion of one member of the audience, he was either going to speak on "industrial democracy" or some patent medicine.

Immediately his young friends paid their homage. Distantly, he greeted the young men with a "How do do." The gallantry, got a pleasant smile and a handshake. Gallantry, you know, is alive even in a democracy. However, the smile became less prominent, and the handshake more absent when Norman saw he was becoming an object of interest.

Immediately the reporters of the capitalist press clustered around him. Norman, you see, is considered good copy by the capitalist press, because he's "so naive"! Algy, with a bundle of papers under his arm for effect, horned in on the group. Even though he didn't look very socialistic with a brand new palm beach suit and a panama hat on, he evidently thought he might "yes" Norman with some effect.

Although this writer couldn't join the group, since Algy and Norman would rather be quoted in the capitalist press than the working class press, everything Gallagher and Sheehan from 15th St. said furnished him with good copy. Too bad one can't keep reporters for The DAILY WORKER a mile away from socialist meetings. They're bound to find out the truth about the decay of the socialist party.

"What are you going to speak about, Mr. Thomas?" the reporters respectfully inquired.

"Wal-l," Thomas was heard to answer, with amazing frankness, "You know I don't know a single new thing to say on this subject."

"There isn't anything new to say," pitched in Algy, his yes-man.

"Don't you think the disarmament conference is really a conference on armament?" a reporter suggested.

"Oh yes," Thomas replied, in a relieved tone. Then he echoed the statement. Algy nodded approval. The reporters scribbled a hasty note: Thinks disarmament conference a conference on armament.

The heat became a subject for comment. Norman called the charimen, and asked if he had time to go to 11th St. to get a glass of beer. The chairman registered embarrassment. Norman looked at the reporters, and thought better of it. The conference was resumed.

Telk drifted around to The DAILY WORKER. Thomas first admitted he read it. Maybe Algy gave him a dirty look, but anyhow, he hastily explained that he used to read it, "but it got under my skin, so I cut it out."

"Can't you get valuable information from it?" he was asked.

Algy got a word in. "One can learn something, if one reads it backwards," he said with a silly smile, expecting to hear uproarious laughter greet his wise-crack. He only got a question, "You're well known for your ability at interpretation, so you shouldn't hafe any trouble." A black look was the answer.

Only a handful of people had turned out for the meeting. Norman apologized to the agreeable reporters. "It's hard to get people to turn out in weather like this," he said. "Al and I have come over to help the young kids along." Algy smiled, benevolently.

A cloakmaker came over. "Here," said Thomas, as though he were showing exhibit A, "Here is a chap that was beaten up last week in the furrier's strike."

The cloakmaker liked the publicity. "Yeh!" he said illuminatingly.

"The left wing is attacking our people—" Thomas began, but he was interrupted by the cloakmaker who interjected, "It wasn't the left wing. I got in the way of a cop."

Norman swallowed hard. Here was a situation that would never meet the approval of Abraham Shiplacoff and Jimmy Oneal. Algy saved the day. He brought up Coolidge.

"God must be on the side of Coolidge," Norman said, as profoundly as ever he spoke in a presbyterian pulpit. "He's always making mistakes, and being saved miraculously."

Then the talk, for want of topics apparently, drifted around to the Rand School. Algy's face lighted up. He had found something funny to say. "You know, James Fuchs is a funny guy. Apparently he's joined the Volkszeitung group." Whenever he writes an article for them, he always makes a slurring remark about the Rand School, and my connection with it. You know, that's just because he's sore because I didn't let him have a lectureship at the school this season." Norman laughed. Algy had thought up a good one. After all, by sprinkling plenty of C-N around, he might be able to cover up the decay of the Rand School for another year.

Then they spoke. Neither of them had anything to say, but how they said it. Algy grimaced, gesticulated, and rolled his pseudo-Oxford accent like a veteran Indian medicine doctor. Norman panted and snorted, did everything but whinney. The reporters walked to telephones, but apparently their papers weren't interested in the story they hashed up, because nothing was printed.

How is it that the capitalist press considered a socialist anti-war open-air meeting worth covering? Well, it wasn't because Algy and Norman were scheduled to speak before the handful of Yipsels who had gathered. It was because they had sent out a press-agent story, written perhaps by Jimmy Oneal, lover of truth—as he sees it. It said: "Ten thousand people are expected...." and went on, concluding with "It is expected that members of the Young Workers League will attempt to break up the meeting, but we will defend our constitutional rights." The Y. W. L. members, naturally, didn't show up. They aren't, Yipsels to the contrary nothwithstanding, ghouls.

Against the War Danger

The Future War and the Working Class

By D. MARETSKY.

V.

(Conclusion.)

From the foregoing it will be seen what attitude International Bolshevism takes in regard to war. The International Bolsheviks are in duty bound: 1. to oppose an imperialistic war by their might, to permit "no war between the great slave-owners for the maintenance and consolidation of slavery" (Lenin); 2. to guard carefully against the possibility of an attack on the part of the allied imperialistic slave-owners on the Soviet Union; 3. to carry on the most determined fight against the "punitive" campaign already begun by the imperialists against revolutionary China; 4. to mobilise the broad masses of all countries to support in the most active manner the revolutionary military defence of the Soviet Republic in case the imperialists should ever attack the Soviet Union; 5. in case it should prove impossible to prevent the great imperialistic war, to strive persistently to transform this war into a civil war.

Must Expose War Threats.

For this purpose, however, it is necessary that there should be a systematic, persevering, obstinate campaign of exposure and prevention against the war.

The whole of the political work of the Communist Party must be linked up with the fight against the danger of war. The fight against Fascism and the growing pan-European Reaction must also be carried on stubbornly as a fight against the danger of war; the adventurous foreign policy of theFascist States must be continually pilloried, the spread of Fascism in the army must be countered, and the real meaning of the Fascist coup d'Etat in the countries bordering on the Soviet Union, as well as Chamberlain's policy to create a Fascist cordon along the Soviet frontier, must be exposed.

Show Up Pacifism.

It is necessary to disclose in Leninist fashion the whole senselessness of pacifism, of bourgeois as well as petty-bourgeois pacifism, its absolute emptiness and its complete political impotence.

Never Forget 1914-1918.

The open political fight against international Democracy is of special urgency. In this matter, the sections of the Communist International are in a very favorable position. For considerations as intelligible as they are base, the Social Democrats do not like to be reminded of their disgraceful conduct during the world war. For this reason the Communists must propagate with all the more persistence the events of the years 1914 to 1918 and recall them to the minds of the masses.

Will Again Betray Labor.

The imperialist leaders of the Socialist parties will again prove treacherous, they will again be the purveyors of cannon-fodder again daily in the antechambers of the imperialists and general staffs (they are already sitting there: Paul Boncour & Co.), they will again invent "sacred alms" of the war and drag out from the arsenal of history the slogans of the "defence of home and country", of the best of native countries, of the native country of Finance-capital.

Social Democracy, and even its "left" wing, carries on no real fight against the danger of war, nor can it do so. The Social-Democratic leaders merely give themselves out to be opponents of war. It is not possible for one to fight against war, so long as one countenances the maintenance and promotion of imperialism and white-washes its villanies.

Kautsky "Scoundrels."

Karl Kautsky admitted on May 1st in a sudden fit of candour that the battle-cry of the present international policy is: "Scoundrels of all countries, unite!" The fortunate patrimony of International Socialism "forgot," however, to add that the 'scoundrels of all countries" run the League of Nations, that Mussolini plays the role of the beautiful Benjamin in the League of Nations, though in reality he is only Chamberlain's right hand, that Chamberlain directs the whole European policy under the slogan "Beat the Soviets," that Social Democracy with its agitation against the Soviet Union constantly backs up Chamberlain, that the first violin in this agitation is played by German Social Democracy, the party of Karl Kautsky himself. It seems to us that, not only do the "scoundrels of all countries" unite, they also draw Social Democracy into their league. Special mention must surely be made of the Social Democratic legend of the so-called Imperialism of the Soviet Union or of "Red Imperialism." Social Democracy would much rather spread this legend than tell the masses the truth about real Imperialism and its armaments.

A Low Accusation.

To accuse the Soviet Union of "imperialist" aims is just as villainous as to place on the same level the armies of the imperialistic countries and the army of the Socialist revolution, the Red Army. How is it possible to compare predatory capitalist militarism with the promotion of the proletarian dictatorship's ability to defend itself?

And as the backs of the Social-Democratic Press do this constantly they hereby prove that they are direct allies of Imperialism in its fight against the Socialist state.

New Preparing Next War.

The question, whether the imperialists will succeed during the next historic period in dragging about and carrying on a great war will be decided, as are all great questions in public life, by the course of the class struggle in the world and by the relation of strength and activity of the proletariat and the bourgeoisie. The imperialists are preparing the war quite openly. The question, the decisive, main question, is whether it will be possible to get millions of men to go to war, for an imperialist war carried on according to "all the rules of the art" can only be a war of the masses.

Socialists Prepare Treachery.

This is a question of power, a question of concrete historic fight. On the one hand, the whole armored might of Imperialism, its complete apparatus of lies, hypocrisies, suggestion and compulsion, will be thrown into the scale of war and peace. In the same way, International Social Democracy will work in the same direction for winning the "power of the masses" for war. If the new slaughter of the people really comes about, it will in a huge measure be the work of Social Democracy. It is even possible that a portion of the Communist Press will display "shameless conduct," for which Lenin has already prepared the Bolsheviks.

We shonld not be Marxists, if we did not consider in a sober fashion our chances, i.e., the possibilities of preventing a big war or of transforming it into a civil war.

Last War Hents World.

1. The whole of humanity, and especially the working class, still remembers the year 1914, still thinks of relatives and friends who were dragged into the international slaughter; tens of thousands of cripples and invalids are still living.

2. To deceive the masses a second time with the "humane" purposes of the war will be more difficult than it was the first time, even the vitality of Social-Democratic lies will not succeed in this case. It is not out of the question that, if a portion of the Communist Press collapses considerable strata of Social-Democratic and even independent workers will refrain from following Social-Democracy.

3. In place of Tsarist Russia with its "ontapoken Reaction" (Lenin) we have the proletarian Soviet Union, which pursues a real policy of peace, which in face of the bloodthirsty policy of the imperialists is the only safe refuge of international peace.

4. There is now a powerful Communist International, which did not exist in 1914.

5. The East of 1927 is not the same as that of the year 1914. At that time the Orient still slumbered. Today every sheet of Bourgeois papers speak of the "awakening" of China.

6. If the world conflagration breaks out and its front is that of the fronters of the proletarian and of the Capitalist States, there will be good chances in favor of the proletarian State in the fight against the Imperialists, even if the latter are superior in war technics. The incitement to civil war in our country, the experience of the famous October, the attitude of the 13 States," have shown the Imperialists how difficult it is to make war upon a country, in which there is no ruling class of land-owners and capitalists. The "strength of the masses" is a prime factor in the fight of the army of the proletariat. An even if the mechanism of the Imperialistic war on two fronts converted the imperialist war into a civil war (rise of the first Soviet State and founding of the Comintern), the fact of an imperialist war on a single front, i.e., the fight of class against class within an international war—will transform such a war the more quickly into a civil war, behind the front, in th eermies of Reaction. In the coming big war of the "white" and "red" roses, Imperialism is in danger of finding its grave.

J Merle Davis, above, is the general secretary of the Institute of Pacific Relations, holding its meetings at Honolulu, Hawaii July 12-29, to discuss delicate problems of the Pacific countries, such as immigration and the relations of Orientals to other lands. All large countries bordering on the Pacific sent delegates.

MR. J. Ogden Armour, oue of Chicago's packing kings is nnder the care of king George of England's physician in London. Armour's daughter and son-in-law are travelling from Santa Barbara, California, to London in response to a long distance telephone call from the British capital to Santa Barbara. Thousands of dollars will be spent by those parasites in trans-world hikes; dollars made out of the toil of thousands of packing workers who could not save enough money in a life time to buy a decent graveyard lot.

MOVING picture actresses looking for their lost dogs should beware of, obliging gentlemen offering their services in the search for the hissing canines. This much can be gleaned from the sad experience of Priscilla Dean, who is now suing a dog-catcher for fraud. Of course Priscilla might have dug up just as good an excuse for divorce had her present husband secured her affections under less unusual circumstances. According to the bill of particulars Miss Dean was looking intently at the ground for tell-tale footprints when a Mr. Anderson gallantly offered assistance. Being young and trusting Miss Dean accepted, whereupon the deceitful male drove her into the barbarous state of Nevada where one can get married as expeditiously as one can get a divorce.

OUR marines die; they never surrender. That is provided they are fighting an enemy with guns, bombs and bayonets to match. But when fighting a comparatively unarmed people like the Nicaraguans they neither die nor do they have to surrender. Major Gilbert D. Hatfield, commander of the United States marines who massacred 300 Nicaraguans a few days ago was called on by the Nicaraguan general to surrender a city which he occupied against the wishes of the inhabitants. "Marines never surrender, and even if we did not have water or food you would find us fighting to the end. You will not take the city until the last of us is dead." Those were the words of the gallant major, and they were boxed on the front page of Hearst's New York American, last Tuesday and surrounded by little American flags.

WELL, Hatfield and his men won a victory with only one man killed and one wounded. We presume the unfortunates scratched matches on a gas bomb. Three hundred dead for the "enemy" and only two casualties for the marines. Why, those lads were safer in that beleaguered city than in an osteopath's parlor. This is the way heroes are made. Before the southward march of American imperialism is stopped there will be many more victories like this and many more defiant messages to help out our recruiting sergeants.

WE have the richest secretary of any treasury in the world. We should be proud. He is Andrew Mellon, whose liquor warmed the cockles of many a sluggish heart in the days before the Volstead blight brought sunshine into the home of many a sleuth who would have to peddle his services to ordinary detective agencies if the government hadn't gone into the business on a large scale. The Mellon family controls sixty-five corporations, including six banks, the Aluminum Company of North America, the Gulf Refining Company and several other gigantic enterprises.

THREE cheers for the ghost of John Singer Sergeant, the famous American artist, who has returned after two quiet years in his grave to haunt the London studio where he died. Here is a ghost that really walks. So say Mr. and Mrs. Orr, friends of the artist who took over his studio sixteen months ago. We know several financially embarrassed workers who envy the fortunate pair. A walking ghost might give timid people the creeps, but not journalists without credit in their neighborhood restaurants. Let us have more ghosts that walk like men.

HEYWOOD BROUN, columnist of the New York World, takes H. L. Mencken to task for that gentleman's cheap aspersions on the Negro race, aspersions delivered in the typically cheap Menckenian manner. The Negroes have nothing to kick about now since they are recognized socially, declares the inverted Baltimore Babbitt. Yes, nothing except a rather unpleasant susceptibility to lynching at the hands of white imbeciles who express in action the contempt which prosperous cynics like Mencken have for persecuted races and exploited workers. The Negro masses will not be content with having some of their petty bourgeois-minded intellectuals treated as pets in certain bourgeois drawing rooms.

RESOLUTION ON OCOTAL MURDER HALTS SESSIONS

Woll, Morones Eager to Soften Language

WASHINGTON, July 20. — The Pan-American Federation of Labor found itself at a standstill today awaiting a report from the resolutions committee on the Nicaraguan situation.

The committee went into session at noon yesterday immediately following the introduction of a resolution condemning the slaying of Nicaraguans by United States marines. This was offered by Salomon De La Selva, delegate from the Federation of Labor of Nicaragua. The committee was closeted throughout this forenoon with nothing ready to report. Accordingly the convention took a recess until tomorrow morning.

Holding Down De La Selva.

De La Selva is sitting with the committee of which Matthew Woll, vice president of the American Federation of Labor, is chairman, and Luis N. Morones, Mexican secretary of commerce, labor and idustry, is a member.

Indications today are that the committee will bring out a substitute resolution for that offered by De La Selva. But still making a declaration against the presence of marines in Nicaragua and condemning the Ocotal slaughter.

The resolutions committee has before it fourteen resolutions submitted by various delegations and by the executive council, virtually all of which relate either directly or indirectly to political conditions prevailing in Latin America involving the rights and welfare of labor.

CHIANG KAI-SHEK PREPARES ATTACK ON HANKOW GOV'T

Left Wing Armies Move On Canton, Shanghai

(Special Cable to Daily Worker).

SHANGHAI, July 20.—Nanking government is concentrating its best troops in preparation for a march against Wuhan. Observing these military preparations the press here reaches the conclusion that a military conflict between the Nanking and Wuhan governments is bound to come within the next few days. The press also reports a movement of Wuhan troops down the Yangtse-kiang.

On the other hand the rumors of peace negotiations with Chang Tso-lin and the concentration of Nanking troops against Wuhan is understood in certain quarters as a demonstration against General Feng Yu-hsing with whom relations are considered "not quite normal."

It is believed that these measures are undertaken to force the unconditional surrender of the Wuhan government. At all events, it is felt here that the next few days will be momentous in deciding the fate of the Wuhan government as well as the struggle of the Nanking government against Chang Tso-lin.

FOR THE NEXT WAR

By Fred Ellis

The Fight to Defend The Daily Worker Is a Fight Against the War Danger

"Some of our comrades assume that the danger of war is not immediate, that we have still sufficient time to awaken and mobilize the masses. That is a great mistake which may have serious consequences. For the latest events show with all clarity that the danger of war is increasing and that it as great as it was on the evening of the 4th of August, 1914. Just as in the period which preceded the great imperialist slaughter, all the imperialist states are arming feverishly. Almost everywhere incidents are taking place reminiscent of Agadir and Sarajevo. The clouds of war are gathering over the Pacific. Big guns have already sounded in China."

Secretary, Communist Party of France.
PIERRE SEMARD

In the fight against the growing war danger, the greatest single task at this time in America, is the defense of The DAILY WORKER, the most militant voice of the workers against the preparations for a new world slaughter. Only with the help of our DAILY WORKER can we effectively awaken the workers of this country to the real seriousness of the danger confronting them. Only through the columns of our paper can the workers be made to see that they are confronting a new August 4.

There can be no doubt that our paper is now under attack from no less a source than the United States government, simply because we are the only paper which is waging a relentless struggle against the attempt to drag us again into the shambles of a capitalist war. If you want us to continue this fight, if you want the fight against a new World War to be successful, then you must help by circulating widely the GUARD THE DAILY WORKER FUND Certificates. Every dollar contributed is a blow at the war mongers. The hour is critical. You must respond.

Seven Men Indicted for Flogging Alabama Boy

ONEONTA, Ala., July 20.—Seven members of the masked band which flogged Jeff Calloway, 19 year old orphan, the night of June 20, have been indicted by the Blount County Grand Jury.

Five of the indicted were arrested immediately, and officers set out to overtake Dr. L. S. Fennell, cyclops of the local Ku Klux Klan, who had also been indicted.

Six Free On Flogging Charge.

ORLANDO, Fla., July 20.—A jury which was out 35 minutes found six men not guilty of flogging Charles Hicks.

The defendants had taken Hicks from an automobile, where he was sitting with a young woman, last June 14 and flogged him.

Trial of the same six men, charged with flogging J. J. Johnson the same night, will begin next week.

Kings Property Owners Oppose New Sub Link

Property owners in Ninth St., Brooklyn, are attempting to prevent a change in the Transportation Board's plans, by which the Smith street-Culver subway would be carried across Gowanus Canal on a bridge instead of under it in a tunnel. They are opposed to any elevated structure in Ninth St. and say it would depress property values.

MASS FUNERAL OF FALLEN FIGHTERS BANNED BY AUSTRIAN GOVERNMENT

Scores of Communists Arrested; 15,000 Police and Soldiers Mobilized

VIENNA, July 20.—While thousands gathered for the funeral ceremonies for those killed in last week's rioting, the Austrian police force made a round-up today and arrested more than 100 Communists. Among those arrested is Reichstag Deputy Pieck of the German Communist Party.

City Is Under Military.

Nearly 15,000 soldiers and police (including the newly created gendarmerie) were on duty throughout Vienna today to prevent disorders while the funeral was held.

Marching behind the hearses was forbidden. Today's public funeral was conducted by the municipality, which is under control of the socialists.

Thousands of persons filled the streets through which the long line of hearses was to pass. The police were under orders to prevent concentrations where speeches might be made.

Following the services the bodies were to be taken to the municipal crematorium for burning. Only members of the families of the victims, officials of the socialist party and representatives of the municipal government were admitted to this ceremony.

The final service was to start at 2 o'clock and all industry in the city was instructed to cease operations for 15 minutes from that hour in tribute to the memory of the dead.

Parliament Session Today.

Chancellor Seipel and his government colleagues are engaged in restoring political equilibrium. Whether the government will take restrictive measures against the Communists, who are held responsible for the outbreaks, is not certain.

Many of the leaders are in jail and will be tried in the ordinary course of events but it is unlikely that any organized move will be made against the Communist Party.

Preparations are under way for the opening tomorrow of the special session of parliament.

The list of dead is increasing daily by additions from the 200 wounded. It is now up to 100.

Nearly 600 arrests have been made to date. Prosecutions have been begun against 75 Communists and several hundred prisoners still await examination.

Civil Liberties Union Will Reconsider Sacco Break-up at Executive

The Sacco-Vanzetti Emergency Committee has received a letter from the American Civil Liberties Union, signed by Lucille B. Milner, field secretary, acknowledging its communication of July 15, in which it requested a new investigation of the breaking up of the Sacco-Vanzetti demonstration in Union Square on July 7th. The letter states that the matter will be taken up at the next meeting of the executive committee of the union, to be held Tuesday, July 26th.

SACCO, VANZETTI IN POOR HEALTH ON FOURTH DAY

Long Hunger Strike May Be Fatal

BOSTON, July 20.—The Sacco-Vanzetti hunger strike is bringing to a close the already too long "investigation" which Governor Fuller is making into the trial of the two imprisoned workers.

The medeival conditions of confinement to which they have been subjected since their conviction seven years ago has weakened the two condemned workers considerably. Their heroic strike at this time is one that makes possible a collapse at any moment.

A few unimportant witnesses will be heard today and then the summation by the opposing counsel will be made after which the "advisory committee" will retire to draft its opinion. From authoritative quarters it is learned that this commission has already made up its mind and the fate of the two men is sealed.

The two witnesses who were heard yesterday were Michael F. Kelly and Lincoln Wadsworth. Kelly, a witness for the defense was Sacco's employer at the Stoughton Shoe Factory and testified as to the exemplary character of the condemned man. Wadsworth is a firearm salesman and appeared for the prosecution.

May Be Forcibly Fed.

Reports made by the prison doctor confirm the fears held by the Sacco-Vanzetti Defense Committee that the men are not in a condition of health which would permit a long strike without fatal effects.

A consensus of opinion here reveals the fact that the Fuller investigation is merely a blind to cover up the, certain, execution of the two workers. Bets are being made publicly with odds at two to one that the men will not be freed.

FERDINAND, THE PUPPET KING OF ROUMANIA, DIES

"Cotszavenesti" Marie's Husband Kicks In

BUCHAREST, Roumania, July 20. —The rotting body of King Ferdinand ceased breathing today as the complication of foul diseases from which he had long suffered took their toll. Babbling incoherently and continuously, weeping the monarch who was nothing more than a puppet king, died at 2:30 this morning. Queen Marie, who last year visited the United States and toured the country with a menagerie comprising a notorious actress who one time associated with her in European war-time debauches, in an effort to raise a loan for the bloody Bratiano regime, was at the bedside of the dying king.

Lewis Fighting to Hold Control Over Dist. 1 Convention

By GEORGE PAPCUN.

SCRANTON, Pa., July 20.—With the membership in District No. 1 in revolt, but as yet without a leadership, the U. M. W. of A. officials are getting rather scared and are making an attempt at the convention which is taking place in Scranton, to entrench themselves in office more than ever so that it will be much harder for them to be thrown out by the rank and file.

The first method of doing this is the extension of tenure of office from 2 to 4 years, for elective officers.

They are also going to request that instead of having five locals for endorsement, that 25 be required, before the nominee can have his name placed on the ballot. The latter nomination may not be accepted by the convention, as it is rumored that even (Continued on Page Three)

Guilty of Murder in Nicaragua

The Coolidge Government by its own reports of July 15th is criminally responsible for the death of Michael A. Obelski of Roulette, Pa., and of Chas. Sidney Garrison of Asheville, N. C., American marines killed in battle with Nicaraguan liberal forces in Ocotal, Nicaragua. The Coolidge administration is also responsible for the criminal slaughter of three hundred Nicaraguan troops by machine gun aud cannon fire and by bombing from five aeroplanes of the American navy.

President Coolidge and the State Department, in cynical violation of the Constitution of our country which vests the war-making power in Congress, opened war on the Nicaraguan people last December and sent 1,500 marines to overrun that little country. For almost seven months they have been there terrorizing the country, deposing its lawful president, "neutralizing" (that is recapturing) every town that the lawful president's forces succeeded in taking away from the puppet president created by American banking interests and set up by the force of American arms. Now, after failing during almost seven months to force the will of Wall Street on that unhappy country, the Coolidge administration has brought this crowning disgrace upon our country by having our marines begin open warfare and slaughter 300 Nicaraguans by dropping bombs from airplanes and by machine gun fire. Can the infamy of the Coolidge administration sink any lower? Can the army and Navy of the United States be put to any more degrading use than this of forcing the will of Wall Street bankers on this tiny country no bigger in population than one second rate American city? We accuse the Coolidge administration before the bar of the American people as guilty of the death of two marines and the slaughter of 300 Nicaraguan soldiers and innumerable unarmed civilians!

On every front the policy of the present administration has been the same. It has bullied Mexico, invaded Nicaragua, refused to recognized the Soviet Union, and without a declaration of war, made war upon the Chinese people. All the marines not already in use in the Israeli task of terrorising Haiti, Nicaragua and other Central American Republics, have been sent to China against the will of the Chinese people, have invaded that country, have fired upon the defenseless, unfortified city of Nanking and are rapidly involving our country in a new world war.

Who Rules America?

What American worker or farmer has any quarrel with China? Who authorised Coolidge to make war upon the Chinese people? The whole American people with the exception of a few bankers and money kings and their political tools, demand that the marines and battleships be withdrawn.

What American with the exception of the same little handful of money kings has any quarrel with the people of Nicaragua or any desire to invade that country, destroy its government and slaughter its people? Every honest American will join with us in the demand that this disgraceful and unrighteous war of the most powerful imperialist nation in the world upon one of the smallest and most defenseless ones cease immediately.

What American, with the exception of a few oil magnates has any desire that our state departments be used sontinually to bully the Mexican people and to make demands and send ultimatums which lead towards armed intervention in Mexico?

What American, with the exception of the Wall Street crowd, is against the recognition of the Soviet Union?

This little clique of oil barons, bankers and money kings that use our army and navy and state department and governmental machinery, in defiance of the wishes of the overwhelming mass of the American people, to terrorize the peoples of Mexico, Nicaragua and China and to take steps leading toward an alliance with British imperialism for a joint attack upon the Soviet Union, are the same gang who permit no unionism in their factories, who finance

The frightful wholesale butchery of 300 Nicaraguans by the invading hordes of Wall Street is the latest of a whole series of crimes against the peoples of the republics to the south of us. The only political party in the United States that has taken official cognizance of this massacre and wages a fight against the forces responsible for such ruthless extermination of peoples is the Workers (Communist) Party.

NICARAGUA ARMY EVADES FLANKING TACTICS OF U. S.

Marines, Planes, Guns, Rushed to Ocotal

MANAGUA, Nicaragua, July 20.—Advices to nationalist sympathizers here state that General Sandino's army has retired to avoid being caught in a trap between Ocotal and the large column of marines, which, with additional war planes, is advancing to the relief of the marine garrison in Ocotal. The latest expedition is under command of Major Floyd, and left Managua today, hoping to "corner" the army of Nicaraguan independence between the fortified military post of Ocotal and themselves.

Sandino's army has followed the usual tactics of a defensive force, operating in rough country, with inferior equipment, and has split into small bands, scattered thru the mountains and jungle, ready to fight rear guard actions, or to assemble quickly for a sudden attack on outlying posts of the invaders.

There is a report here that Major Ross E. Rowell, of the marines, who led the bombing attack of five planes in the Ocotal fighting, has been recommended for the distinguished service medal in dispatches to Washington. Rowell's bombers did not kill many of the regular Nicaraguan army, but did create a huge slaughter among other inhabitants of the country, including a considerable number of workers, members of the Nicaraguan Federation of Labor.

"Birger Gang" Case Ready for Defense To Begin Testimony

BENTON, Ill., July 20.—The state concluded its presentation of evidence today against Charlie Birger, Art Newman, and Ray "Izzy" Hyland, three of "Egypt's" gangsters, charged with the murder of Mayor Joe Adams, of West City.

These are members of the "Birger Gang" that wielded vast political power and fought pitched battles with their rivals, using aeroplanes and machine guns, for several years. Internal strife ruined their control of the situation.

Nice Bomb Thrown by White Russians, Not Vanzetti Sympathizers

NICE, France, July 20.—The bomb thrown at the United States consulate here yesterday probably was intended for the Russian "Prince" Lubornisky, who occupied an apartment beneath the consulate offices, the police stated today.

The police had at first believed the bomb was thrown by Sacco-Vanzetti sympathizers. Inquiry however has shown that the greatest damage was done to the prince's apartment and the police believe the bomb was aimed at it.

The white Russian prince inherited a fortune recently and is said to have many enemies among the white Russian residents of Nice.

HOLD FRAMED-UP ANTI-FASCISTS ON HEAVY BAIL

I. L. D. Defends Seven Italian Workers

The seven anti-fascist Italian workers who were arrested July 11th by agents of the department of justice working in conjunction with the Italian secret service in raids on the Italian newspapers, Il Martello and Il Nuovo Mondo came up for a hearing in the first district court in the Bronx yesterday morning before Magistrate Finston.

Mario Tresca and Luigi Quintiliano, who were released on $1,000 bail each on charges of violating the Sullivan law on July 12th, had their bail increased to $2,500. They will be given a hearing next week in the court of special sessions.

Held For $50,000 Bail.

Four other workers are being held in the Bronx county jail, the excessive bail of $50,000 each being demanded for their release. They are held as material witnesses in the case of the two Italian fascists who were murdered in the Bronx on Decoration Day.

Mario Buzzi against whom no evidence was shown was held for a hearing in Portchester next Friday. He was released on $2,000 bail.

The International Labor Defense is in charge of the case furnishing the bail for the workers. Isaac Shorr is the lawyer.

At the time of the raids the police followed their usual methods of planting two revolvers in the office of Il Martello. It was on this basis that Tresca and Quintiliano were arrested.

The U. S. secret service agents admitted that they were working with the Mussolini agents under orders of the Italian ambassador at Washington, Giacomo De Marinto..

Ferdinand, Puppet King of Roumania, Dies

been the real ruler of Roumania, and is now premier, will continue as the real ruler of the country, unless the supporters of Prince Carol, who renounced the throne a few years ago and has since been living in Paris, succeed in overpowering the regency and bringing him back to succeed his father. The government is very unpopular and maintains itself through terror, but there is no effective labor movement capable of struggling against the despotism.

Since the world war Roumania has been the pawn of imperialist powers in their efforts to destroy the workers' and peasants' government of Russia and aroused the fury of the class-conscious workers of the whole world because of its ruthless suppression of the Bessarabian peasants whose country had been taken away from Russia and ceded to Roumania at the Versailles "peace" conference in Paris in 1919.

Queen Marie, who has always supported the Bratianos, will be one of the members of the regency that will rule the country until the "baby king" Michael, 5 years of age, and son of Prince Carol, reaches the age of 21, provided, of course, the government is not overthrown by that time. At any rate, through excluding Carol, who is opposed to the Bratianos from the throne and making his infant son titular head, the old gang hopes to remain in power a while longer.

Declare Martial Law.

BERLIN, July 20.—Reports were received here today that martial law has been declared throughout Roumania in order to prevent any possible disorders following the death of King Ferdinand.

The army is expected to be instructed to take the oath of allegiance to King Michael today.

"Cotszafenesti" Marie.

While in the United States last year, Queen Marie was the object of many demonstrations of workers who protested against the bloody regime of which she was one of the ornaments. In Chicago she was presented with special editions of The DAILY WORKER containing the story of a series of debaucheries in which she was one of the chief figures at a place called Cotszafenesti during the world war.

SUSPENDED SHOE UNION PRESENTS THE BACKGROUND

Tells of Local Strike That Started Dispute

The suspended New York Council of the Shoe Workers Protective Union has taken up the fight against the general office's attempt to break up the shoe workers union in this district.

The local council has appointed B. Mushen of local 68 to take care of the office and all locals affiliated with the New York council.

In an appeal issued to the members of the union, the district council instructs the members to pay dues only to Business Agent Sam Gallant and the secretary of the office, Mrs. Chandler.

Hold Special Meetings.

During this week most of the locals are holding special meetings which the district council calls upon all members to attend. The unionists are also asked to report at the union office, 313 Fulton St., every morning before going to work.

The District Council in a statement to the members says in part: "The suspension of the District Council came unexpectedly. It started with a controversy between local 66 and the district council.

"The District Council of New York declared a strike at the Unity Shoe Co. because four union men were discharged without any cause and after a shop meeting was held it was decided to ask the firm to reinstate the discharged workers. The answer of the firm was the discharge of 18 more of the workers.

"The discharged are all loyal and active members of the union. The District Council was forced to declare a strike on the Unity Shoe Co. The shop was picketed every day and there was a good spirit of solidarity.

"Local 66 somehow called a local meeting and decided to send back their members to work in that shop. In plain words this means that the leaders of local 66 took a stand to break the strike by scabbing on the other workers of that shop.

At Joint Meeting.

"The District Council invited the General Council to a joint meeting with them. The leaders of the General council captured the meeting and recognized three delegates of local 66 and practically forced the delegates of the district council to leave the joint meeting and afterwards suspended the whole district council.

Withdraw More Charters.

Having begun by withdrawing charter of the N. Y. District Council of Shoe Workers Protective Union the bureaucrats in charge of the national organization have now withdrawn the charters of Locals 53 and 54, who have declared their loyalty to the District Council.

The bosses having been tipped off by the reactionaries held a meeting and decided to break up the union. One of the firms has already called a lockout and another one is demanding that the workers agree for a 15% wage reduction. Meanwhile the reactionaries are going from one local to the other helping the bosses to break up the New York organization. The national officials sought to occupy the District Council offices by force but were put out and business continued to be conducted from the headquarters of the District Council.

Garages Crowd Street With Cars; Chauffeur Hits Child, Arrested

(By Worker Correspondent)

Two auto accidents in succession on Union Avenue, about No. 1111, have exposed a veritable death trap in the streets. Sam Mailman was in his room on the second floor looking out of the window and saw, as is usual, the street nearly blocked by parked automobiles from three garages located together there, and with children who have no other place to play running in and around them.

A Negro truck driver came thru, and trying to avoid obstacles ran into and injured a man.

The next accident was more serious. An Italian chauffeur travelling very slowly ran over one of the children playing in the street. The accident was unavoidable, considering the conditions in the street. The chauffeur stopped at once, and carried the child to a drug store, but it was dead. A crowd gathered and wanted to lynch the chauffeur, and Mailman was only able by much argument to persuade them that the chauffeur was not responsible. However, the chauffeur is charged with manslaughter and the garages owners who are really responsible are not.

Stamford, Conn., Labor Demonstrates in Defense of Sacco and Vanzetti

STAMFORD, Conn.—Labor here is preparing for a gigantic demonstration Wednesday night, July 27th against the putting to death August 10, of the two Italian workers, Nicola Sacco and Bartolomeo Vanzetti.

Thirty-eight labor organizations, including the Stamford Central Trades Council, have united in this effort. The gathering will be held before the Town Hall, opposite the post office. Among the speakers will be J. Louis Engdahl, editor of The DAILY WORKER.

FREE VANZETTI AND SACCO, ASK UPHOLSTERERS

William Kohn Attacks the Communists

A resolution demanding the unconditional release of Sacco and Vanzetti was passed at yesterday's morning session of the convention of the Upholsterers' union meeting at the Hotel Cadillac, 43rd St., near Broadway.

The resolution was introduced by local 37 of Boston and was defended on the floor by delegates Carl Appel of Boston and J. Hotch of New York. After some opposition by the reactionary delegates it passed with an amendment commending Governor Fuller of Massachusetts for appointing an investigation committee.

William Kohn, president of the union who was presiding, attacked the Communists, whom, he said, preferred to see Sacco and Vanzetti killed so that they could utilize their death for propaganda purposes.

John Manning, president of the Union Label Department of the American Federation of Labor, delivered a speech asking the union's aid in fighting against the injunctions and not merely restrict themselves to passing resolutions condemning them. The convention adjourned after the morning session to reconvene today.

Needle Trade Defense

The Furriers Strike is of vital importance to the future of the American labor movement. It is important not only as a strike of thousands of workers against their bosses, but also because it is the reply of the progressive and left wing labor movement to the betrayal of the leaders and an answer to gangsterism of the "right" clique.

The sympathies of labor are with the courageous furriers. But what the strikers need is material support. The entire reaction is united against them. To enable them to carry on their fight to victory thousands of dollars is needed. This money can only be raised by the working class.

The campaign for bonds is in full swing. If you have not yet bought a Furriers Defense Bond you must do so immediately and demonstrate your solidarity with the striking furriers. Every bond is guaranteed. It is a short term loan payable on demand.

Voluntary Tax.

Hundreds of workers and workers organizations have responded to the call of the Defense Committee to adopt the voluntary tax. Those workers who are sincere in their desire to help the striking furriers but cannot afford to make large donations can surely spare 50 cents or $1 per week, for at least 10 weeks. The working class movement must really more than ever around the Defense Committee. A steady income to the Defense must be assured. Money, enough for the continuation of the strike can and will be raised only when the entire movement will start to work energetically. The voluntary tax should be introduced in every shop and in all workers organizations.

Gigantic Picnic In New Jersey.

A grand picnic and carnival has been arranged for this coming Sunday, July 24th by the United Clubs of New Jersey State. The picnic will be held in Linwood Grove Lake.

The Singing Society of Elizabeth, Mandolin Orchestra of Plainfield, a Band Orchestra, Dances, and other amusements have been provided for this picnic. The entire proceeds will be for the Defense. Admission is only 35 cents. All workers of New Jersey State are urged to attend this affair.

Phila. Picnic Sunday.

PHILADELPHIA, July 20.—A picnic for the benefit of the striking furriers will be held here Sunday, July 31st at Mapel Grove Park.

Tickets are on sale at 521 York Avenue; Freiheit Office 317 S. 5th; Hevacort's Drug Store, 1000 N. 42nd St. Olkin's Drug Store, 2600 N. 33rd; Furriers Union, 1229 Arch St. and during the open shop drive. They are only the tools of the government of the United States, which controls the Chinese, the Nicaraguans, the Mexicans and the workers and peasants of the Soviet Union, but also against the workers and farmers of America, and striking, by Supreme decisions, by the use of police and militia and troops to break our picket lines, they make war on the mass of the American people as well. And to foreign policy, every act of the present administration at the command of this little clique of financiers, brings us one step nearer to a new world war.

Workers and farmers of America, awake! We must unite our forces before it is too late. We must take our troops out of Haiti, Nicaragua and China. We must withdraw our battleships from the Carribbean and Chinese waters. We must stop the Freeland and the State Department from committing illegal acts amounting to a declaration of war without consulting Congress. We must demand the recognition of the Soviet Union at the hands of the Wall Street gang and put it into the hands of the workers and farmers—the enormous working mass of the American people.

Hands off Nicaragua, China, Russia, and the Soviet Union!

Put an end to the disgraceful invasion of Nicaragua!

Withdraw the marines and battleships from Haiti, Nicaragua and China!

Stop the danger of war against the workers and farmers of the Soviet Union!

Fight for a workers and farmers government in America!

General Chang Fak-wei is still said to have been forced to keep Communists in his army provided they followed the present political line of the Kuomintang and abide by the three principles of Sun Yat Sen.

In this connection Chang Fak-wei has already put forward the question of the dismissal of Communists from responsible posts in his army including in the list of exclusions eight regiment commanders, one division chief and several other officers.

Communists are likewise being dismissed from Lung Shen-chi's army, Tan Yen-kai's troops and partly from Cheng Chien's troops.

Fight for Full Ticket.

The left wing and the Communists in the pre-election struggle within the Farmer-Labor Association and the trade unions, made the fight for a full ticket, knowing that without such a ticket and especially without a head to the ticket—a candidate for mayor,—the movement already divided, would be still further confused and split up and would allow a concentration of the forces of the Citizens' Alliance and the agents of the Republican Party (whose agents in the Labor movement constitute the Leach support) against the Labor Councilmen in the several labor wards and a consequent defeat of the majority of the remaining labor representatives in the Council.

It was particularly necessary to stress the importance of retaining the Labor Aldermen because of the drive on the Day Labor system by the general Contractors and Merchants who needed at least three more votes in the Council to get a foothold in city work.

Reaction Defeats Conference.

The Communists together with the left wing and the honest supporters of the Farmer-Labor Association, not properly characterized as left wingers, proposed in the Hennepin County Committee the calling of the delegate conference, in order to point out the dangerous situation to the rank and file and to unify the movement on the basis of a full ticket and a correct working class political program. The effort was only partially successful. As pointed out above, the Leach machine and the Labor Councilmen wanted to defeat the endorsement of a Labor Candidate for mayor—the vote was 51 to 81 on the question. The discussion in the conference, however, resulted in a continuation of the discussion in the labor movement and aroused to some extent an otherwise apathetic and discouraged rank and file to the danger of the removal of their representatives in the Council.

Center Afraid to Act.

That the Labor movement and the workers generally had a somewhat hazy conception of the magnitude of the task before them, was due to the campaign that had been carried on in the trade unions since 1924 by the right wingers, who branded every move towards unity on the political field as Communism, etc. That they were able to successfully put this over in the delegate conference under the guise of saving the Labor Councilmen, resulted from the unwillingness of the center to unite with the left on this question.

Sabotaged the Campaign.

The Hennepin County Central Committee filled the balance of the ticket with the exception of one or two minor positions, nominating Lynn Thompson and Mrs. Kinney for the school board and then proceeded to turn over to Lynn Thompson full authority to conduct the Central Committee campaign headquarters. The Hennepin County Central Committee was not called again during the campaign. The conduct of the campaign under the circumstances, was exactly what had been predicted by the left wing: the central headquarters were used in the early part of the campaign (not openly) to support the candidacy of Turner for Mayor and in the later part of the campaign, after the exposure of Turner's connection with the Citizens' Alliance (again not openly) to support Leach, resulting in further confusing an already badly complicated situation.

Only Three Candidates Win.

Hanscom in the 7th Ward, Scott in the 10th Ward, Hadley in the 1st Ward, and Rudsdil in the 12th Ward, of the Labor Aldermanic candidates who came through the primaries, were defeated. Pats in the 11th Ward was defeated in the primary election because of the filling of A. M. Smith of the City and County Employes Union, and in the time of Village, a member of the 11th Ward Club of the Farmer-Labor Association which had endorsed Pratts right to withdraw and call this a "mistake" on Keller's part. It is in fact nothing short of betrayal.

Victory On School Board.

Lynn Thompson and Mrs. Kinney were elected to the School Board—a real victory for the Farmer-Laborites. Only three Labor Aldermen are left in the Council—Bastie and Peterson from the 6th Ward and Olslin from the 9th Ward—Peterson is a holdover from 1925.

That the slate was not wiped clean is eloquent testimony to the deep rooted struggle of the idea of independent working class political action, and proves again that the Farmer-Labor Party cannot be destroyed. Every force of reaction was brought into play, tens of thousands of dollars were expended by the old Party machine, their agents in the Labor movement did what they could, the aldermanic candidates themselves as previously noted contributed objectively to the campaign of the enemies of the Farmer-Labor Association. And in spite of all this, two school board members and three labor aldermen are winners.

Shipstead Remained Silent.

One of the outstanding features of the campaign was the failure of Senator Shipstead to make a single speech in support of the Farmer-Labor Party's candidates or even to issue a statement in their behalf, although called upon several times to do so.

Practically all of the other Farmer-Labor officials and office holders, the real figures of the city and state movement, did active and consistent work for the Party. Noteworthy among these were Floyd Olson, County Attorney; State Rep. O. D. Nellermoe; Ex-Senator S. A. Stockwell and Ex-Congressman Ernest Lundeen, etc. The net result of the campaign will be a quickening of the tempo of the whole movement. The workers are now really conscious of the danger of split campaigns and the backing of capitalist candidates. Plans have been perfected and organization work is already going forward in preparation for the 1926-28 campaigns.

some of the administration delegates are opposed to it and will fight it. But there is a danger that the anti-administration forces will not be able to mobilize sufficient strength to defeat these two proposals and there might be a compromise by the committee having to have 10 or 15 local unions for endorsement, which will make it very hard for an opposition to get—as it will take a month or so to visit that many local unions.

It is hoped that during this convention, especially on this question, there will develop a strong opposition which will lead a fight against the district administration.

Check-off Will Be Debated.

The question of the check-off is also coming up and a demand for settlement of this question will be made by many local unions. The district machine claims that the check-off system has the following words in it, "reciprocal cooperation and efficiency" means the granting of the check-off to the miners.

John L. Lewis, international president has declared on and off that it was his interpretation, but the agreement has been in existence for more than 16 months, and no interpretation of the clause has been agreed on by the anthracite conciliation board. There will be several resolutions on the question in demand by the local unions that it be settled once and for all. The machine will have a very hard time explaining why it is not settled.

The question of the miners of the Hudson Coal Co., of the Luzerne area is also going to come up, because for the last 4 months they have only worked for short periods at various times. The Luzerne collieries were closed before the 4th of July and have not yet resumed operations.

Threats of Strike.

The Hudson employes have held numerous conferences with district officials, demanding that the work shall be equalized by the Hudson Coal Co., so that not only its Lackawanna County Collieries shall run, but the work shall be distributed equally between the Lackawanna and Luzerne county collieries.

There have been threats of strikes but the district officials have been able to prevent them by holding conferences with the Hudson Coal Co. officials which have come to nothing.

Must Fight Machine.

The main object of the opposition forces during the convention of District 1 will be to organize and establish a leadership to fight against the present reactionary machine on the basis of union issues.

The miners' union of District 1 is in danger as it seems the administrators are pursuing the identical policy as the coal operators of the bituminous field pursued during the life of the Jacksonville agreement.

About 400 delegates represent the miners at the convention. District 1 has a membership of 60,000 miners and is the biggest district in the anthracite.

Grand Duke Nicholas, Russian White Hope, Is Sick in Paris Chateau

PARIS, July 20.—The Grand Duke Nicholas is reported seriously ill at his chateau near Paris.

Nicholas Nikolnivitch, former commander-in-chief of the Czarist Russian armies, is the leader of the strongest group of Russian monarchists. In November, 1922, he was elected by the monarchists as the successor to the late Czar Nicholas. Since that time he has been credited with many plots to bring about the downfall of the Soviet government of Russia and has been recognized as the active leader of the Russian monarchists who are active in Europe. He is suspected of drawing money from England and the U. S. A.

Fascist Police Fire on Angry Italian Peasants Shouting We Want Work

LUCANO, (By Mail)—July 8.—Another anti-Fascist revolt, the causes of which are concerned with the serious economic crisis now ravaging the Italian countryside, is reported from Trezzo sull'Adda, a village 70 kilometres from Milan.

A crowd of unemployed agricultural laborers gathered outside the Town Hall, shouting, "We want work!" The demonstration soon became very hostile, and when the police appeared on the scene the angry peasants bombarded them with stones.

At first the police defended themselves with the butts of their rifles, but presently they lost their heads and fired several volleys on the crowd. The list of casualties includes ten peasants, who are in a dying condition at hospital, and a number of wounded among the police and the Fascisti.

Later in the night police reinforcements were rushed from Monza and Bergamo to the scene of the conflict, and over a hundred villagers' homes were raided and the occupants arrested.

Mayor Attacked.

The wounding of a deputy Fascist Mayor, named Mario Baroffio, is reported from Vedano Olona, a village near Varese. Baroffio, who was assailed in the street, is now lying in hospital with two bullet wounds in the breast.

The old rivalry between industrialists and agrarians in Italy, which the economic crisis has brought again to the fore, threatens to become one of the most powerful factors of disintegration in the present crisis. Fascism was the result of a compromise between the agrarians and the industrialists, and all the efforts of Signor Mussolini have, during the past four years, tended to prevent these two contrasting forces and interests, upon which he had based his dictatorship, from breaking their alliance.

But the economic crisis has now thrown itself to be more powerful than the anti-Socialist feeling which had reconciled the agrarians to the industrialists. Signor Mussolini must now solve the difficult problem: which of his two supporters is to be sacrificed? He is no longer in a position to satisfy both.

BALDWIN ATTACKS DEMOCRACY

By LELAND OLDS.
(Federated Press)

[illegible] the government's record [illegible] time of the great industrial struggle [illegible] serve the capitalist supporters which [illegible] and that has overturned the [illegible] constitutional and legal basis for [illegible] to the powerful weapon of the general [illegible] sovereignty. The financial upper class [illegible] is prepared to discard socialled [illegible] parliament whenever labor becomes sufficiently class conscious to use the vote to control the modern economic state.

Reform.

The startling proposals for 'reform' of the house of lords offered by the British lord chancellor in the name of the government were a manoeuver. Later, with the appearance of concessions, the tory government will undoubtedly carry through most of its proposals, which also represent in the main the ideas of the liberal party. Both old parties stand for the preeminence of private property and wish a constitution which will block Socialist measures whenever the Labor party secures a clear mandate to reorganize the country in the interest of the workers.

To Hold Power.

The real aim of the government, says the Manchester Guardian, "is to preserve to the house of lords the right to keep the conservative party in power even when it is not in office." This purpose is avowed by the lords who spoke on the proposals.

"The people of this country", said the duke of Northumberland, an outstanding owner of the country's coal deposits, "no longer believe in democracy as a principle at all."

Lord Sumner pointed out that the parliament act, which curtailed the power of the house of lords, was all very well between conservatives and liberals but that a socialist government would have a long list of drastic and far reaching measures.

Your People A Beast.

"The real enemy", said Lord Monkswell, "is democracy."

Viewed as a whole in the light of this latest proposals, the program of the tory government of England has a striking resemblance to the abolition of democracy by quite other means in fascist Italy. Like the Italian program it includes the destruction of the economic power of trade unionism, the invasion of local government by the centralized power of the state and the establishment of a conservative government independent of popular suffrage.

George Young in Lansbury's Labor Weekly describes it as an attempt to impose a "dictatorship of the profiteerial."

Conservative and Liberal Rate War Splitting Canada

TORONTO, July 20.—The decentralizing tendencies in the British Empire are strong and are facilitated in every direction even down to the smallest units. British Columbia appears this week in the form of a delegation to Ottawa claims before a royal commission investigating dissatisfaction among the prairie and other western provinces. British Columbia has laid forward claim to a large territory known as "the Peace River block," which was torn from the province when it was taken into the Dominian of Canada.

The western provinces are also demanding lower freight rates. In this they have the support of the Conservative Party, which attempts to win in the west the same credit that the Liberals won in the maritime provinces by granting preferantial freight rates. A reduction in the west is expected to be followed by a further demand on the part of the citizens of Quebec and Toronto, who claim geographical factors make it just for them to have an advantage in rates. Hard feeling between these two sections of the dominion grows.

THE SOVIET-TURKISH TREATY OF COMMERCE

MOSCOW, July 4. (By Mail.) — From today on, the treaty on commerce and navigation signed between USSR and Turkey at Angora on March 11th on the basis of the principle of the most favored nation is being put into life.

The treaty contains thirty-two clauses. The first articles refer to the right of residence and the regulations for allowing operations in Turkey of Soviet economic organizations.

The treaty provides for the right of extra-territoriality for the Trade Representative and his two principal assistants and the community of the Trade Mission's premises at Angora and its branches in Constantinople. The treaty further provides for the right of the Trade Mission to open branches, besides Constantinople, also Smyrna, Trapezund, Marsuna, Erzerum, Conia or Eski-Shikiry.

A special clause permits the transit via Batum into Asiatic countries of goods of Turkish origin. In regard to customs duties all Soviet goods in Turkey enjoy the regime of the most favored nation, the Turkish goods in USSR enjoying this regime in the limits of a definite list appended to the treaty. At the same time the latter provides for granting percentage discounts from the general tariff of the USSR for a number of goods of special interest to Turkey which are enumerated in the list appended to the treaty.

Moscow Has More Than 70,000 Radios; Parks Broadcast Thruout Day

MOSCOW, July 20.—The rapid strides made in the development of the radio in the Soviet Union is indicated by the report that there are now 72,000 radio receiving sets licensed in the city of Moscow.

Lond speakers are maintained by the city in more than twenty parks and public squares, which broadcast speeches and music from dawn to darkness.

British Envoys to Naval Conference Called to London

GENEVA, July 20.—The British delegates to the naval conference, W. C. Bridgeman and Lord Cecil, have been summoned to London by Premier Baldwin, head of the tory government of murder, forgery and provocation. There are rumors here that the two British delegates were in disagreement over the question of making concessions to the American demands on 8-inch guns on cruisers. Meanwhile the American and Japanese delegates are beating time and somewhat puzzled at precisely what move is next to be made. Both delegations are burning the wires with cablegrams to their respective governments and it is generally felt that the end of the conference is only a matter of a few days, possibly hours.

There is a possibility that some sort of patched-up proposals, acceptable to all sides will be made on minor points that will leave untouched the question of cruiser tonnage and naval bases.

Kawasaki Cruisers To Be Finished By Tokio Navy Yards

TOKIO, July 20.—The Navy Department has agreed to take over the construction of two cruisers and four submarines started by the Kawasaki Dockyard Company, and abandoned by it because of inability to pay the wages of its 8,000 workers.

The Kawasaki Company is going through a financial crisis, having been involved in the recent crash of the 15th bank. It is expected, however, that the company will weather its difficulties without resorting to the bankruptcy courts.

A recent report from Tokio that the Japanese government would not come to the assistance of the dockyard has evidently precipitated the present decision to continue the building of the cruisers, important political pressure having apparently been brought to bear on Premier Tanaka.

Political Prisoners To Be Extradited to Spain; Hunger Strike in France

PARIS, July 8 (By Mail).—The three Spanish anarchists, Assaso, Durrete, and Jover, who are in prison in France prior to their extradition to the Argentine, where they are wanted for what are really political offenses, began a hunger strike yesterday.

LITLOW TELLS OF TWO OUTLOOKS OF LABOR IN EUROPE

Buoyancy in Russia but Discontent Elsewhere

"The desire of the workers and peasants of the Soviet Union is for peace," declared Ben Gitlow, member of the Central Executive Committee of the Workers (Communist) Party, who has just returned to this country from a trip to Europe, which included the First Workers' Republic.

"But," added Gitlow, "the workers and peasants of the Soviet Union, at the same time, not only have the desire to defend, but they also have the ability to defend their country."

Gitlow pointed out the tremendous and very noticeable difference in the spirit between the workers in the Soviet Union and the rest of Europe.

Hope Versus Depression.

"There is an inspiring buoyancy and hope permeating the masses of Russia," said Gitlow, "compared to the depression and deep-going discontent of labor in the capitalist countries. The contrast was especially noticeable along the Soviet border, especially where such countries as Poland, Lithuania and Latvia lie close to the territory of the Workers' Republic."

"Poland is a camp of armed soldiers," continued Gitlow. "These soldiers are not only intended for use in the developing war against the Soviet Union, but also against the Polish workers, who struggle against their misery."

Capitalism Sits on Volcano.

In discussing the recent developments in Austria, Gitlow declared that this revolt was merely relative stabilization of capitalism. He pointed out that the Vienna uprising revealed another wide crack in the thin crust supporting predatory rule of western Europe.

"The events at Vienna," he said, "show that European capitalism is actually resting on a slumbering volcano. This Vesuvius may appear quiet for the time being. But appearances are only deceiving.

"The struggle of the Vienna workers shows that there is a basis for armed actions of the workers and for revolutionary insurrections in Europe. In this situation the socialist leaders appear as specialists for the bourgeoisie in their efforts to keep the lid of oppression on the volcano of unrest."

Gitlow also reviewed the persecution to which the French Communist Party is being subjected at the present time, with indictments pending against all the members of the party's political committee. Pierre Semard, secretary of the party, Jacque Doriot, and Marreel Cachin, Communist members of the chamber of deputies, are now in prison.

"The French party is being persecuted at this time," declared Gitlow, "mainly because of its attack against French militarism. The French party in carrying on its anti-militaristic work, has one of the best records of all the parties in the Comintern."

Gitlow made a study of the trade union movements in the countries he visited.

Jay Lovestone, acting secretary of the Workers (Communist) Party, has also returned to this country after a trip to Europe, including the Soviet Union. While in Europe he gathered considering material concerning the Economic Conference of the League of Nations, and the Tri-Partite Naval Conference, both held at Geneva, Switzerland.

Hoover Visits Cal; Asks Extra Session to Plan Flood Loan

CUSTER, S. D., July 20.—Secretary of Commerce Hoover arrived here today for a conference with President Coolidge upon the advisability of calling an extra session of congress around Nov. 1.

Mr. Coolidge came over to the train to greet him—an unprecedented event—but it served to prevent newspapermen from talking with Hoover until after he had seen the president.

While Hoover would make no comment, prior to his conference with Mr. Coolidge, it was indicated he favors calling an extra session in advance of the regular December session. Hoover believes funds now available for relief work will be exhausted by November 1 or at the latest by December 1.

Coolidge Opposes Session.

Hoover has arranged a complete machinery for lending money to the farmers caught by the Mississippi flood, at a profit to the participants in his "credit corporations," but needs cheap government finances to carry it thru. Coolidge, it is understood, fears an extra session because of the danger that a stampede for giving instead of lending relief funds to the flood sufferers may develop, and because unpleasant facts about the peonage of Negro farm hands, and the graft in levee construction may come out.

Have Paid Your Contribution to the Rutherberg Sustaining Fund?

The Field Staff

Behind the main lines of the Daily Worker Army, there is the great body of field officers leading the attack against the capitalist enemy.

This field staff consists of the Daily Worker Agents, who are covering innumerable strategic posts on the battle front of the class war. The Daily Worker Army can permit no weakening of its lines anywhere on the battle front. For this reason we must demand the utmost activity on the part of our field stuff.

Where our field officers do not carry on the fight vigorously enough against the enemy, where they do not show tangible results, the discipline of our Proletarian Army demands that they be removed and that more energetic comrades be put in their places.

The victory of the Daily Worker Army in its drive for Five Thousand New Readers depends to a large extent upon the smooth working of the machinery of our field forces, upon the efficiency of our Daily Worker Agents in every city and town, in every factory and residential district.

Preparing for the Next Phase of the Chinese Revolution.

Imperialism in China has succeeded for the time being in splitting the liberation movement in segments, bolstering up the power of the northern militarists and forcing the exclusion of Communists from leading positions in the armies and government.

This is a bald statement of a bloody process by which traitors like Chiang Kai-shek, after deserting the revolution, turned upon the labor unions and peasant organizations, which make up its mass base, and slaughtered thousands of their members. Hundreds of Communists have been tortured and killed.

War is being made upon the Communist Party directly by outright tools of the imperialists and the traitors who allowed them to secure strategic posts in the national armies. The "moderate elements" upon which imperialism has been banking to stifle the mass liberation movement are now in control. Even the Wuhan (Hankow) government, which stood out for a while against the traitors Chiang and Feng, has capitulated and agreed to suppressive acts against the labor union and peasant organizations and to measures against the Communists.

The imperialists are jubilant. There is also rejoicing in the camp of the socialists and their liberal fringe. These two latter groups have given most valuable support to imperialism by their failure to support the mass liberation movement led by the Communists and by their emphasis on the purely nationalist phase of the great struggle in China.

It is apparent now to anyone who cares to see that the war on the Communists is synonymous with war on the workers and peasants and their organizations. The capitalist and middle class elements, who lead this campaign under the auspices and with the blessing of imperialism, are enemies of the masses. They were frightened, their economic interests were threatened and their political prestige jeopardized by the rapid rise of the mass organizations. The demands of the unions and the activities of the peasant organizations (Red Lances) against the landlords enraged the "moderates." They had to choose between the workers and peasants and their capitalist and middle class supporters.

They made their choice and thereby became enemies of the mass liberation movement and, having lost their popular support, became outright and open allies of the imperialist counter-revolution.

The success of the Chinese liberation movement depends upon the extent to which the industrial workers are organized and take the lead and are able to organize and lead the 300,000,000 peasants.

The Communists organized the labor movement and took the lead in drawing the peasants into the revolution. The Communists are the most conscious, disciplined and decisive section of the liberation movement. Without their participation the Chinese nationalist movement, as is already seen, tends to disintegrate into ineffectiveness.

Let the imperialists and their socialist allies take all the comfort they can from the present situation. The Chinese Communist party is not crushed, its influence among the masses is growing and, as will inevitably occur, the treason of the right wing of the nationalist movement becomes clear to the workers and peasants, there will come into being again soon a centralized mass liberation movement which will be able to deal with both imperialists and their Chinese allies.

Imperialism has been given a much-needed breathing spell by traitors to the Chinese revolution but in the next phase of the movement the Chinese workers and peasants will have learned how to deal with traitors.

There will be no Chiang Kai-sheks and Fengs in the huge worker and peasant army which, already in process of organization, will win China for the masses.

In the Chinese unions and among the peasantry the Chinese Communist Party and the Young Communist League are busy, organizing, teaching, making clear the lessons of the last defeat, preparing for still greater and more decisive struggles.

Ferdinand—Roumanian Figure-Head.

The foul monarch of Roumania, whose polluted and decaying body has long been symbolic of the ruling clique of the country of which he was the figurehead, at last lies dead amidst the luxurious surroundings of the summer residence of the royal family.

Roumania, at first neutral in the world war, because of the sympathy of Ferdinand with the cause of his Hohenzollern relative, the late kaiser, was at last swept into the conflict on the side of Britain, France and czarist Russia, by the real rulers of the country, the Bratianos. For his services to the imperialist cause of the allies the Versailles treaty gave the ruling house of Roumania the Austro-Hungarian dutchy of Transylvania and other bordering provinces, most important of which was Bessarabia, the Russian province. The population under the sway of this frightful clique was by the terms of the Versailles treaty increased from 8,000,000 to 18,000,000. This increase of territory was not so much because of Roumania's actual war services, but by way of a bribe to induce her to aid in the war against the Soviet government of Russia. From the Roumanian border murder bands made forages into Soviet territory, and still continue the practice to this day, altho they have subsided considerably before the iron battalions of the Red Army.

To relate in detail the black record of the Roumanian government since the war would require a volume and to treat it adequately would require the vitriolic genius of a Hugo. Associating with the lowest perverts on earth and addicted to all their practices, the ruling house of Roumania and the power behind the throne, will live in the annals of infamy principally because of the bestial terror carried on against the inhabitants of Bessarabia, who wanted their country to become a part of the Soviet Union. For months wholesale systematic murder was carried on against the unarmed peasants, five hundred of whom were put on trial en masse, after the arrest of thousands, many of whom died in the vile dungeons of the Bratianos. This mass trial aroused the fury of all class conscious workers of the world. Today those, who have survived the ordeal, still rot in prison.

Altho Ferdinand, the puppet king is dead, the government of terror and murder will continue as before, until finally it falls before the wrath of the oppressed masses. Just as surely as the ravages of the disease from which he suffered laid him low, so the social cancer that is Roumania will send to its death the class that he personified.

The Youth in China

A. GUSAKOFF.

The attention of the entire world is at present centered around China. Every class conscious worker knows well, that the victory of the Chinese workers and peasants, will be the beginning of a new revolutionary wave the world over and understands, that if the bitter struggle for the liberation of foreign and native imperialism, will be lost, that a new period of reaction, which will be led by the labor fakers and the traitors to the cause of emancipation will set in. The chinese youth plays a very important part in the present revolutionary movement and it is of great importance also to learn what important part is the Chinese youth playing in the various industries in China, and review to some extent the history of the youth movement in China.

Youth In Industry.

The bulk of young workers of this country, who are very little acquainted with the labor conditions in China, and know very little about child labor in China, will no doubt believe in the rumors spread by the capitalist press of this, as well as other capitalist countries that the Chinese revolution is not a result of the most miserable working conditions imaginable, as a result of the most fierce exploitation by foreign and native capitalism, a result of hitter unbelievable oppression, but that the Chinese revolution is a result of this "red" propaganda, which is the perpetual night-mare of world imperialism. But I believe that every worker, young, or old, who will review the labor conditions will immediately change his opinion about the real reasons, which precipitated the Chinese revolution.

Slavery in China begins very early, already six years old children are at work, and generally working from 6 a. m. to 6 p.m. The child-labor commissioner of the International settlement of Shanghai, reports: that many children are often employed at the age of five. The investigation which has recently been made by the Shanghai investigating committee found that in 274 factories of Shanghai's industrial district, there were over 22,000 children at work under the age of twelve. It is important to mention that the workers in China work seven days a week, and have no holidays, with the exception of New Years. Only a few minutes are given them for lunch, which is usually had within the walls of the factory. It will be very easy to understand the general labor condition in China when you will know, that by recommendations of the investigating commission to prohibit the employment of children under ten years of age, and the proposal of a twelve hour day for those under 14, and one day off at least every two weeks for all child workers were "radical" recommendations and aroused the antagonism of the Shanghai taxpayers.

It is absolutely impossible to go in all the details of the labor conditions in China, as that would only be a repetition of unbelievable misery, drudgery and shameful exploitation.

It is necessary to mention that the Chinese youth is heavily represented in all the industries of China. We can find a great number of them in the silk and textile industries, as well as in many other basic industries.

It is of importance to note, that the Chinese employed in the factories, which are situated in the foreign settlements are not within the laws made by the government. So that if certain laws are made, or passed, in order to make the conditions easier, the foreigners are not touched by them. And it often happens that Chinese concerns in order to be immune from these laws move over to the foreign settlement.

The wages of these young and old workers will again prove this tail of misery. Employees in cotton mills can get from ten to fifty cents a day, while children in the same industry get from six to 25 cents a day.

Why so many children are employed in the various industries of China is simple. First because child-labor is much cheaper, and secondly, because they must support themselves, as the parent workers can not possibly take care of them.

The Student Movement.

We should not wonder now, when we will learn, that the Chinese youth is much more revolutionary, than the youth of many other countries, it is simply because the Chinese young workers are the MOST exploited, in the world.

There is also another important thing which is worth mentioning, and that is, the Chinese youth does not live under the illusione of which are so artificially planted in the minds of the American workers and young workers, that, of even opportunities, and of all the imaginable possibilities for them. The Chinese workers and young workers know too damn well the reality, and therefore very little is this "gas in the sky" propaganda.

The youth in China is an important factor in construction of a new China, in the struggle against old tendencies, old customs, and old believes.

An important part in all these struggles had been played by the intellectual students, who took part in various revolutionary uprisings, be it of political, or other nature, and the history of the Chinese youth movement is full of cultural and old believes.

But though Dr. Tsi C. Wang, who has excellently written the history of the Chinese Youth movement, is trying to tell us that all the revolutionary uprisings of the Chinese students were of a political nature whatsoever, we can sight many examples of the students' devoted and active support to the labor movement of China. Many of us remember the students strike, which took place in Shanghai, and then was followed up by many such demonstrations in various other important centers of China, in support of the striking workers. Many of us remember the vigorous protest demonstrations after the Shanghai, and Peking outrages, and even our near sighted enemies will have to admit, that not only did the Chinese students participate in general reconstruction of a new culture in China, that not only did the students devote much of their time in various important provinces to educate the Chinese workers, but also did they play an important part in the political uprisings and demonstrations.

It is important to mention that the students in China, take it as their duty, to be the leaders of the workers, to be the leaders of the illiterate, and to take part in the reconstruction of society, and to contribute to the general advance of their people as much, as they possibly can.

The Russian Revolution had a great effect upon the revolutionary movement of China, as well as of many other countries. It was the beginning of a definite crystalised movement, which received broad support. The Communist Party and the Communist League had an increase in new members, the attitude of Soviet Russia towards China, which was much different than that of any other country, and proved to the Chinese that the Russians are the only real friends of China, which is not interested in exploiting her, but is always ready to help her to get rid of her enemies, the great powers. This attitude of Soviet Russia had a very good influence upon the masses of Chinese workers. The nationalist movement only helped to consolidate the youth movement, and brought more young workers into the ranks of the Young Communist League of China.

Today the Young Communist League has a membership of 30,000, while only a year ago the membership of the Communist League of China was 2,000.

That only goes to prove that the Chinese young workers are becoming more and more class conscious, that more and more Chinese young workers are begining to realize the necessity of being organized on a class basis, and fight not only forsign imperialism, but also native capitalism, that more and more Chinese young workers are begining to understand that their problems are the problems of the entire working class, and only by organising themselves and waging a battle to their oppressors will they be able to achieve their aim.

When will the American young workers begin to realize it?

The Basic Problem of World Imperialism.

How much longer will the diplomats at Geneva try to keep up the pretense that agreement on naval strength is possible between the two rival imperialist powers—America and Great Britain?

There has been no fundamental change in the conflict since the first day of the conference on the question of naval armament. There has been a continual oscillation by Japan between the two more powerful imperialisms. Both have been bidding for her support against the other.

But on the question of naval strength it has been apparent from the first that Great Britain and the United States will build as many battleships, cruisers, destroyers and auxiliary craft as the imperialists think they need and appropriations can be secured for.

While the American delegates bait the British at Geneva, American imperialism dominates the Pan-Pacific conference held in Honolulu. Here, too, the rivalries show more clearly than ever before and America's drive for domination of the Pacific area breaks thru the diplomatic phrases.

The Soviet Union is not represented at the Pan-Pacific conference, altho its territory touches the world's greatest ocean in wide reaches; the question of relations with the Soviet Union underlies all imperialist conferences.

War is in the air and all these conferences center around the alignments for the next war. With the temporary defeat of the mass liberation movement in China, a series of new alignments for war against the Soviet Union is in the making.

Geneva and Honolulu make clear the imperialist rivalries, but there is something still more sinister in the fact that there is at present a great silence in regard to the basic world conflict—that between the Soviet Union and its workers' and peasants' government, where there is being built a socialist economy, and the imperialist powers representing world capitalism.

How to make war upon the Soviet Union without arousing the masses of the world to a counter-attack which would put an end to world capitalism, is the problem, which the ruling class is trying to solve.

Dodging the Sacco and Vanzetti Issue.

To a resolution demanding "unconditional freedom" for Sacco and Vanzetti, right wing delegates in the Upholsterers' Union convention now in session here appended an amendment, commending Governor Fuller for appointing his "investigation committee."

This is a fair sample of the methods by which the struggle to free these two innocent workers is confused and weakened. Governor Fuller is holding the "inyestigation" because of the tremendous mass protest thruout the world and not because he has any desire to save Sacco and Vanzetti. To commend him for what took years for labor to force him to do, for a measure which is a hypocritical pretext of fairness designed principally to halt the movement in behalf of Sacco and Vanzetti, is to play into the hands of the capitalist interests whose spokesman Fuller is and which are responsible for the seven years of torture suffered by these two workers.

Such methods give aid and comfort to the enemies of Sacco and Vanzetti, who are also the enemies of labor, and cannot be condemned too severely.

Letters From Our Readers

To The DAILY WORKER:

A writer in one of the Chicago papers recently, in answer to an inquiry about the possibilities of getting a job with the welfare department of some corporation, made a very discouraging reply, due to the small amount of welfare work he says is now being done.

Not long ago, all the "welfare work" which attained such a vogue a number of years ago to the desire of the employers to counteract the tendency of the men to seek higher wages, but now that wages are no longer rising and there is a surplus of labor he says, the companies don't want to spend the money, they don't have to offer any thing to offset higher wage demands and the men don't look so favorably upon welfare work if accompanied by decreasing wages.

Of course the class-conscious workers always knew what was behind the "welfare work," but at the same time capitalist writers do not always expose the scheme of the capitalists so frankly, and such an exposure might be all the more convincing to whatever workers may have been fooled by such schemes.

If what this writer says is correct, then there ought be a lot of workers beginning to think of the only dependable method of improving their conditions and resisting the lowering of standards, that is thru their organised economic and political power.

BOSSES START SCAB AGENCY IN FIGHT ON UNION

Declaring there is no room for "labor leaders," the Electrical Board of Trade, headed by the notorious open shop Charles Ediltz, is attempting to smash the Electrical Workers' Union.

In addition to backing and supporting Richard L. O'Hara, ousted president of Local 3, in his attempt to take the Union from those who have ousted officials, Ediltz is encouraging a "union" calling itself "The Association and Maintenance Electrical Workers of Greater New York."

The organization of the dual union is intended as a scab agency, it is said. A number of workers have joined the scab union because of the failure of Local 3 to take them into the union.

Unless Local 3 lets down its barriers completely and takes energetic measures to admit many electrical workers of the various crafts into the union, the dual union, intended as a scab agency, will be a constant menace, according to persons in close touch with the situation.

Evidence that the ousted officials of Local 3 of the Electrical Workers' Union carried on a campaign of graft and corruption while in office was submitted in court yesterday by former Assistant District Attorney James E. Smith, counsel for H. H. Broach, international vice-president. The ousted officials, backed by Charles Ediltz, open-shop chairman of the Electrical Board of Trade, has applied to Supreme Court Justice William H. Black for a receiver to handle the funds of the local.

The ousted president Richard L. O'Hara and former Secretary O'Toole forced a contractor working on a power plant for the Edison Company to pay them $200 a month, Smith charged.

The drive to organize repairmen and men on contract jobs that is being conducted by the present officials of the union is responsible for Ediltz's drive on the union, H. H. Broach charged in an interview with a representative of The DAILY WORKER.

Tenement Revision Committee Winds Up N. Y. Housing Probe

After conducting the extensively heralded and congested tenement house districts in Queens Tuesday, members of the Tenement Law Revision Commission wound up their investigation of New York's tenement houses yesterday with an inspection of Bronx and Manhattan slums.

"We didn't realize what a tragedy a fire starting in one of these rows of houses might mean," said Senator Antin, a member of the commission after inspecting outlying sections of Brooklyn and Queens. "Fitting construction, they already have begun to deteriorate. They undoubtedly constitute one of the great fire hazards of the city."

If a fire were to start in certain section of Queens, the great Chicago fire would look like a cigaret lighter in comparison, declared Harold Riegelman, counsel for the commission.

UPHOLSTERERS' CONVENTION IN SESSION HERE

At Tuesday's session of the 15th biennial convention of the Upholsterers' Union now being held at Hotel Cadillac, 45d St. near Broadway, the entire morning was devoted to listening to speeches by well-known officials of the American Federation of Labor.

About ten progressive resolutions have been introduced by delegates to the convention, Local 37 of Boston has not before the convention resolutions demanding the immediate release of Sacco and Vanzetti, the affiliation of the International union with the National Council for the Protection of Foreign Born Workers and with the Workers Health Bureau.

For Hands Off China.

Local 76 of New York, the largest local in the union having over 1,300 members, has introduced resolutions demanding "Hands Off China" and recognition of the Nationalist government of that country, for the recognition of the Soviet Union and in favor of a labor party also in opposition to the Citizens' Military Training Camps.

The resolutions are now in the hands of the resolution committee and probably will be acted upon at Thursday's session.

In the president's report to the convention it is stated that the union has 83 locals and 11,063 members.

Among those that addressed the 41 delegates were John Sullivan, president of the New York State Federation of Labor; Hugh Frayne, organizer of the New York Federation; Peter J. Brady, president of the Federation Bank and A. Lessing of the Amusement Crafts.

Tells of Bank.

Brady told the convention at great detail of the Federation Bank, how in four years it has grown from $500,000 to over $20,000,000. "Every community," continued Brady, "is in need of a good labor bank. When you ont of town delegates start to organize them, be sure and call in the local business men and place them on the board of directors, so their expert advice will help in the management."

When Brady finished speaking, William Kohn, president of the union, who was presiding asked him to tell Governor Smith that "if he desires to become president of the United States, it is our wish to help him be elected."

Green Couldn't Come.

Letters were read from William Green, president, and Frank Morrison, secretary of the American Federation of Labor stating that they would not be able to address the convention due to the fact that they are attending the sessions of the Pan-American Federation of Labor now meeting in Washington.

Boston Young Workers to Hold Many Meetings

BOSTON, July 20.—A series of open air meetings are being held by the Young Workers (Communist) League Local Boston, for the purpose of exposing the war dangers and the militarization of the youth. Meetings will take place at Spring and Chambers Streets, Bolton; Lawrence and Blue Hill Avenues, Roxbury, Mass., July 18; and Woodrow and Blue Hill Avenues, Dorchester; Cross and Salem Streets, N. E. Boston, July 19th, also at Davis and Harrison Avenue, S. E. Boston, July 21, and E and Broadway, South Boston, July 23.

All speakers report to District Office 7 P. M. on the day they are assigned to speak.—Nat Kay. Dist. Org.

The Joint Board Furriers Union Tuesday issued an official statement regarding responsibility for the break in peace negotiations, which were inaugurated last week with the A. F. of L. Reorganization Committee under the auspices of Magistrate Joseph Rosenbluth.

The statement says:

"The Joint Board Furriers Union desires to make clear to the fur workers the entire matter relating to the peace negotiations between the A. F. of L. Committee and the Joint Board.

"The brave and aggressive struggle of resistance now carried on by the cloak and dressmakers and furriers unions against the bosses, the Forward clique and the chiefs of the A. F. of L. who are attempting to convert the needle trades unions into company unions, has forced the Matthew Wolls and McGrady's to begin peace negotiations with the leaders of the expelled unions.

"The chaos and demoralization now prevailing in the cloak, dress and fur trades, the unbearable conditions of the workers, who are subject to widespread unemployment and are suffering from the jobbing and contracting and speed-up systems; standards of production; wages that have been reduced to the point of starvation; are the direct results of the criminal attack launched by the politicians of the A. F. of L. on the needle trades unions.

"An unprecedented campaign of terrorism; hiring of gangsters; police persecution; long terms of imprisonment; mass arrests of peaceful pickets—these are the methods employed by the Forward clique, the Matthew Wolls, Greens against the workers with the aim of forcing their discredited leadership on the unions. The unbearable conditions that have been brought about in the needle trades unions by these disrupters of the labor movement, thru a policy of expulsion and reorganization of unions against the will of the workers, has opened the eyes not only of the thousands of organized workers of all trades to the treacherous role that the Matthew Wolls and Greens—posing as workers' representatives—are playing in the labor movement; but has also called forth bitter resentment from the New York Central Trades and Labor Council, a bonafide part of the A. F. of L. which has openly exposed and rejected the strikebreaking methods of the chief representatives of reaction—American capitalism—Mr. Matthew Woll. Under this pressure from the general labor movement, the representatives of the A. F. of L. were forced to carry on negotiations for peace with the representatives of the furriers and cloakmakers unions.

"The peace negotiations of both unions made clear their positions at the peace conference—that the lefts within the unions do not carry on the struggle that they have undertaken for them for the sake of satisfying their gains and ambitions, but in the interests of the mass of the workers. This was once more clearly established by the peace program offered as a base for negotiations. We did not deny that we are interested in peace and unity in our international unions, but at the same time, we demanded that the unions should be instruments of struggle to defend the interests of the workers and not to enable the bosses and their agents to exploit the workers. We therefore demanded that:

(1) "The A. F. of L. officials should eliminate the hired sluggers from their dual union.

(2) "Reinstatement of the expelled locals and individual members.

(3) "That the A. F. of L. should nullify their secret supplementary agreement with the bosses and should recognize the agreement which was signed by the Joint Board and Association representative on June, 1926, after the victorious general strike, i. e. a guarantee of the 40-hour week and the other recent gains of the workers.

(4) "That all the appointed dictators of the A. F. of L. be eliminated and elections be held. In order to insure an honest election, an impartial committee agreed to by both sides to be selected to supervise the elections.

"The above were our peace terms. Time and again we assured the spokesmen of Green and Woll that we are not seeking paid offices in the union and are not conducting the struggle to insure our further continuance as paid officers. To prove our sincerity, Comrades Gold and Shapiro were ready to decline to run for office in this election, although it is their constitutional right to do so. We unquestionably established at the peace conference that the interests and welfare of the workers are above all other considerations.

Woll Fights Union Principles.

"However, it is evident that Green and Matthew Woll feared to agree to our peace terms, which are based upon fundamental democratic principles of the trade union movement—to which the members are entitled even in accordance with the constitution of the A. F. of L.

"It is evident that President Green and Matthew Woll cannot, and have no desire to, eliminate their hired sluggers, since they are opposed to the 40-hour week. They are opposed to our recent gains achieved thru our struggles. They are opposed to holding elections and to the reinstatement of the expelled locals and members. They are opposed to a united and strong union. Therefore they refused to accept our peace terms.

"Is more proof necessary to establish the fact that they are enemies of organized labor and are serving the bosses? Is more proof necessary to show that the 'rights' are lost to sell out the workers, to deprive them of their rights as union members and to convert the unions into company unions. The very fact that the A. F. of L. officials broke off the peace negotiations and refused to accept our peace demands, throw a clear light upon the entire situation and demonstrates clearly the suspicions of Green, Woll, Forward & Co.

"This does not weaken the fight, but on the contrary, their action opens the minds of the workers and offers sufficient proof to the rank and file that the fight is necessary in order to protect the interests of the workers and against the bosses and their right wing agents.

"The Unity Committee, which has initiated the movement for unity in the International Unions, has a twofold purpose:

(1) "To mobilize all local unions thruout the country for the unity movement.

(2) "To eliminate the traitors of the labor movement.

"It is the duty of every honest union worker to support the Unity Committee financially and morally in its activities. The victory of the Joint Boards of the Cloak and Dressmakers and Furriers Unions means the victory of the entire labor movement."

Government Spends More Cash for All But Vets' Hospital

WASHINGTON, July 20.—National defense and expenses resulting from the war, cost the government $2,190,736,000 in the year ending June 30th, according to figures announced today by the Treasury.

This is a heavy overhead which comprises practically two thirds of the entire cost of government operation.

Interest on the public debt continued to be the heaviest single item of expenditure, having required a layout of $367,819,000, a cut of about $44,000,000 from the preceding year.

Care of veterans of the world war accounted for an expenditure of $391,470,000, a slight reduction from the 1925-1926 year. Vocational training operations have been wiped out while hospitalization costs are falling.

National defense and engineering projects of the war and navy departments, cost the government 687,717,000, an increase of about $12,000,000 from the preceding year.

With the exception of the veterans bureau and state department, every government establishement showed a heavier operating cost than last year, although the increases were small.

The white house required $612,197, as compared to $438,678 the year before.

Ammonia Route Workers.

The workers of Anthony Krayer, Inc., 122 Warren St., were routed from the shop yesterday when a gasket on an ammonia pipe in the refrigerating plant burst. The fire department was called and with the use of electric fans cleared the air of fumes.

Right Wingers Force Capmakers to Accept Production Standards

Four hundred striking capmakers were forced to swallow a blitzr pill when the right wing administration leader, President Max Zaritsky announced that they had won the 40-hour week at the expense of accepting standards of production. The announcement was at a membership meeting held at Beethoven Hall yesterday afternoon.

The bosses had previously declared that they were willing to grant their workers a 40-hour week providing that the union accepted the manufacturers' standards of production, and the final agreement marks a defeat for the right wing administration.

The decision of the right wing leaders met with the disapproval of the rank and file of workers who attended the meeting.

Negro Race War in Dayton May Lead to Riot and Bloodshed

DAYTON, July 14. (By Mail)—A race war, long brewing, broke out here in the Fourth Ward district, in which several hundred people participated the first week we were here. Several duty days out on a year we of civil service proportions. Mr. A. T. Stewart, vice president of Robinson, Industrial Secretary of the Dayton Chamber of Commerce, and Mrs. A. M. Risser, who is running for City Commissioner on a segregation platform, and a Mr. Ireland, the West Side Building and Loan Co. The organization, said the chairman, was formed to hold the boundary lines which they had established for the Negro.

Call Loans.

The real estate man reported that the Building & Loan Companies with the exception of one or two "pirates" had agreed to retail the Negroes who had bought property in "white territory," and to force them out of the neighborhood. A Mr. Dunlery and a Mr. Fiesse were mentioned aaused of the "pirate" real estate men who were selling property to Negroes.

As the meeting proceeded, the tension in the audience increased and it took on the atmosphere of a religious revival, one after another getting up and "testifying" to his experience. One man said: "If I came home and found a thief in my home, trying to steal the few dollars my pocketbook contains, I should be justified in taking a gun and killing him; when I find a Negro buying a property in my neighborhood, he is robbing me of hundreds of dollars, and I am justified in doing the same thing." This remark was greeted with wild applause, and a chorus of "Yes," "Yes," "Sure," etc.

Another arose to point out that the people of the west side could not depend on the city officials to help them in this matter, but must take affairs into their own hands. He cited the attitude of Mr. Richelberger, the City Manager, who had promised to support the west side citizens, but had pointed out that as there were 40,000 people on the west side, and 18,000 colored; and as the whole of Dayton had a colored population of only 17,000, he didn't see any reason for the colored people occupying the whole of the west side for a while yet.

Proposes Lynching Bee.

It was suggested by another speaker that every Negro-loving man who hired a Negro be boycotted, and that no merchandise be accepted if it were delivered by a Negro. As the tension grew more and more heated, a direct incident to riot and lynching was boldly voiced by one man who proposed that a committee of 50 white citizens wait on the two real estate dealers who had sold property to Negro citizens, escort them to the country, and "horsewhip the hide off them."

One of the younger men in the audience who had the temerity to ask for some constructive plan for dealing with the problem of the Negro population was promptly silenced with shouts of "They can go to Hell."

These solid, respectable citizens, pillars of the church, and upholders of white supremacy, then adjourned, after setting the following Monday for the next meeting.

Dorsha Will Star at Daily Worker Carnival

Florence Stern, the noted violinist and Dorsha, the well known rythmic dancer, will be the chief stars at The DAILY WORKER Carnival and Fair, which will be held for one day only, on Sunday, July 24.

The fact that Saturday has been eliminated in order not to interfere with the Joint Defense Concert on Saturday night, has evoked expressions of marked appreciation

Tickets for the carnival are now on sale at 106 East 14th St., and the Jimmie Higgins Book Shop, 106 University Place.

Jail Two of Dry Squad On Charges of Perjury

WASHINGTON, July 20. — The voluntary efforts of a group of capital clergymen to assist the police in "making Washington dry" received a setback today. Two of the volunteer "informers" sponsored by the church organization were arrested on charges of perjury, and are accused of taking part in a complete frame-up, during which they fell into a police trap.

With 27 entries recorded and others pouring in steadily, indications are that approximately 100 airplanes will participate in the trans-continental race from New York to Spokane, Washington, September, 19, 20, and 21.

SUNDAY STRIKE LOOMS, DECLARE UNION LEADERS

"Unless the I. R. T. officials yet decide to make reasonable attitude a solution is possible within the next few days," declared T. J. Shea, vice president of the Brotherhood of Railway Clerks, an executive board member with a representative of The DAILY WORKER.

"The I. R. T. officials have stubbornly avoided all efforts on our part to negotiate a peaceable settlement. Apparently they are determined to subject the people of New York to the inconvenience of a transit tie-up."

Conciliation Company Trickery.

Declaring that the I. R. T. officials have been using coercive tactics to get their employees to sign company contracts, J. H. Calhoun, organizer for the union declared, "Right now in the various terminals where the men are being called to 155 Broadway, the headquarters of the I. R. T. and threatened by company dictators with discharge if they do not at once capitulate. These men have been told that only a few employes have refused to sign. Each man is advised that he is not standing practically alone and that he cannot hope to gain anything by remaining loyal to the Amalgamated.

"Fortunately these men know that the company's claims are without foundation. With lawyers bullying them and threatening them with discharge, they know the true situation."

Referring to the growing demand of the workers for an immediate strike, Shea declared, "there is an ever-increasing tendency among the men to engage in a life-and-death struggle with the I. R. T. on the question of successful unionization. More and more each day we have men call on us and ask us to lock horns with the I. R. T. gang on the question of a workers' union.

Central Trades To Discuss.

The grievances of the I. R. T. workers will be brought before the Central Trades and Labor Council of New York Thursday evening Shea said. Prominent officials of the American Federation of Labor are expected to address the meeting.

The New York Industrial Survey Commission has repudiated all rumors that it is interested in the negotiating of the present struggle, Shea declared.

Open Shop Spear-Head.

The attempt of the I. R. T. to foist a company union on its workers is the spear-head of the nationwide open-shop movement, according to Coleman. The I. R. T. in trying to establish a closed shop organ is in reality leading the fight for the elimination of unionism, he declared.

No Chicago Strike.

CHICAGO, July 19.—The strike of the 18,000 Chicago traction workers that has been threatened for the last few weeks was averted yesterday when officials of the traction company and the union came to an agreement to submit the wage dispute to a board of three arbitrators. One arbitrator will be named by the union, one by the traction corporation and they together will make a third today.

Japan-German Treaty Opens Eastern Markets For Coal, Tar, Dye Stuff

TOKYO, July, 20.—The Japanese-German Commercial treaty, giving Germany preferred trade rights will be signed formally at the Foreign office tomorrow, it was reported today. The treaty will annul the prohibitory dyestuffs restrictions which grew out of the world war, and strikes a blow at the American dye stuff industry.

French Communist Party Leads Today's Struggle of the Workers in France

By J. LOUIS ENGDAHL.

NOTE—Here is another chunk of the activities of the Communist movement in France written by Comrade Engdahl, who stopped in Paris a few days on his return to this country recently from visits to Soviet Russia. Other articles will review additional phases of the interest.

If you were sent to draw information from the fact that the headquarters of the French Communist Party is located at 106 Rue LaFayette, the Paris street named after the young French soldier who aided the American revolution in its struggle against the British tyranny in 1776.

For it is the Communists of today in France, like Jacques Doriot, just returned from China, who are aiding the revolutionary movements in foreign lands, not to the lifting of French imperialism, especially where its own colonies are concerned. Doriot was acclaimed only by the French workers and farmers on his return from China. The government had a six months' prison sentence awaiting him. The latest reports are that Marcel Cachin, editor of l'Humanite, central organ of the French Communist Party, and Doriot went to prison on Monday of this week.

It is remembered that the great key of the Bastille was given by LaFayette, the American revolutionist, Tom Paine, as a present for George Washington. It is now at Monnt Vernon, in Virginia, the Washington estate.

Thus Rue LaFayette is linked historically with the Place de la Bastille, or simply "La Bastille," which was once the site of Bastille St. Antoine, a castle built in 1370-83 and spared when the old fortifications were demolished under Louis XIV. This fortress which had become odious as a symbol of arbitrary and tyrannical imprisonment was made historically famous by its total destruction ou July 14, 1789, by an enraged populace at the beginning of the French revolution of that year.

In place of the Bastille, there is now a huge open space adorned by the Colonne de Juillet, erected under Louis Philippe in 1831-40, in memory of those who fell in the revolution of July, 1830. The giant bronze column, 154 feet high and 13 feet in diameter, rests on a massive round base of white marble. Undgr this base are two huge sarcophagi, for the remains of the victims of the July (1830) revolution, and also for those who fell in the revolution of February, 1848.

The Place de la Bastille also played a memorable part in the revolutions of 1848 and 1871. In June, 1848, the revolutionists erected their strongest barricades at the entrance to the Rue du Faubourg-St. Antoine. In May, 1871, this was one of the last strongholds of the Communards, by whom it had been formidebly barricaded.

French revolutionary history, however, is still in the making. The Bastille, levelled to the ground and its stones used in the building of the Place de la Concorde, may be a horror of history. But there is a new "Bastille" in Paris. One of the political prisoners of today, La Sante Prison, where Pierre Semar, the secretary of the French Communist Party is being held, and where many other Communists have served or are serving prison sentences for their championship of the new revolution.

Semar had been one of the delegates of the French Party at the sessions of the plenum of the Executive Committee of the Communist International in Moscow. I had looked forward to him carrying on his work at the French Party's headquarters in Paris. But instead he was in prison. I was told that he was not even allowed to see visitors in prison, except for an occasional visit from his wife and child. During the time I stay in prison, his assistants at the party headquarters, 106 Rue LaFayette, are keeping up the work of the party. (Since my stay in Paris, Semer has been released and again returned to prison.)

As you walk east in Rue LaFayette, you are first attracted by a magnificent display of literature in front of a pretentious bookstore. Here are not the writings of the revolutionary days that are gone, of Robespierre and Marat, of Danton and Boeuf, of Rousseau and Gambetta. I had seen many of the books and pamphlets of these earlier revolutionists in the original editions, and copies of the newspapers they had edited, in a carefully prepared exhibition at the Marx-Engels Institute in Moscow.

Here on the bookstall of the French Communist Party, in Rue LaFayette, in June, 1927, however, were the books and pamphlets of Lenin and Bukharin, of Stalin and Cachin, of Marx and Engels, of Jaures and Barbusse, the writers of today's revolution.

The entrance to the party headquarters is thru a hallway to the left. I find a comrade ou guard at an outer office. In fact, here in Paris, as at Berlin and Moscow, I found "strictly business" the rule of the day everywhere. The party headquarters constituted a place to work and unless you were vitally connected with this work the comrade at "the outer office" would quickly turn you back.

The comrade here, as at the offices of the l'Humanite, could not read English. But he could understand the meaning of the Hammer and Sickle on my American Communist Party credential. He pressed a button on his desk that opened a heavy, latticed door that led the way to the stairs to the floors above.

Every party activity had its separate room with the proper sign affixed to every door. There was the trade union work, the work in the colonies, woman's work, work among the youth and the children, the organization department and the political bureau. Stenographers were busy as usual in the secretary's office, in fact, some of their typewriters were American makes. The party fraction in the chamber of deputies was in session discussing policies to be pursued in the meeting that would open shortly this very afternoon. Marcel Cachin is the chairman of the fraction, with Jean Cachery as secretary. There is a bureau for work among the farmers. In fact it was very clear that the French party was functioning energetically in every possible direction, that the party's 65,000 members are kept hard at work strengthening the forces of the revolution in France.

All Paris is dotted with the memories of revolutions past. At the offices of the French Communist Party in Rue LaFayette, and at the home of its central organ, l'Humanite, in Rue Montmartre, one feels the throb of labor's struggle for power today. One may also hear the voice of the revolution in the Palais Bourbon, where the French Chamber of Deputies holds its sessions, and where 26 Communists sit as the spokesmen of the working class of France.

WHO AM I?

I have the toughest job of lungs in the United States.

I can hurl more moral indignation than an angry auctioneer.

I oppose the Coolidge administration now and then but I don't mean any harm to "Cal."

The stout of girth I am a slim read for the workers and farmers to lean on.

I hail from a state that begins with an I and ends with an O, which means that every farmer in I—O owes money to the bankers.

Hankow vs. Nanking in China

By ANNA LOUISE STRONG.

SHANGHAI, July 18 (FP)—On the boat from Kobe here I met Hs Shih, known as one of the leaders in the Chinese Renaissance, which was the simplification of the alphabet and the use of common life for literature. He is for the Nanking group of Chinese Nationalists and against the Hankow group. The Nanking crowd claimed that their is an anti-Communist purpose; the Hankow that theirs is a civil government versus military domination.

I went to T. V. Soong. Remembering him from Canton, and knowing his financial genius, I intended to base my estimate of the two groups on his views. His personal freedom in Shanghai is hardly safe. But he has not gone in with the Nanking crowd and has no intention of doing so. He advised me personally to go to Hankow at once as the most important place to see real changes.

Almost Prisoner.

T. V. Soong is older than when I saw him in Canton. Then he was a brilliant youth. Harvard graduate, clever in finance; now he is a man who has experienced the deep cleaving of human life. He could not go up to Hankow now if he would for Chiang Kai-shek, the Nanking leader in collusion with the British authorities, searches all boats on the river, and takes off alleged Communists for court martial.

Soong dispassionately analyzed the mistakes of both groups.

Graft At Nanking.

However, Nanking's defiance of the authority of the executive committee of the Koumintang by a military man seems to Soong to continue the same old troubles that forever ruined China. Graft is rampant; specific instances show that officials, through whose purchases of the Nanking government money passes, make 100 per cent on the transactions. I dare say graft is rampant in other parts also, including Hankow. Raids, searchings and round-ups of "Communists," which means any labor leader, keeps the Chinese city of Shanghai in terror. Now for the first time, the British settlement allows extradition of political offenders, these offenders being labor men.

Britain's partisanship is interestingly shown otherwise. While she helps Chiang against Hankow, she helps the north against Chiang. On his drive to Pekin he has to cross the Yangtze river. His opponent, retreating north, takes all the railroad rolling stock. Chiang's troops have to walk. He desires to ferry some locomotives and cars across the river from the southern stretch of railway, but Britain prevents, alleging the "interest of British bondholders of the railway." Some say the British even threatened to blow up Nanking if he tried to take the rolling-stock across.

Metters are not so hopeless as they seem on the surface. While the split is a real one and a dangerous one, yet the two Nationalist groups are prevented from fighting each other by the fact that they would lose tremendously by doing so. They can keep morale, which wins Chinese victories almost unaided by guns, only by advancing towards Pekin. So both sides are advancing.

Right Wing in the Bakers Preparing to Disrupt Local Union

Several of the leading progressives of Local Union 500 of the International Bakery and Confectionary Union have been called to the Executive Board and charges resulting from their activities in exposing some of the class collaboration manipulations of the officials made in the recent settlement with the Pechter and Messinger Bakeries.

Bad Contract.

The right wing officials concluded a settlement favorably to the bosses and yielding to them in hours to the disadvantage of the small bakeries in the trade. Instead of 7 hours the bakers will have to work 7½ hours. The agreement also provides for taking care of many of the scabs by giving the boss the right to have two bakers as navigers. It also establishes arbitration to take all complaints arising out of the operation of the agreement, a practice which before did not exist in this union. The union has done all the arbitrating heretofore. The agreement also binds the union for 3 years instead of one year, and make it possible for the bosses to establish mixed shops and thus get additional advantage in working rules. It leaves room for considerable favoritism in order to divide the workers. It cuts down the the free bread allowance to half.

Tried Once Before.

The officials attempted to put over a similar agreement about 2 months ago but did not succeed. They refused to bring further pressure to bear upon the bosses after the rank and file had rejected their proposed settlement by refusing to heed the repeated request of the drivers to organize and to walk out in support to-made by Messinger with the Amalgamated Food Workers involving a shop employing 2 men setting up the cry that this Union is scabbing, and that at the same time the left wingers prevent them from making a settlement. They knew perfectly well that this settlement involving only 2 men could not be a decisive factor and that they were merely using it as a weapon to demoralize the strikers and club them into accepting the settlement they were negotiating which as many of the workers said was worth $40,000 for the bosses to pay for.

Gangs Work Together.

The officials of the Amalgamated Food Workers Local No. 3 played into the hands of the corrupt leaders of the strike by making the settlement with the Messinger shop, and the left wing fought against it inside the Amalgamated which is very well known to the officials of the International. The leadership of Local No. 3 of the Amalgamated is an reactionary as the leaders of the International and except for the fight put up against their scabbing policy, they would have made a settlement with Messinger of the same kind that the International Officials now made, not only with the shop of 2 men with the big firms as a whole.

The Left Wing has always advocated the amalgamation of these rival baker organizations but the local 3 leaders have succeeded in blocking it thus far.

Only Lefts Help.

The concessions made to the bosses in this settlement will intensify the process of wiping out the small bakeries where the union has its strongest hold and will further undermine the union strength. Local 164 of the Amalgamated Food Workers controlled by the lefts was the only one that really acted in full solidarity with the bakers from the. International although the same cannot be said from the experience this local has had with the International Bakers. The rank and file had understood the game that was put over them in this settlement called an opposition meeting at which some of the leading left wingers spoke and this is the crime that they are being charged with and for which the right wing is now preparing a civil war inside the organization. The result of which will surely strengthen the bosses at the expense of the Union.

WORKERS OF AUSTRIA

By ALEX FIELD.

Workers of Austria
awaking at last sucking upward in bewildered mass our comrades are sacred
they shall not be dead
Proletarian vengeance has risen in your hands.
they said,
you were sleeping and you did not awake lulled by misleaders veiled by the phrase under the cup of which you drank
you demonstrated your wrath.
your blood my comrades
shall not too,
be shed of expiation
for the right road to follow through to smash the betrayers
the murderous henchmen
Liebknecht, Luxemburg
who killed you?
Hark my brothers
Hungary waits with bated breath is time for the Lefts call for a new

The Executive Committee of the Communist International Greets Klara Zetkin

Hails 70-Year-Old Veteran of Revolution Who Has Held High Traditions of Marxism Over Period of More Than Fifty Years of Struggle.

THE Executive Committee of the Communist International has sent the following letter to Comrade Klara Zetkin:

"The ECCI sends its comrady greetings to you on the occasion of your seventieth birthday. Your birthday is at the same time an anniversary of revolutionary marxism and of proletarian internationalism.

"You comrade have devoted more than fifty years of your life to the cause of the proletarian class struggle. You are the living embodiment of the revolutionary traditions of the German and of the international proletariat. Your way is the way of all honest, determined and revolutionary elements in the camp of the working class. In the time when the proletariat began to collect its forces, organize itself and school itself for the class struggle, you, together with Franz Mehring and Rosa Luxemburg, bore the revolutionary lessons of Marxism into the broad masses. You fought mercilessly all attempts to misrepresent revolutionary Marxism. She bore the lessons of Marxism into the masses as the greatest lessons of the public class struggle, as the lessons of the proletarian revolution and of the dictatorship of the working class.

WHILST Kautsky degraded Marxism to a justification of the palsivity of reformist bureaucrats and retreated step for step in the face of Bernstein's revisionism, you steered, despite everything, against the stream, in the struggle against the falsifiers of Marx, the vain and petty trade union and party bureaucrats. Even when it was necessary to oppose Bebel, probably the best representative of the old social democracy, you did not hesitate. Your work in the Second International was the exemplary work of a revolutionary Marxist in the time when the proletariat was collecting its forces for the struggle.

"YOU have not transformed Marxism into an innocuous and petty socialism unconnected with the class struggle as the theoretical philstines of the social democracy have done. Rather you bore the lessons of revolutionary Marxism into the ranks of the workers, amongst the millions of oppressed proletarians, amongst the lowest ranks of the proletariat, amongst the working women, amongst the wives and daughters of the proletarians. Generations freed from the yoke of capitalism will remember your work for the emancipation of the working women with gratitude, your work for the inclusion of the women's struggle in the general struggle of the proletariat, your work for socialism.

"YOU have held high the banner of the revolutionary Marxism in times of 'peace' and in the times of war, in difficult times, when almost all socialists betrayed their banner, you did not let it drop from your hands. In those days when Plechanov, Quesde, Kautsky, not to speak of the lesser important of the reformists and bureaucrats, harnessed themselves to the war chariot of imperialism and betrayed Marxism and the revolutionary class struggle, you stood in the centre of the small group which rescued the honor of the German and the international working class movement. Whilst Ebert, Scheidemann, Thomas, Henderson and the others were housed with seats in the cabinet, your lot was that of which all revolutionaries must be proud. Bourgeois Germany flung you into prison. After the war came the real split in the German social democracy. The opportunism very turned itself into a wing of the bourgeoisie, into a bourgeois workers party. The present social democracy has forsworn Marxism. The name of Bernstein is written on its banners.

"THE Kautskys have capitulated before Bernstein's revisionism, but the Zetkins have held up the banner of Marxism, the banner of the proletarian revolution.

"THE founders and the leaders of the Second International today are Noske and Wels, MacDonald and Henderson, Renaudel and Thomas, the enemies and murderers of the working class, the servants of international capitalism, the privy councillors of His Majesty. The Communist International sorrows that the great pioneers of the proletariat, Rosa Luxemburg and Karl Liebknecht were murdered at the bidding of Noske and Wels and have not xperienced the days of storm and fame accompanying the development of the revolutionary struggle over the whole world. But the Communist International is proud that you, Klara Zetkin, were amongst its founders. The Communist International and its Germau section are proud that such old and tried fighters of the proletarian cause, such tried and trusted Marxists as you are fighting in the front ranks with them. The Russian revolution and the Communist Party of the Soviet Union are proud to have in your person a self-sacrificing friend, comrade and pioneer to defend the cause of the Party, of the revolution, of Leninism against all attacks, with all the power of your burning zeal, your great heart and your revolutionary passion.

"ON your seventieth birthday Klara Zetkin, we express the couviction that in the near future, the proletariat of Germany and other couutries which has seen such leaders as Liebknecht, Luxemburg, Mehring and you Klara Zetkin, you will rally in its overwhelming majority around the banner of Communism-Leninism under which Liebknecht, Mehring, Luxemburg, Knief and Jogiches fought and under which you are still fighting today. Your whole life has been devoted to the struggle for the international revolutiou, for the German and for the Russian revolution, to the struggle of all the oppressed for the emancipatiou of the whole of humanity. Upon your seventieth birthday the Communist International expresses its firm couviction that you will be fortunate euough to experience further fruits of your fifty years work and struggle.

Long live Klara Zetkin, the old fighter for revolutionary Marxism and the international working class movement!

Long live Klara Zetkin, the oldest leader of the Communist Internationol and the Communist Party of Germany!

Long live the coming revolutiou in Germany!

Long live the proletarian world revolution!

The Executive Committee of the Communist International.

YOUNG EDITOR KIDS CAL; GETS VISIT FROM COPS

W. W. Busick, the 23-year old publisher of "The American Atlas," a new magazine in Pasadena, has a sense of humor. Furthermore, having observed that 80,000 men are walking the streets of Los Angeles in search of jobs, he takes Cal Coolidge's prosperity speeches with several grains of salt.

He therefore addressed a letter to the Chief Executive of this Glorious Republic which said:

Marines For Pasadena.

"Recently there were three holdups, one murder, two automobiles stolen in Pasadena and I have just received word that an aqueduct has been blown up near here.

"Inasmuch as our nation has marines in China and Nicaragua to protect American lives and property, I ask that a troop of marines be stationed here in Pasadena for the same purpose.

"The Standard Oil Company has several stations and a depot here, which I feel sure they could protect, making them feel entirely at home.

"The schools of Los Angeles are forced to feed 14,000 starving children. May I have copies of your speech in which you said that the farmers had raised too much foodstuffs? I would like to distribute this speech among these children.

Less Food and More Marines.

"If it is not asking too much, I would also like to have copies of Mr. Mellon's speech in which he announced that we are in the midst of a great prosperity. I would like to distribute this speech among the parents of these 3000 children. If you have any extra copies, please forward for distribution to the 86,000 unemployed of Los Angeles.

"Yours for continued prosperity, less food and more marines, The Editor."

Virtues Reward.

Busick sent his letter to the Chief Executive, before he had left for the Black Hills and donned a ten-gallon hat and chaps. On July 13th Busick was rewarded by a visit from two detectives. This is the way in which he (Busick) desribes the session:

"The more pompons of the two, who exuded a genuine movie detective atmosphere, opened the clothes closet and surveyed its empty expanse.

Guardians of the Law.

"Then the gentlemen seated themselves. Neither wore derbies, but since the gentleman with the generous abdomen smoked a huge black cigar and knocked his ashes on the cherpet I assumed they were 'plain clothes' guardians of the law.

"After inquiry as to my business, one of the gentlemen drew from his pocket a blue print. It was a copy of my letter to Coolidge.

"I had mailed this letter to His Excellency weeks ago. I had asked for marines. But again the administration had bungled and sent only a couple of detectives.

"Authoritatively knocking more ashes on the carpet, the custodian of the law inquired if the signatures to the letter was mine. I volunteered that at least it bore a very close resemblance.

"The the leader of the bluffing expedition turned loose a barrage of questions.

"Do you belong to any organization to overthrow the government?" he asked. I suppose this shrewd Sherlock expected if I was no affiliated I would break down in tears and confess.

"I answered: 'No.'

"Do you distribute atheistic literature to school children?' was his next inquiry.

"'No.'

"Do you distribute political literature to children?'

"'No, is it against the law?'

"'No, but we look after it.'

"During the inquisition both of the super-sleuths had been taking a sample of everything but coffee. The gentleman seated by the pile of ashes on the carpet swooped up my bank book that was lying on the desk. There was a look on his face that indicated a great mental effort, followed by a prolonged silence, then by a light of exaltation. Finally he phrased his thought:

"'Who financed your magazine?'

"I had to admit I was guilty of the crime.

"'What do you mean by writing to the president and telling him what an awful city Pasadena is?'

Cal's Permission.

"I tried to explain that the letter wasn't a slam on Pasadena, but rather a satire on the Coolidge and Kellogg policy of sending marines to butt into other people's business.

"The 'Badge' with the big cigar flecked another inch of ashes on the carpet.

"'Do you believe in the government?'

"I asked him what he msaut by 'the government.'

"'You ought to kuow,' he replied.

"At this the silent sleuth, who had been busy reading over a copy of my magazine, turned: 'He doesn't believe in the government. Right here he criticizes Coolidge having a third term.'

"Another flutter of ashes to the floor and I was told that I had a right to my opinion.

"But did you get Coolidge's permission to use his name in your magazine?' the gentleman with the cigar asked.

"'I don't think he would have to get Coolidge's permission,' the silent sleuth hazarded.

Busick said he then accompanied the detectives to the police station, where, after an examination by the chief, he was allowed to go his way.

THE Y. W. L. DISTRICT SCHOOLS

It is well to note the progress of the educational work of the Young Workers League. The district schools thruout the country can very well demonstrate this fact. The following schools have been organized this year: Ohio, Massachusetts, Oregon and Superior. I do not know the details of all these schools, but just a few remarks on the Superior Young Workers League School, or the Young Workers League Educational Courses.

There are forty seven students attending the classes twenty four boys and twenty three girls, averaging 17½ years of age. I was very much surprised to see how seriously these students take their studies. This fact makes one believe that each one of them is determined to go back to their respective localities and put their knowledge into practice, which I also learned from different conversations with some of the students.

The students are not only taught theoretical subjects, but they are also organized in the so-called model league, which is composed of shop and street nuclei. This league is putting into practice the theory of organization which they learn in the classes, as far as its environment and limited industrial surroundings permit. This gives those who belong to the league a chance to learn how the work of the Young Workers League should be conducted and those who don't belong to the Young Workers League, a chance to find out the principles of class organization so that when they join the league, and I am sure they will, they will be able to become active from the very first day of their entering the League.

The subjects lueluded in the six week courses are as follows: Scielology, American History, Marxian Economics, Class Struggle Theory, Public Speaking, Young Workers League Organizatiou, Current Events, Socialist Reconstruction, etc.—which is devided between two instructors: Comrades A. J. Hayes and J. Williamson.

The relationship between the students and instructors is very comradely, but at the same time the students feel that they must study their subjects, as there is a check up on the work of the student, so that their time and the time of the school is not wasted.

Especially interesting is to witness the Public Speaking Class. It is noteworthy to see how these young workers and farmers get up in front of the class and relate their experiences in factories and farms or else choose general subjects as "Conditions in China" etc. When the instructor asked if there are any volunteers to make another speech, about fifteen hands went up. They got over their first (stage fright) period and are ready to get up in large audiences and freely express their opinions.

The other classes are also very interesting and of great importance to this new squad of Young Workers League functionaries, as I am sure that 99 per cent of them will be of great value to the League.

These young workers and farmers who are in constant touch with the masses who are not class conscious will utilise their knowledge and experiences to organize them into the ranks of the Young Workers League.

More district schools, more Communist education in our ranks will help to build up a mass Young Workers League which is one of the most important tasks of the Young Workers League at the present time.

KING "Ferdy" of Roumania, who had so long dodged the undertaker, finally passed in his checks, no doubt to the great relief of his loving queen who is now free to make another American tour in the interests of talcum powder and holeproof hosiery without the likelihood of her adventures being marred by frantic eables from her spouse as was her last panhandling visit here. Much the our upper and middle classes love royalty they are still too much under the influence of John J. Babbit's conception of connubial propriety and they did not think it was nice of Marie to be going around inciting civil war among professional receivers and greeters who fought for the honor of touching the hem of her majesty's garments.

THE passing of Ferdinand will not make a particle of difference in the lives of the Roumaninn masses. The country's affairs are in the hands of the Brationo brothers who have plundered it for several years. The king was never more than a figurehend. Like all the small patiens of Europe and of the world, Roumania is a puppet of one of the big European capitalist powers. So much for the right of self-determinntion of whirh Saint Woodrow spoke. John D. Rockefeller has more to say in Roumania than 100,000 Roumanians.

LATE reports from the sick bedside of J. Ogden Armour the hog king, hove it that his illness is due to a mistake in going into the wrong ron of pork byeprodhrt. It seems thnt there are two kinds of lnbels for the Armour cnnned goods. One is designed to notify the upper elasses that the rontents are fit for human consumption. The other decorqtes the cans destined for proletarian jaw. Armour probably got home late one night after sampling some of those eclipse cocktails that are qnow the rage in London, and raided the ice chest, but plundered the servant's fodder instead of the gruh destined for his own aristocratic stomach.

ARTHUR BRISBANE admits that the killing of 300 Nicaraguans by United States bombs puzzles a good many Americans. Arthur's Americans must he very naive. There is nothing puzzling nbout it. They were killed because they were ready to fight for the freedom of their country and since Wall Street, for strategic as well as commercial reasons wants a government in Nicaragua that will sneeze whenever Wall Street takes snuff, hundreds and if necessary thousands of Nicaraguans will be killed to make Wall Street's rule in that country supreme.

THE Geneva naval parley is either limited up or most of its members have gone on a vacation after a few week's snarling at one another. In our opinion nothing will come out of it except more business for the mass grave diggers and more fresh meat for the vultures and the sharks. The British delegates have adjourned to London to consult their government. It is possible that some fake agreement may be arrived at to save Calvin Coolidge's face and bluff the masses into believing that those buzzards favor peace, but it will be on paper only.

LATE reports form Vienna indicate that the capitalist government is wreaking vengeance on the workers who took part in the great demonstrations last week. The socialists, true to their treacherous tradition, agreed to the government's terms unconditionally even to calling off the proposed mass funeral, and as soon as the capitalists get the upper hand they will not indulge in any mock exhibition of forgiveness. They will use the iron heel and attempt to crush the workingrlass organizations that proved, despite the handicap of traitorous leaders that they have the power to take things into their own hands in Austria.

MRS. Sun Yat Sen, widow of the late revolutionary leader of China and foqnder of the Koumintang, decided to quit that organization because of its desertion of the revolution and its recent open alliance with imperialism. Mrs. Sun will retire from political activity for the time being. She has hope in the final victory of the revolution, but believes that it must be a movement of the workers and peasants and all oppressed elements to be of any real benefit to the Chinese people. She is quite right.

EVIDENTLY Mrs. Sun does not agree with those long distance fake radicals who blame the Soviet Union for the division in the ranks of the Koumintang. This brave woman who worked shoulder to shoulder with her famous husband knows that the Soviet Union of all the governments of the earth was the

PREPARE TO FEED SACCO, VANZEETI BY BRUTE FORCE

Boston Workers Plan Mass Protest

BOSTON, July 21.—Preparations are being made in Charlestown prison to forcibly feed Sacco and Vanzetti. Warden Hendry said yesterday that compulsory feeding would take place as soon as the medical condition of the two condemned workers warranted it.

Dr. McLaughlin, the prison physician calls daily to see the men and subjects them to a rigorous examination. So far, the doctor says, they are in a "fair" condition and the compulsory feeding is not being given to them. However, because of the hardships to which the prisoners have been subjected it is feared that they will not be able to hold out very much longer.

When McLaughlin comes to that conclusion the men will be strapped to an infirmary table and be fed by means of a rubber tube which is jammed into the stomach of the

Postpone Hearing of 4 Arrested in Anti-Fascist Raid

The hearing of the four anti-fascists who were arrested on July 11th by agents of the Department of Justice working hand in hand with the Mussolini secret service and who are being held by the Bronx County Court has been postponed until Tuesday.

After District Attorney Alderman's petition for a week's adjournment had been refused, Judge Cohn granted him until Tuesday to prepare his brief. The scarcity of evidence against the framed-up anti-fascists is the reason given for the delay of the hearing by persons in close tourh with the case.

The anti-fascists who will come to a hearing Tuesday are Mario DiAmico, Cologaro Greco, Donato Carillo and Phillip Narzone.

U. S. secret service agents who raided and made the arrests admitted that they were working with Mussolini agents under orders from the Italian ambassador at Washington.

Geneva Delegates Await Results of London Conference

Military Concentration of British Forces in India Aimed at U.S.S.R.

LONDON, July 8 (By Mail).—The well-known Calcutta daily, "Forward" recently published an article in which it hinted at the military concentration to take place in Burma. The British government is sensitive about its preparations for war on Soviet Russia, and the paper has been excluded from Burma.

Earl Winterton, under-secretary for India, when questioned on the subject in the House of Commons, said that the article in question was "of a very offensive and inaccurate nature, charging the Labor government and the present government with having fomented the disturbances in China and containing a very aggressive attack upon the leader of the opposition * * * it referred to the leader of the opposition (Ramsay MacDonald) as a 'mealy-mouthed labor leader who was playing the dirtiest of games.'"

It took considerable pressure to force an admission from Winterton that the article had contained references to the new plans of military conrentration in India.

Workers' Life (London) remarks that the tenderness of the Tories for the feelings of the labor "opposition" is natural, since it was while the Labor government was in power that the plan for the expeditionary force was first sponsored by Lord Haldane.

LONDON, July 21.—The condition of J. Ogden Armour, American millionaire, who is suffering from typhoid fever, is unchanged, said a bulletin issued from the bedside this morning.

HAVE A SEAT! By Fred Ellis

"An Offense Against the United States"

These are the words used in the charge of the Federal Grand Jury against The DAILY WORKER and members of its staff. What does this mean? It means that it is "an offense against the United States" to open the eyes of the American workers to the growing War Danger and to agitate against it. It is "an offense against the United States" to denounce the murder of one of our marines in Nicaragua and the cold-blooded slaughter of three hundred native workers, or to hold Mr. Coolidge responsible for it. It is such an "offense" also to fight the Open Shoppers and the enemies of labor.

For this "offense" and no other, The DAILY WORKER is now being prosecuted by the Federal Grand Jury, with the cordial support of various patriotic and reactionary societies, which are closely linked up with the leading business interests of the country.

The DAILY WORKER has committed an "offense" only against the ruling class of the United States with which the Federal Government, by its charge identifies itself. The DAILY WORKER has committed no offense against the workers of the United States. On the contrary, The DAILY WORKER stands out more than ever as the firmest friend of the workers, particularly in this critical hour when the dogs of capitalist war are again being unleashed.

For this reason the GUARD THE DAILY WORKER FUND will receive the full support of workers throughout the United States, in spite of the efforts of the Federal Government and the Dollar Patriots to destroy our paper.

More Peasant and Labor Uprisings Worry Wuhan; Troops Are Still Gathering

WUHAN, China, July 21.—As more and more stories of peasant uprisings thruout lower Hunan and Kwangtung provinces come into this capital, the government officials retire deeper into their own confidence. Affairs of state are practically in control of the reactionary generals which the Kuomintang "leaders" have permitted to gain control, and it is reported that those who still believe the principles of Sun Yat-sen are leaving Hankow to gather in Kiukiang tang government may be established soon.

COURT DECISION CLEARS FURRIERS OF BRIBE CHARGE

Charges made by William Green and Matthew Woll that left wing furriers had bribed members of the New York police force during the fur strike last year were dismissed by Magistrate Joseph E. Corrigan yesterday. Magistrate Corrigan was named by Mayor Walker to investigate the charges of alleged police bribery.

Although Corrigan's report is biased and appears to have been motivated largely by a desire to clear the New York police force of the charge of accepting bribes, he admits that there is no evidence backing up the claims of Messrs. Woll, Green, McGrady and other reactionary leaders in their attempt to discredit the left wing leaders.

Corrigan's Unproved Charges.

Corrigan's report attempts to shift the issue from the charges of „bribery" to vague hints that fur leaders put the unions' funds to "improper uses." Corrigan's veiled charges are no more substantiated by facts than the charges of the reactionary labor leaders.

Gold, Mencher and Shapiro, persistently denied the charges of the

Scotch Miners Elect Communists; Turn Out Right Wing Laborites

EDINBURGH, July 21.—Communist and left wing miners scored an overwhelming victory in the Lanarkshire elections when two Communists were elected president and secretary.

Profiting from the betrayal of the miners by the right wing laborites, the Lanarkshire miners overwhelmingly defeated the old guard and returned Comrade MacNulty as president and Comrade William Allen as secretary.

American Federation of Labor officials. Although Woll declared that they had "admitted" the graft charges at investigations, the original notes taken by a stenographer, Miss Elizebath Kesson, who attended the investigation, proved the left wing leaders' denial that they had ever made any confession.

ANTHRACITE MINERS' CONVENTION REFUSES OFFICERS 4-YEAR TERMS

Strong Opposition Overcomes Fake Delegates and Defeats Cappellini Grab for More Power

SCRANTON, Penna., July 21.—The chief point at issue in the convention here of District 1 of the United Mine Workers of America (the anthracite district) has been all along the demand of District President Cappellini that he and his official family be permitted a four year term of office instead of two years. And on that point the administration has been definitely defeated, after a heated fight, in which the opposition to the office grab was led by Wm. J. Brennan, candidate for International secretary-treasurer on the "Save the Union" ticket and others prominent in the fight for a clean administration last year. The full power of the Lewis administration in the International union was thrown in favor of the four year term. International Vice President Thomas Kennedy was sent down especially by Lewis to tell the convention that "there is no reason why you should not increase the term of office of your president."

Advises Long Term.

"This district convention is a constitutional body and the delegates are privileged to change or revise the constitution as they see fit," Mr. Kennedy declared. "The district holds the right to change its constitution to the point where it would try to usurp the power or laws of the International body," the International officer said.

The opposition to Cappellini was expected to argue that a four year term was unconstitutional, as no other district has such an arrangement, and Kennedy's function was to destroy that argument.

The vote was 251 to 231, and came as a great surprise to Cappellini and his supporters, who have taken much trouble to pack this convention by the well known "fake local" and "fake

CONVENTION ASKS PRESIDENT ALLOW FREE NICARAGUA

Pan-American Members Adopt Resolution

WASHINGTON, July 21.—The substitute for De La Selva's resolution demanding withdrawal of American forces from Nicaragua and condemning the murder of Nicaraguans at Ocotal was handed to the Pan-American Labor Convention here this afternoon by the committee which has been considering it. Vice-president Woll of the A. F. of L., chairman of the committee announced that the Nicaraguan delegation submitted to Woll's revision of it, and the resolution was thereupon adopted unanimously by the convention. It calls for withdrawing of marines from Nicaragua, and offers the Nicaraguan Federation of Labor the assistance of the Pan-American Labor Congress to accomplish this end.

Report Killings.

The substitute resolution follows: "Be it resolved that the executive committee of the Pan-American Federation of Labor address the government of the United States expressing regret for the events having occurred recently in Nicaragua; that it likewise address the respectful but emphatic petition to immediately withdraw the United States forces on land and sea and air in Nicaragua, and in terminate its intervention in the interest of that nation so that the people of Nicaragua may fully and freely work out their own problems both for the present as well as the coming election for a president of Nicaragua, and without any interference on the part of any foreign nation, it being the opinion of this congress that interference on the part of a foreign nation will only make more difficult the solution of Nicaragua's problems.

Will Aid Labor.

"Be it further resolved that we deplore the tragic events as related in the daily press referring to the loss of lives and destruction occurred on account of the intervention decreed against that free country and in order to be helpful to the Nicaraguan Federation of Labor, and the people of Nicaragua, the executive committee of the Pan-American Federation of Labor be authorized to lend all possible cooperation and assistance to the Nicaraguan Federation of Labor for the fulfillment of this resolution.

"Be it further resolved that the greatest possible publicity be given this resolution in the western continent in order that the fullest knowledge may be contained upon the situation prevailing in Nicaragua."

REPORT MARINES LOST 25 KILLED IN OCOTAL FIGHT

Sacasa Man Says Bodies Shipped Away

MEXICO CITY, July 21.—The bodies of twenty-five United States morines were taken to Chinandega and Leon after the battle of Ocotal, Nicaragua, between marines and general Sandino's forces, according to a statement issued today by Pedro Zepeda, agent of the Nicaraguan liberals here. Zepeda declares he had received his information from Costa Rica.

Zepeda denies that General Sandino is a bandit. He says Sandino has 1400 men under him and only 400 of these took part in the Ocotal battle. Not many of these were hit by marine fire, but machine guns and bombs from U. S. planes destroyed many non-combatants.

Official reports stated that one marine was killed and another wounded in the Ocotal battle, but in this respect, the well known policy of the naval and state departments of minimizing their losses to avoid outcry in American is to be remembered.

MANAGUA, Nicaragua, July 21.—General Sandino, far from being despondent about a defeat before Ocotal, is laying plans for a quick concentration and an attack on some other fortress of the invadge marines, perhaps even Tiscapa, the stronghold which overawes Managua. It is said here that the main body of the Nicaraguan nationalist army was never engaged at Ocotal at all, but that the marines fought with merely a strong patrol from the army of Nicaraguan independence, and used their airplanes to shell villages not even in the zone of battle.

Sandino's Proclamation.

Salsino has published a report on the reasons for his taking up arms against the United States, as follows:

"To all authorities, civila and military. Why the Ocotal combat took place.

"First, to show that we continue protesting and defending the constitutional rights of Juan Sacasa (former Liberal President).

"Second, to disabuse the idea of those who believe we are bandits.

"Third, to prove that we prefer death to slavery, for the peace secured by Moncada is not the peace that can give liberty to men, but peace that puts a man under the domination of others.

"Whoever believe we are downcast by heavy casualities misjudge my army, for today we are more impatient than ever to seek out the traitors of our country, determined to die if we cannot secure complete liberty for all men.

"I wish to say that the only one responsible for what has happened here is the President of the United States, Calvin Coolidge, who has supported Adolfo Diaz."

Moncado's Latest Treason.

General Moncado, formerly chief of staff for President Sarasa, has issued a denunciation of General Sandino, accusing him of banditry, and a variety of crimes and offences, such as cruelty to American prisoners and unwillingness to obey orders from his superiors.

About all that is true in his statement seems to be that Sandino refused to be surrendered by Moncado, when the latter made his famous "sell-out" to the American Admiral Latimer, and betrayed his army and the constitutional government of Nicaragua for a price as yet unknown.

Latimer Boasts.

WASHINGTON, July 21.—Rear Admiral Latimer, after reporting here to the Navy Department, gave an interview to the press in which he boasted of the increase in profits for business men in Nicaragua.

Richard Verhagen Dies; Was Party Secretary at Schenectady, New York

SCHENECTADY, N. Y., July 21.—Comrade Richard A. Verhagen, Workers (Communist) Party secretary in this city, died at twelve o'clock, Wednesday noon, of injuries received from a fall from a roof on which he was helping his neighbor. The funeral will be held tomorrow, at two o'clock from his home on Rosendale Road, Schenectady.

Long a Proletarian Fighter.

Comrade Verhagen was one of the very best type of proletarian fighter, having devoted all his life to the cause of labor. In 1912-13 he was socialist assessor, elected on the tide that swept the George R. Lunn administration into office in Schenectady. When Lunn, who was so-called "socialist mayor" of that city betrayed his trust and started his career of political adventurerism that carried him to congress and later to the lieutenant-governor's chair as a Tammanyite, Richard A. Verhagen was the leader of the socialist fight against him.

For his trade union activity against the powerful Western Electric Comrade Verhagen was driven from Schenectady and went to work in the steel mills at Gary, Indiana, whence he later moved his family. When the great steel strike broke in 1919, Comrade Verhagen was in the front ranks of the fight at Gary, being a prominent member of the strike committee, during which time he also became active in the young Communist Party that had just been organized.

When the strike was over he was blacklisted by the trust and forced by starvation out of Gary. After working in various places he finally came back to Schenectady but the General Electric never forgave him his activity of thirteen years ago so he endured a hard struggle there. In spite of all the persecutions he remained an undaunted fighter at any post assigned him.

Britain Rivets Chains On Egypt; Imperialist Grip on Economic Life

LONDON, July 8. (By Mail).—It is easy to understand the intense hatred of Britain felt by Egyptians at the present time and their suspicion of the motives underlying the flattering treatment so lavishly meted out to the puppet King Fuad in England.

Five years have elapsed since February, 1922, when, on the recommendation of the Milner Commission, the alleged "sovereignty and independence" of the Egyptian nation was formally recognised by Great Britain, whilst leaving over for further discussion and negotiation the four essential points which form the pretext for Britain's continued control: the security of British imperial communications, including the Suez Canal; the defence of Egypt against foreign nations other than Great Britain; the position of British and other foreign functionaries and residents; and the control of the Sudan.

Britain Strengthens Strangle-hold.

Since that date the British Government has strengthened her former strangle hold on the country.

All Egyptian officers have been forcibly ejected from control of the Sudanese army, and the Sudan has been placed completely under the military control of the British army of occupation. An immense barrage has been constructed on the headwaters of the Blue Nile, in the interests of the British cotton growers' syndicate, thus controlling the flood waters of the Nile, and placing the whole economic life of Egypt entirely at the mercy of the British imperialists.

Demands of Egyptians Resisted.

The British Government has successfully resisted Egypt's demand for the establishment of a republic by buttressing the unpopular King Fuad with a fence of British bayonets; has forbidden Zaghlul Pasha to assume the premiership of the Egyptian Government in spite of his immense victory of the Socialist party, the Wafd, in the last elections, and recently has succeeded in re-imposing on Egypt the British control of her army by the appointment of Spinks Pasha as Sirdar, or Commander-in-chief of the Egyptian army.

The visit of King Fuad to England will mark the finish in Egypt, if those planned in order to shackle her people more firmly in their slavery to their imperialist bosses.

Use Tear Gas Bombs On Miners' Children; Beat Men With Club

RENTON, Pa. Following the use of tear gas bombs by the police to break up a meeting of striking miners and their families, the whole community was terrorized by a night attack by a band of thugs, who shot into the homes of strikers, wounding several men, women and children.

The police, who, it is charged, acted as a ruthless strike-breaking force in the interest of the coal operators, have been in the habit of raiding the homes of strikers without warrants, and beating up men, women and children.

Twelve of the miners were taken before a justice of the peace and fined twenty dollars each on a charge of being disorderly.

All of the men with the exception of one, Chuck Mangino, who was a delegate to the 1924 National Convention and who got a new job when he came here, from the conventions are standing out.

One of the children that was beaten said: "My teacher said I may be president some day, but I want to be a union miner."

Gentlemen's Agreement Over State Judge Job Collapses; War Is On

ALBANY, July 21. The Democratic state convention will be held at Albany in September and John F. O'Brien of New York, at present a judge of the Court of Appeals, will be nominated for that office. Judge O'Brien was appointed to the post by Governor Smith some months ago. He is a Democrat.

Until a few weeks ago, it had been generally expected, at least by Governor Smith, that the Republicans would endorse Judge O'Brien so the election this fall could be non-partisan so far as the Court of Appeals was concerned. Then came the announcement by a group of Republican leaders that they would oppose the endorsement of Judge O'Brien and would have a Republican candidate for that post.

For years it has been the custom to have both major political parties in the state endorse the same candidate for Court of Appeals. Previously, leaders of both parties have insisted there should be no politics in the state's highest tribunal.

delegation" parties. The sentiment was so strong against Cappellini in this case, that not even these mercenaries dared defend.

Won't Talk of Check Off.

Besides Cappellini in his report attempted to sidetrack the check-off question, but was forced by the delegates to take a definite stand on it. The anthracite strike was betrayed and sold out on the check-off virtually lost, along with the closed shop, merely stating the basic terms of agreement, and briefly recounting the negotiations that led up to it.

Likes Side Issues.

The bulk of Cappellini's speech, which occupied more than four hours, dealt with other affiliates of the delegates, particularly the legislative program for mine improvements in the state of Penn and for old age pensions, etc. There was no call for a labor party, the last one's report showed complete defeat for the present plan of lobbying with the old party assemblymen for the measures.

Cappellini also devoted some time to arguing for a button system to show dues payment instead of the present card system. Instead of forcing the employers to take care of the check-off as required in the mines, Cappellini favors a fifty cent tax on the union membership for that purpose.

Represent 60,000.

By P. H. T.

The seventh biennial convention of the hard coal miners of the Wilkes-Barre-Scranton territory is in session in Town Hall, Scranton. Credentials were presented totaling 300 delegates, representing some 60,000 members of this district, seated on the basis of one vote per each one hundred members.

As usual, the harrumscarry indulged in a lot of formalities before organizing the convention, their obvious purpose being to delay the transaction of business in order to permit the administration bohemia sufficient time to mingle with the delegations and line them up for the machine measures which will come before the convention in the form of resolutions and also will be contained in the reports of the officers.

Want Royal Power.

The most vicious piece of legislation the machine wished to have adopted is the proposal to extend the term of office from two years to four years and to revise the constitution so that a candidate for office must secure 25 nominations instead of the present required five nominations.

This move of Cappellini, heartily endorsed by International Secretary-Treasurer Kennedy, is designed to create an actual monarchy insofar as the conduct of the affairs of the union are concerned.

This move of the machine is very obvious, for it means, if the proposal is adopted, that the present administration would only have to stand for "election" once in four years, and the added difficulty of the increased nominations for any aspirant for office means that the Cappellini gang will do everything in their power to hold on despite the anger and hatred of the membership.

Judge Talks.

The first day of the convention showed nothing startling. There was a speech of the usual twaddle by Judge George Maxey of Lackawanna County, who told the delegates what wonderful men Cappellini, Lewis and John Mitchell are.

The credentials committee reported partially, showing that there is an overwhelming fake delegation and official family representation from the "peanut" locals. There were but two contests; the credentials committee will henr the contest and give recommendations later.

Members vs. Bureaucrats.

An air of tension pervades the convention. The division of the men on the platform and those on the floor is quite apparent. Altho there was not much happening at the first day's session to warrant a prediction of the ultimate outcome, it can be said that there will be many bitterly contested issues before the convention closes.

The progressive wing have several exceptionally important resolutions before the convention, one dealing with support of the soft coal strike financially and otherwise by establishing relief committees on a tri-district scale, another raising the issue of the check-off for discussion by the convention and the "five year agreement (the five year sell-out), a Sacco-Vanzetti resolution, and a resolution calling for a national strike in support of the bituminous miners. The report of the district tellers, reporting on the "results of the last election" will be another bone of contention between the administration and the opposition. The opposition will show how brazen and flagrant this election was stolen by the machine.

The convention was in session no more than two hours the first day.

Upholsterers Beat Move for Boost in Strike Assessment

Lively discussion featured the third day of the Upholsterers Union convention of the Hotel Cadillac when the delegates overwhelmingly defeated a motion to increase the strike assessment from $5 to $12 a week.

William Kohn, president of the union charged that the most reactionary forces of the organization wanted to have the motion passed as a means of embarrassing the administration of the union. He pointed out that those elements preferred to prevent the development of organization work of the union to satisfy their own political ambitions.

In the course of the debate it was brought out that at the last national convention held two years ago at Chicago, 4 Hatch Ave. York delegate has introduced a resolution to prevent more than fifty per cent of the officials of the union being Jews. Due to a compromise effected off the convention floor it had never come up for a vote.

Eulogize Jews.

This statement acted as a bombshell among the delegates who one after another took the floor to express their admiration for the Jewish race. For a short period the convention was turned into a testimonial for the Jews. Among those who spoke during this period was a delegate Isaacs who apparently now wants to live down the resolution he introduced at the Chicago convention.

The progressive resolutions on Russia, China, the Labor Party and others will come up at today's session of the convention.

Bengal Indians Form Workers and Peasants Party to Lead Masses

LONDON.—The revolt of the oppressed masses of Bengal has manifested itself in the recent uprisings of the peasants in Barisal, Modaripur, and other parts of Bengal.

Because the majority of the Bengal peasants (80 per cent) happen to be Musulmans and uninchahle Hindus, and their direct oppressors are chiefly upper-class Hindus, the "upper"-class leaders of both communities are trying to misrepresent this healthy spirit of the masses of Bengal as communal strife, and are criminally trying to misguide the discontented masses in that direction.

There are many proofs that the Musulman landlords (though very few in number) are just as exacting and oppressive as the Hindu masters. What has been lacking hitherto has been real working-class leadership. But now the newly formed Workers' and Peasants' Party of Bengal, with its elaborate working-class program, has supplied this much-needed leadership.

Worker Correspondents Reorganize in Chicago

CHICAGO, July 21. When The DAILY WORKER moved to New York the Chicago worker correspondents felt disheartened. Their publication, The American Worker, correspondents was discontinued, they did not meet with much encouragement from New York. For a time worker correspondence from Chicago completely disappeared from The DAILY WORKER columns. But the class struggle is still going on in Chicago, the workers are still fighting and organizing, and the worker correspondents felt it their duty to get back on the job, back into the fight. Steel Nucleus 2S W. P took union itself the initiative to reorganize the worker correspondents. As a beginning five comrades joined the group. They participated in the special Chicago edition of The DAILY WORKER. They are collecting labor news, discussing it and preparing it for the press.

At every meeting of the group a discussion takes place on what is news, how to get, digest and prepare it for the press. One of the most important weapons in the class struggle is the press. The capitalists fully recognize this and are therefore controling and directing it. The working class does not yet fully understand this and therefore lacks the proper enthusiasm in supporting its own press. A big majority of the workers still read the capitalist press and believe in it. It is the duty of the worker correspondents to awaken the masses, to expose them in their press and to fight the influence of the capitalist press. The duty of the worker correspondents is to write as they fight!

Worker correspondents of Chicago! Get back on the job! The labor press needs you! Don't be a slacker! It is not only a duty, but also a privilege to be able to WRITE AS YOU FIGHT! All worker correspondents who wish to join the group should send in their names and addresses to the group at 1902 W Division St. Chicago.

Earl Browder, Returned From China, Will Speak In Pittsburgh, July 25

PITTSBURGH, July 21.—Earl Browder, editor of Labor Unity, a delegate to the Pacific Labor Conference in Hankow this year, elected secretary of the conference, will speak at a public meeting arranged by the Trade Union Educational League, Monday, July 25, at Walton Hall, 250 Stanwix St., Pittsburgh. Admission is free, and everybody is welcome.

Revolt in Anti-Saloon League Over Threat of A Dry Democratic Party

WASHINGTON, July 21. Capital Politicians are speculating today as to whether Wayne B. Wheeler general counsel of the Anti-Saloon League, and long the main prop he has maintained on the dry organization for many years.

A division of opinion has been created between Wheeler and his chief lieutenants, Bishop James Cannon, and the Rev. Arthur J. Barton.

Cannon and Barton have collaborated in a statement sent broadcast through the south, denying that Wheeler spoke for the League when he declared recently that if the democratic convention nominated Al Smith, the "Dry Democrats" could be given an opportunity to organize in the League to vote for a man of their choice. This was interpreted as a direct threat to organize a "dry democratic party" should Smith be nominated.

Bishop Cannon has resigned the Wheeler threat to "organize" the League unless Smith is defeated. [illegible]

PREPARE TO FEED SACCO, VANZETTI BY BRUTE FORCE

hunger striker. The agony which accompanies this procedure is almost unendurable and members of the Defense Committee fear for the worker's sanity under such barbaric torture.

Will Fight To End.

Warden Hennigy called to see the two men in their cells yesterday afternoon and asked them if they would care for a change from the regular prison food which they have been rejecting since Saturday. Both men told the warden that they cared for no food, prison fare or otherwise.

Four members of the Sacco-Vanzetti Defense Committee yesterday in an open letter to Governor Fuller asked him to "remove the veil of secrecy surrounding the reviews of the case," on which he will determine whether the death penalty shall be carried out.

Protest Secret Inquiry.

"Sacco and Vanzetti," the letter said, "are starving themselves to death in protest of your interviewing long lists of witnesses, hostile and friendly, in private and permitting your advisory committee to hold its inquiry behind closed doors."

The State Executive Council, which must confirm or disapprove any pardon or commutation of sentence by the governor, yesterday recessed for two weeks, instead of the usual weekly meeting. The council will sit next on August 3, just a week before the date of execution of the death sentence of the condemned workers.

Report Hearing Closed.

The hearing of witnesses is now at a close and after hearing counsel, the governor and his so-called advisory committee will retire to deliberate and draft the report of the inquiry.

Geneva To Demonstrate.

GENEVA, July 21.—Flaming posters protesting against the legal murder of Sacco and Vanzetti plaster every Geneva wall. Feeling is tense here as to the fate of the two condemned workers and a mass demonstration is to take place on July 31 at which all Geneva workers will be present.

Super-patriotic officials at the American embassy here yesterday offered police and military protection to Hugh S. Gibson, American ambassador because they "feared for his safety." Gibson doubted the possibility of any violence and curtly refused the proferred protection.

Boston Workers To Protest.

BOSTON, July 21, (FP).—Workers around the world are called to demonstrate on July 31 against the judicial murder of Nicola Sacco and Bartolomeo Vanzetti. Leaflets bearing the cull of the Sacco-Vanzetti Defense Committee are speeding to all sorts of labor organizations in every part of the earth. The call says:

This committee feels that the hour is at hand when friends of justice in all places must unite in a vast, final attempt to save Sacco and Vanzetti. To that end we have chosen Sunday, July 31, as the date for an international protest.

In the name of all things dear to the human spirit we call upon you on this last Sunday in July to hold demonstrations, non meetings, of the absolute injustice of this method of investigation will make you speak in tones so loud the world will know what is transpiring.

To submit to an unfair trial a trial behind closed doors with our friends unrepresented and with scores of new and hostile witnesses testifying! That is called justice! The advisory committee is hearing privately the question of fair trial.

A Hideous Travesty.

In the name of common fairness protest this last hideous travesty! We must save Sacco and Vanzetti!

Judge Thayer's fond prejudice, Katzmann's dishonest tactics! The jury foreman's typical hatred of radicals! "Damn them! They ought to hang anyway!" The atmosphere reeking with the bitterest antired hysteria!

We must save Sacco and Vanzetti!

In the name of human aspiration assemble on Sunday, July 31, and help us to save Sacco and Vanzetti, from death!

The Sacco-Vanzetti Defense Committee.

SPRINGFIELD, O., July 21.—Champion Aerie, No. 397, Fraternal Order of Eagles, passed a resolution, asking release of Sacco and Vanzetti unless a new trial is granted. The resolution has been sent to Gov. Fuller.

NORWALK, Conn., July 21.—Charging "intolerable cruelty and infidelity," Gypsy Pat Smith, nationally known evangelist, filed suit for divorce here today against his wife, Karin Tjader Smith. They were separated two months ago.

The suit comes on the heels of an action brought by Mrs. Smith seeking damages of $10,000 in connection with a property dispute over the Smith residence in Tokonee, fashionable New York community.

Discover Booze.

ROOSEVELT FIELD, N. Y., July 21.—A 100-gallon still, and several hundred gallons of grain alcohol, were being held for the federal authorities today, following their discovery in the cellar of Louis Morse's home in Greenwich street, according to county police who made the seizure.

"MEN OF THIS DYING SOCIETY HAVE TORN ME AWAY," SACCO WRITES SIX-YEAR OLD DAUGHTER

BOSTON, July 21.—In a beautiful letter written to his 6-year-old daughter Ines, born since his arrest in 1920, Nicola Sacco said, "The men of this dying old society have brutally pulled me away from your embrace, but in spite of all the faith of your father survives."

The letter in full follows:

"My Dear Inda:

"I would like that you should understand what I am going to say to you, and I wish I could write you so plain, for I long so much to have your hear and feel all the heart-beat eagerness of your father, for I love you so much, as you are the dearest little beloved one.

"I will bring with me your little and so dearest letter and carry it right under my heart to the last day of my life. When I die it will be buried with your father, who loves you so much as I do, also your brother, Dante, and holy dear mother.

"It was the greatest treasure and sweetness in my struggling life that I could have lived with you and your brother Dante and your mother in a neat, little farm, and learn all your sinnere words and tender affection. Then in the summer time to be sitting with you in the home nest under the oak tree shade, beginning to teach you of life and how to read and write, to see you running, laughing, crying and singing through the little verdant fields picking the wild flowers here and there from one tree to another and from the clear, vivid stream to your mother's embrace.

"The same I have wished and lived to see for other poor girls, and their brothers happy with their mother and father, as I dreamed for us. But it was not so, and the nightmare of the lower classes has saddened very badly your father's soul.

"For the things of beauty and of good in this life Mother Nature gave us all for the conquest and the joy of liberty. The men of this dying old society they brutally have pulled me away from the embrace of your brother and your poor mother. But, in spite of all, the free spirit of your father's faith still survives, and I have lived for it and for the dream that some day I would have come back to life, to the embrace of your dear mother, among our friends and comrades again, but woe is me.

"I know that you are good, and surely you love your mother, Dante and all the beloved ones; and I am sure that you love me also a little, for I love you so much and then so much. But you do not know, Inez, how often I think of you every day. You are in my heart, in my vision, in every nigle of this sad walled cell in the sky and everywhere my gaze rests.

"Meantime, give my best paternal greetings to all the friends and comrades, and doubly so to our beloved ones. Love and kisses to your brother and mother. With the most affectionate kiss and ineffable caress from him who loves you so much that he constantly thinks of you.

YOUR FATHER.

"P. S.—Best warm greetings from Bartolomeo to you all."

Sacco and Vanzetti Know the Verdict.

Why doesn't Governor Fuller and his dual commissions, one comprising the state executive council that must finally pass upon all recommendations for clemency, and the other his "advisory" commission, appointed by himself, have the courage to announce to the world their conspiracy to further torture Sacco and Vanzetti, these two victims of class vengeance in Massachusetts, whose case has aroused every awakened worker on the face of the earth? Is their decision so vicious that they dare not expose it to the light of day? Do they think that the workers do not know what they are doing in spite of their secrecy?

One thing is certain and that is that the victims know what is in store for them if Fuller, the multi-millionaire exploiter of non-union labor and his commissions have their way. They themselves cannot issue proclamations from behind the walls—the same walls that hold the death chair already prepared for them. Their hunger strike in the silence of Charlestown prison is the only method they can devise to inform the workers on the outside that they know their class enemies are relentless and intend to carry still further their appalling brutality in order to wreak revenge upon these two workers who have been chosen as a salutary example to other workers not to dare challenge the power of the Massachusetts textile barons and expose the murderous role of the so-called department of justice of the United States as these two men were doing in the case of the Italian workman, Salsedo, who was murdered in the city of New York in the offices of the department of justice.

The verdict of Fuller and his commission is death or the living death of life imprisonment.

That verdict must be reversed by mass demonstrations of workers thruout the United States and the world that will jar the complacency of the Back Bay aristocracy of Boston, that oldest parasitical growth in New England.

Sacco and Vanzetti are victims of class vengeance! That must be remembered by all workers.

No stone must be left unturned now to fight to save Sacco and Vanzetti. The final decision is not with Fuller, but with the workers, who alone have thus far defended Sacco and Vanzetti and must save them from death and further imprisonment and enable them to return to the ranks from whence they were taken seven years ago.

Sandino Assails Wall Street's President.

General Augusto Sandino, commander of the small and poorly armed force in Nicaragua that was set upon by marine bombing planes, in which more than 300 were murdered, has issued a proclamation charging Calvin Coolidge with responsibility for the war being waged against the independence of the inhabitants of that unfortunate country.

There is one sentence in the proclamation that reechoes the defiance hurled at George III. of England by Patrick Henry; Sandino declares that the Nicaraguans despise Diaz, the lackey of Wall Street, who, with the aid of American arms, was placed in the presidential office, and that they will fight him to the last man. "We are determined to die if we cannot secure complete liberty for all men." There is further similarity in that Secretary of State Kellogg stigmatized the fighters against imperialism in Nicaragua as "bandits," and "criminals." Such epithets are the stock-in-trade of American imperialism in its endeavors to suppress its political enemies at home as well as in the colonies and semi-colonies.

Even within the boundaries of the United States the law, in its impartial majesty, does not recognize political offenders as anything other than common criminals, so it is not to be expected that better treatment will be accorded those liberal forces of Nicaragua who try to establish the principle of self-determination of nations.

Sandino is right, it is Coolidge who is responsible for the war to the extent that Coolidge carries out the official Washington policy of rapacious plundering of Latin-America. But behind Coolidge stands Wall Street, the real government.

Sandino's cry should reecho thruout all of Central and South America as an aid to the fight that must be waged against the gunmen of Wall Street if all that vast territory is not to fall under the same blight that now afflicts Nicaragua.

Social-Democratic Police Maintain Order.

Burned deeply into the mind and heart of every class conscious workman in Vienna today is the knowledge that the guard, created for "defense" by the social democrats, aided the regular police disperse crowds that wanted to assemble to pay homage to the heroes who died in the uprising on the day they were buried. Now the workers of Vienna know in whose defense these armed forces were created; in defense, not of the workers, but to defend the capitalist government against the workers. The social-democrats declared they were organizing forces to fight fascism. They fight fascism by bedbming scabs upon the fascists—doing the dirty work that is supposed to be the exclusive right of bought and paid for assassins of the working class.

Henceforth the workers of Vienna know the social-democrats, left and right alike, for precisely what they are. To defend the capitalist class against the revolutionary workers is the role of social-democracy in every country it raises its head. In countries where armed risings take place, they shoot the workers. In New York they organize bands of thugs and co operate with the police in breaking strikes. The difference is one of degree only. All of the social-democratic leaders are either murderers or potential murderers of the working class.

The blood of the proletariat that was shed in Vienna has not been shed in vain. In the next rising the workers will know that the most malignant enemies are precisely the socialist leaders of the Fritz Adler and Otto Bauer type.

The Drift of the Trotzky-Zinoviev Opposition

NOTE.—Comrade Engdahl, as one of the representatives of the American Communist Party, attended all the sessions of the Plenum of the Executive Committee of the Communist International, May 18-30, at which Trotzky developed his attack against the Soviet Government, the Communist Party of the Soviet Union and the Comintern. Engdahl was also in Moscow when, on May 9th, at the celebration of the 15th Anniversary of the Pravda, the central organ of the Russian Party, Comrade Zinoviev continued his factional struggle before a gathering made up in large part of non-party workers.

By J. LOUIS ENGDAHL.

THE drift of Comrades Leon Trotzky and Gregory Zinoviev continues steadily against the Communist International and against the Communist Party of the Soviet Union.

The plenum of the Executive Committee of the Communist International in May overwhelmingly with the lone vote of Vuyovitch opposed condemned the policies advanced and the factional struggle waged by the Trotzky-Zinoviev-Vuyovitch opposition.

"Not a single delegation at the Plenum supported the opposition which disturbed the practical work of the Plenum," was the comment of the Political Secretariat of the Executive of the Comintern.

The Plenum vested full powers to the Presidium of the Executive Committee Communist International "to effect the formal expulsion of Comrades Trotzky and Vuyovitch from the Executive Committee Communist International in the event of this struggle continuing."

In a communication issued on June 26th, the Central Control Commission of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union raises the question of removing Comrades Trotzky and Zinoviev from the Central Committee of the Party. It cites the activities of the opposition, since they were inaugurated in 1923 by Comrade Trotzky at its head, and since 1926 with Comrades Trotzky and Zinoviev as leaders. The opposition is denounced as having utilized every difficulty met with in the course of the building up of Socialism, to attack the unity of our Party and its leadership, without stopping at breaches of Party discipline."

CONSIDERABLE publicity, and not a little sympathy, has been extended by the capitalist press of the world to the Trotzky-Zinoviev opposition. It is known that this opposition has connection with the Maslow-Fischer group in Germany, that was expelled from the German Communist Party and the Communist International, that has issued a publication of its own, that it seeks to convert into a daily as the organ of its counter-revolutionary activities looking toward the formation of a Fourth International.

THAT it has been extremely difficult for the comrades of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union to keep the Party membership informed of all the ramifications of this anti-party struggle was clearly brought out during the report by Comrade Bukharin on the results of the plenary session of the Executive Committee Communist International to the plenum of the Moscow Committee of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union. In the stenographic report of Comrade Bukharin's speech in referring to the Trotzky-Zinoviev Opposition, we find the following:

"Steering their course in accordance with the political wind, they aim their attack at times directly against the Soviet Union itself, whilst at other times they adopt a milder tone towards the union, and direct their efforts to violent attacks on our Party and the Comintern. On one occasion, for instance, they wrote that Stalin does not differ in the least from Menke (Disturbance). I do not understand why you are surprised at that, it is nothing new (A Voice: "It is new to us"). Then I am pleased to have been able to inform you of it." (Laughter).

BUKHARIN points out that on Oct. 6th, last, the Trotzky-Zinoviev opposition issued a statement which it declared was "meant seriously," and which carried an assurance that the Opposition would entirely give up every connection with the so-called group of Urbahns, Maslow and Fischer in Germany, which had been expelled from the Comintern. Bukharin said:

"I must here relate a few details on the position of these excluded members. They have their own newspaper, they have already converted this newspaper into a weekly, and are taking steps toward issuing it daily; they are taking steps to-ward formation of a party of their own. There is no doubt whatever that they are in receipt of help from our Opposition, from which they receive material about our party life, even to reports on the sessions of the Political Bureau, and information on the occurrences in this Bureau."

Yet the Trotzky-Zinoviev Opposition, in the Plenum of the Executive Committee Communist International, this May demanded the return of the expelled Urbahns-Maslow-Fischer Group to the Comintern as part of their program.

CONCERNING the newspaper of the expelled German group, Bukharin said:

"Their newspaper, which has become the organ of our 'Opposition' at the present time, dishes up every morsel of gossip or slander in circulation against our Party and the Comintern. These good people will presently arrive at a slogan of 'Soviets without Communists.' They have already published an article on war in which they state that, unless the present leaders of the Comintern change their political and organizatory course radically at the last moment, they will play the same role as the leaders of the Second International at the beginning of the great war. ('The Flag of Communism,' No. 12)."

PLEDGES and promises have little meaning for the Trotzky-Zinoviev Opposition. In spite of their agreement of Oct. 6th, 1926, the Central Control Commission of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union points out that "grossest literature has been printed and distributed, there is the organization of openly fractional declarations like that of the '46' with unparalleled slanderous accusations against the Party, the attitude of Trotzky in the Executive Committee of the Communist International, the speech of Zinoviev on May 9th in a non-Party meeting appealing to the workers outside the Party against the Party, which was condemned by the Executive Committee of the Communist International as crassly fractional and which violated all the traditions of the Party of the Bolsheviks and violated elementary Party discipline. Finally, Comrade Trotzky made unbelievable accusations against the Party in the session of the Presidium of the Control Control Commission on account of alleged Thermidorism."

THE latest affront of the Trotzky-Zinoviev Opposition against the Party is described by the Central Control Commission as follows:

"Altho the question of Comrade Zinoviev's attitude had been placed before the Central Control Commission for examination, altho the Executive Committee Communist International had condemned the attitude of Comrade Trotzky as openly fractional, on June 9th, during the days of the bitterest attacks of British imperialism upon the Soviet Union, Trotzky and Zinoviev took part on the demonstration arranged by the opposition at the railroad station under the pretense of seeing off Smilga. At the moment of open war preparations of Great Britain, the breaking off of diplomatic relations, the assassination of Voikov, which clearly showed the intention of the imperialists to terrorist means against the Soviet Union, Comrade Trotzky addressed a demonstration consisting not only of the members of the Opposition drawn there by the fractional apparatus, but also of the normal public at the station."

THUS the aim of the Opposition has been consistently one of giving aid and comfort to the enemies of the Soviet Union and the Communist Party of the Soviet Union, thus hampering the struggle for the building up of Socialism. The Central Control Commission points this out in part as follows:

"In 1923 when the party was fighting against the difficulties caused by the opening of the 'scissors,' Trotzky and the '46' attempted to utilize the difficulties which had arisen for fractional purposes and published a declaration that the country had been brought to the brink of destruction by the policy of the Party. The XIV Congress of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union unanimously pointed out that the New Opposition (Zinoviev and others) had left the Leninist position by denying the socialist character of our industry, under-estimating the role of the middle peasantry and demanding freedom of action for fractions and groupings within the Party.

"In the spring and summer of 1926 the block of the New Opposition with Trotzky was formed, the New Opposition with Zinoviev at the head definitely going over to the ideological position of Trotzyism. Since the autumn of 1926 the Opposition went so far in its ceaseless attacks upon the Party that it formally founded a fractional organization, illegal organizations with illegal mass meetings in the woods (case of Lashevitch and others). Defeated upon all points by the experiences in the practical work of building up Socialism, the Opposition definitely entered the path of disruption with its appearance in the 'Avisenbuch' and 'Red Putilowitz.' After the Opposition had experienced a united rejection from the Party, and especially from the workers' nuclei, it was compelled to undertake to cease the fractional struggle (Declaration of Oct. 16, 1926)."

BUT this declaration of the Central Control Commission continues:

"The whole of the future activity of the Opposition after the October declaration showed that the opposition only regarded the undertakings contained in the declaration as a means to prepare and disguise a new offensive against the Party.

"Altho the XV Party Conference, whose decisions were ratified by the Executive Committee of the Communist International, declared the policy of, the Opposition to be a social democratic deviation, to be a right wing deviation disguised by left wing phrases and decisively condemned it, altho the Opposition was supported by a single Party nucleus, it continued to represent obstinately its anti-Bolshevist opinions, and did not cease its fractional work."

THE new attack of the Opposition is thus characterized as follows:

"The Opposition has attempted to utilize the special difficulties arising in connection with the international situation of the Soviet Union and with the partial defeat of the Chinese Revolution, has concentrated its attacks upon the international policy of the Party (China, Great Britain).

"The Opposition answers the increased danger of war for the Soviet Union with declerations that directly undermine the work of the Party to mobilize the masses for the struggle against the danger of war and for the strengthening of the defenses of the Soviet State. A declaration such as that recently made by the Opposition with Comrade Trotzky and Zinoviev at the head, that 'should war really break over our heads, every worker, every day laborer and every poor peasant will ask the question clearly: what sort of a war, what for, with what means and where to?' declaration such as the declaration of Trotzky to the last session of the Executive Committee of the Communist Party."

THE resolution of the Plenary Session of the Executive Committee of the Communist International declares:

"The actions of these leaders (Trotzky and Vuyovitch, since Zinoviev is not a member of the Executive Committee Communist International) of the Opposition impede and render more difficult the decisive revolutionary tasks of the present moment; mobilization of all revolutionary forces and rousing the entire international working class against the imperialist war. . . .

"The policy consistently represented by Comrades Trotzky and Vuyovitch at the present plenary session of the Executive Committee Communist International, and fully endorsed by Comrades Zinoviev and Radek, and the policy of the Communist International established by Lenin is a decisive and unbridgeable gulf. The main features of this Oppositional anti-Communist policy are:

"(1) Interference with and discrediting the struggle of the Communist International against the menace of the war. The Trotzkyites do not see in the struggle against the imperialist instigators of the war, on the contrary, Comrade Trotzky declared that 'the greatest danger of war is the Party regime.' Under this slogan Comrade Trotzky propagates in reality reactionary defeatism against the enemy of the proletarian revolution. On the other hand, in spite of repeated invitation, he has not swerved one inch from his well-known anti-Leninist standpoint in regard to the fundamental questions of revolutionary tactics on the first imperialist world war.

"It was just the differences then existing between Trotzky and Lenin (rejection of revolutionary defeatism, rejection of transformation of the imperialist war into civil war, rejection of the slogan of fraternization) which constituted in the world war the dividing line between Bolshevism and all the shades of social-democratic opportunism. Contrary to Lenin's injunction to concentrate particularly on real practical work in preparation of the war, Comrade Trotzky did not submit to the Plenary Session of the Executive Committee Communist International, a single practical proposal for the struggle against the imperialist war. He limited himself to the demand, repeatedly rejected by the Communist International, to break up the Anglo-Russian Trade Union Unity Committee, which at this moment would have only promoted the intentions of the fainthearted betrayers of the British working class."

OTHER criticisms of the Opposition are as follows:

"(2) An utterly wrong estimate of the character of the Chinese revolution contrary to Lenin's doctrines, which saw in the communists during a bourgeois-democratic revolution in backward semi-colonial countries. . . .

"Comrade Trotzky who in 1925 on the threshold of the proletarian revolution, opposed the formation of Soviets in Germany, demanded at the plenary session of the Executive Committee Communist International immediate establishment of dual power in the form of Soviets," in the present situation in China.

THE third point raised denounces the "complete political and organizational alliance" with the Urbahns-Maslow-Fischer group in Germany already discussed. The fourth point of criticism was:

"(4) The demand that in the struggle against the menace of war the orientation of the Comintern should be towards the anarcho-syndicalist elements. Thereby the revolutionary united front tactic, the Bolshevik tactic of capturing the proletarian masses, which is more necessary than ever just now when the menace of war is greater than ever before, is substituted by the sectarian policy of rapprochement to international anarchism and syndicalism which are fighting with the foulest means against the Comintern and the Soviet Union side by side with the worst White Guard elements.

"The fifth point takes up the deliberate defamation and discrediting of the Communist International, "the only leading organ of the world revolution, and "Mnat the Soviet Union

DRAMA

"Prince Igor" and N. Y. Symphony at Coney Island Stadium Tomorrow

The delayed benefit concert, which was called off last Saturday because of rain, will be given this Saturday evening. The following is the complete program for the Concert and Opera, which will be presented at the Coney Island Stadium, 6 Street and Surf Avenue. The concert begins at 8 o'clock, Maximilian Pilzer will conduct the New York Symphony Orchestra of over 100 pieces, while Alexis Kosloff, Premier Danseur of the Metropolitan Opera House will personally appear in and supervise Borodine's "Prince Igor." Specially arranged divertissements will also be on the colorful program. The principal participants will be: Rita De Leporte, Vera Mikel, Victoria Youngman, Ruth Hazelton, Emma B. Miller, Allice and Ivan, Elene Moskova, Katya Mansaian, Valentia Kascheuha, Victorin Pascoeelo, and Irene Suffran. The concert part of the program includes: Tannhauser Overture, Richard Wagner; Artist Life, Johann Strauss; Till Eulenspiegel, Richard Strauss; Ride of Valkyrie, Richard Wagner; Sakuntala Overture, Goldmark; 4th Movement of 4th Symphony, Tschaikowsky; Capriccio Espagnol, Rimsky-Korsakoff; Lohengrin March, Berlioz.

The entire proceeds of the affair is for the benefit of the wives and children of the striking and imprisoned furriers and clothmakers, and is held under the auspices of the Joint Defense and Relief Committee.

On the Screen

Tolstoi's well known tragedy "Power of Darkness" will have its American premiere on the screen at the 55th Street Cinema beginning tomorrow. The well know Moscow Art Players enact the principal roles.

Syd Chaplin's next starring vehicle will be "The Fortune Hunter," adapted from the Broadway hit by Winchell Smith, and directed by Charles F. Reisner. In its cast are Helene Costello, Clara Horton, Louise Carver, Thomas Jefferson, Dale Martin and Paul Kruger.

"The Last Command," starring Emil Jannings, will be the first picture to be released by the only State organized form of the motion picture industry in the world revolution.

THE declaration of the Comintern concludes, therefore, in part, with the following:

"The present situation makes it incumbent on the entire Communist International to frustrate this attack of the Opposition bloc, to preserve strict unity in its ranks and to concentrate all available forces on the preparation of the struggle against the imperialist war, on stubborn defence of the only proletarian state of the world, and on whole-hearted support for the great Chinese revolution.

"The attitude of Comrade Trotzky and of those who share his views, is imbued with the spirit of conciliation with the renegades, the spirit of Menshevik wobbling between the camp of the revolution and the camp of imperialist counter-revolution.

"This wobbling, which is characteristic of Trotzkyism, constitutes a crime in the present acuteness of the class struggle.

"The Comintern feels in duty bound to liquidate once and for all this ultra-left social-democratic tendency as well as the continuous hostile attacks of this group of bankrupt leaders who are becoming disassociated from the proletariat."

HYLAN HITS I. R. T. LABOR POLICIES; ENDORSES STRIKE

City Officials Work With Interests

Placing the blame for the proposed subway strike on the traction interests, former Mayor John F. Hylan, has come out with a statement fully endorsing the organization of New York's subway workers. Labor conditions on the I. R. T. are far below the standards of organized labor in the United States, he declared.

The text of the statement issued by Mayor Hylan follows:

"I have been informed from authoritative quarters that the people of New York are faced with a subway strike within the next few days. I know that the traction interests welcome a struggle of this sort in order to make it appear that labor troubles necessitate an increased carfare.

Hits Low Wages.

"I know that the employes of the I. R. T. and the B.-M.-T. work under conditions and are paid altogether out of proportion with the earnings of these traction corporations, as was shown during my administration and strongly substantiated in this so-called unification investigation of Untermyer's, which is nothing more or less than an increased fare effort, that 187½ per cent profit was made, averaging 16⅔ per cent earnings for many years.

"Mr. Hedley, president of the Interborc, has said that if a strike takes place, he has been assured of police protection from city officials. This, I am fearful, will mean a repetition of anti-labor brutality, which was evidenced last year at the Manhattan Casino, 155th St. and Eighth Ave., when paid city detectives, acting under orders of the McLaughlin regime, fell upon and brutally attacked trade unionists peaceably holding a meeting.

"In 1919 when the I. R. T. wanted their men to strike to help force an increased carfare and the strike was called over the I. R. T. telephone by a man named Connelly and the traction lines were tied up for several days, men that appeared for work and were willing to work were driven off the job by paid agents of the I. R. T., because it suited the traction interests to have a strike at that time.

"City officials working in close cooperation with the traction interests make it appear that the proposed strike is a conspiracy to discommode the people of New York. This is not so. The subway workers of New York are entitled to the same standard of living as is the rest of organized labor. Many of them work twelve hours a day and 7 days a week for as low as 29 cents an hour. If the people are temporarily inconvenienced, if the strike takes place, the entire fault lies with the traction profiteers.

"I have been informed that the officials of the Amalgamated Association of Street Railway Employes have sought every means to arbitrate the issue at hand. Traction officers have summarily waved aside all such proposals. City officials, who ought to have the welfare of the riding public at heart, have evidenced a callousness and disregard in not endeavoring to obviate this threatened strike."

L. I. R. R. Delays in Installing Safety Devices, Is Charge

It has taken the Long Island Railroad seven months to begin installation of automatic warning devices in Brooklyn and Queens, it was revealed when the State Transit Commission took the case to court.

John F. Gilchrist, chairman of the commission, sought an order before supreme court Justice Black to compel the railroad to install the devices, eighteen in Brooklyn and twenty-eight in Queens.

Joseph F. Keany, representing the railroad, admitted there had been a delay.

The commission agreed to withhold the case from court temporarily and Justice Black adjourned the hearing until August 22.

The Long Island Railroad started the demolition of its Brooklyn extension, which runs from Long Island City to Manhattan Beach, about May 1st. Without consent of the Transit Commission, the approval of the Long Island's own board of directors was not even sought, according to George Le Boutiller, vice president of the Long Island, testifying at the renewed unification hearing before the transit commission.

Samuel Untermyer, special counsel for the commission, after questions designed to show that the city had an equity in the extension, questioned Le Boutilier as to the price the railroad would ask in selling the property back to the city. Le Boutilier said the railroad would sell the land at its present value, which Untermyer contended was four or five times what the Long Island paid the city for it.

FEATURES GALORE AT DAILY WORKER CARNIVAL SUNDAY

The Unemployment Singing Society picnic originally arranged for Intervale Park is now being held at the Daily Worker Carnival in Pleasant Bay Park, Bronx, on Sunday, July 24. All members are urged to be on the field at 10 A. M.

Comrade Jaffe of the Manolom Orchestra has intimated that a group of their players will be at the affair and will in all probability render a few of their well known selections. It should be a real treat listening to the sweet music in the pleasant country atmosphere.

Get Your Sport Outfit.

A regular sports outfitter has arranged to have a booth where any sporting article can be secured at considerably less than the usual price.

One of the most interesting booths should be that of the Cooperative Women's Council and Workers Party. Many articles have been brought from Russia specially for the affair and comrades and sympathizers who have not yet visited the red stronghold will have an opportunity of securing many articles they otherwise would not get without a visit to the U. S. S. R.

Fraternal Atmosphere.

The Chinese workers report that many articles hitherto unknown in the United States will be in their booth. This is expected to be one of the most spectacular things in the whole affair.

S.S. 1B.FD2.S.S. 1D; S.4.Br. 2—C. C. W. C. 1B; Sec. 7, S.S. 3B. Scandinavian: S.S. 1B-F1, S.S.3C; S. S.2-F2; S.S.2E and the Party doctors are all having booths.

SUBWAY STRIKE NEARS AS I. R. T. FORCES ACTION

Growing opposition to organized labor on the I. R. T. brings the threatened subway strike nearer and nearer.

Increasing resentment among the workers and the fact that the traction officials are using coercive methods to have the men sign the new yellow dog contract make it possible that New York will see a major labor struggle on the underground lines within the next few days.

The right of collective bargaining for subway employes will be the principal demand to be made upon the Interborough Rapid Transit Company by the Amalgamated Association of Street and Electric Railway Employes, it was said yesterday by officials of the union.

Employes Dagged.

"Recognition of the union would, of course, be the first step in any negotiations with the company," said J. H. Coleman, organizer for the Amalgamated, "but the principle of collective bargaining is the real issue at stake. Under present conditions of the Interborough employes are gagged.

"The subway workers have a long list of grievances, none of which will receive attention until a bona fide union is recognized. The I. R. T. makes a specialty of deception. The management has deceived the city in financial matters and it is trying to deceive the public as to its labor policy. It doesn't try to deceive its employes but arrogantly mistreats them and then dares them to fight back. Under such circumstances is it any wonder that strikes occur periodically here." Human nature being what it is, men will always fight back when attacked.

Fake Increase.

"The company conferred recently a wage increase of five per cent. This was intended only to deceive the public. The men knew that this was the same increase that had been announced several times before. It represented a restoration of the old wage. In 1920 the company cut wages ten per cent while the cost of living was still mounting and while the purchasing power of the dollar was at its lowest ebb. In 1922, half of this cut was restored to the men. Last March, the remaining five per cent was given back.

Strike Inevitable.

"Every observer knows that this action was the result of organization work by the Amalgamated. The company preferred to invest this much in a gold-hand play because they understood that the temper of the men could not be tried to the limit. What the company grants, the company can take away. Five per cent is a pittance anyway in the circumstances.

"We are being importuned by many interests to prevent a strike here. That is beyond our power. We are asking only the right to pursue our lawful business of protecting our

TORRENT OF RAIL PROFITS

By LELAND OLDS.
(Federated Press)

Railroad profits totaling $385,042,250 for the first 5 months of 1927 fall only a little short of the record profits of last year when the carriers showed a net income of $387,979,216 for the same period, according to interstate commerce commission figures. Profits so far this year are running at the rate of 5.46 per cent on the enormous valuation of $21,150,000,000 used by the commission as a basis for determining railroad rates.

No More Wages.

In spite of wage increases granted by many railroads the slight drop in profits was not due to increased cost of operation but to increased taxes. Although operating expense increased $7,337,117 (to $1,920,040,083) operating revenues increased $11,570,424 (to $2,504,316,588) so the ratio of expense to revenues actually registered a slight decline.

Railroad expenses have been kept down chiefly at the expense of the shopmen whose total wages have been reduced millions of dollars compared with 1926. In the first 4 months of the year the expenditure in maintenance of equipment was $11,178,400 below the same period 1926.

Less For Crafts.

The reduction in the total wages paid to the shop crafts is reflected in the ratio of maintenance expenditure to total revenue on many important railroads. On these roads maintenance workers are getting a smaller proportion of the transportation dollar than they received in 1926. The percentage of the railroad dollar going for maintenance on 16 railroads in 1926 and 1927 was:

	Per cent of maintenance cost to revenue dollar	Jan. thru May
	1926	1927
Baltimore & Ohio	35.7%	34.1%
New York Central	34.8	34.4
Pennsylvania	37.6	34.5
Chesapeake & Ohio	40.3	37.9
Norfolk & Western	33.0	33.9
Atlantic Coast Line	37.3	31.9
Illinois Central	36.3	33.4
Louisville & Nashville	39.7	38.6
Seaboard All Line	27.6	26.4
Southern	32.1	33.2
Burlington	34.2	29.0
Chi. & Northwestern	35.9	35.3
Great Northern	34.6	34.4
Missouri Pacific	35.8	36.2
Rock Island	37.0	34.6
St. Paul	39.6	39.4
Santa Fe	29.6	36.7
Southern Pacific	35.8	36.2

Both bitter anti-union roads and roads which are cooperating with the unions have been adding to profits by cutting maintenance expenditures. In the anti-union group the Pennsylvania has cut the proportion of its revenue dollar going to maintenance from 37.6 per cent to 34.5 per cent, the Illinois Central from 36.2 per cent to 33.4 per cent and the Burlington from 34.2 per cent to 29.0 per cent. In the cooperating group the Baltimore & Ohio has cut its maintenance ratio from 35.7 per cent in the first 5 months of 1926 to 34.1 per cent in the same period of 1927, and the Chesapeake & Ohio from 40.3 per cent to 37.9 per cent.

The Pennsylvania shows a tremendous gain in profits with $42,293,718 for the 5 months of 1927 compared with $33,875,149 of last year. Baltimore & Ohio is also doing well with $25,001,225 compared with $15,569,171 for the first 5 months of 1926.

WHAT LABOR COULD EXPECT FROM WILLARD

By A. G.

Union officials are surprised over President Willard's action in refusing the increase they had asked for workers. Should workers be surprised also? By no means. Willard has acted as a typical railroad president, like the frankly reactionary Rea of the Pennsylvania and Loree of the Delaware and Hudson. If there is any surprise, it should be over the surprise of the union officials, but their surprise is simple to shield their betrayal of the workers' interests.

Daniel Willard, is president and director, or director, of 21 railways, of which the B. & O. is the most prominent. He led the drive for the Watson-Parker Law, which had for its object the elimination of strikes on the railroads. After the passage of the law, the New York Times said: "A strike on the railroads is now inconceivable."

In May, 1924, a conference of business executives met in the executive office of the National Association of Manufacturers on a "Platform of American Industry." Among the signers were Atterbury, V. P. of the Pennsylvania; Rea, of the Pennsylvania; Loree of the Delaware and Hudson; R. H. John E. Edgerton, President National Association of Manufacturers, and did not object. Daniel Willard, President of the Baltimore and Ohio R. R. Needless to say, the platform was a big business platform, condemning the labor party, the power of the supreme court, for privacy in tax return; freedom from governmental interference, etc.

This should be enough to convince one that there is no difference between Willard and the other railway executives.

Then Why the B. & O. Plan?

Willard used the B. & O. Plan for the benefit of his road. As the toastmaster at "Labor's" banquet, put it: "The B. & O. workers have done for Mr. Willard, their part in transforming a threatening deficit into a generous surplus." The plan meant getting the cooperation of the workers in supplying suggestions, and in working harder for the B. & O. Co. Confidence in the B. & O. plan and Daniel Willard, and in condemning agitation for a militant struggle against the employers, is undermining the resistance of the union and making possible this coup by the Baltimore and Ohio R. R.

Withholds Education Funds.

ALBANY, N. Y., July 21.—Dr. Frank Graves, state commissioner of education, was charged today with exceeding his legal authority in forcing his will upon local boards of education by threatening to withhold state education funds.

The charge was made by George W. Knox, corporation counsel of Niagara Falls, at a conference in the capitol of the special legislative committee on taxation and retrenchment, and the investigation committee of the state conference of mayors.

Wichita Women Go On Strike; War Against Boost in Gas Rates

WICHITA, Kan., July 21.—To protest against a boost in gas rates 12,000 Wichita homes went without gas Tuesday. Three thousand more homes, in which invalids or very small children made a complete boycott impossible, reduced gas consumption to a minimum.

While the men were preparing a mass meeting to protest against high gas rates, the Federation of Women's Clubs decided on the "strike." "Useless Tuesday" will be a permanent feature in Wichita, women declared, until the gas company reduces its rates.

FUR MEMBERSHIP MEETINGS CALLED FOR PEACE TALK

The Joint Board of the Furriers' Union at Tuesday night's meeting decided to call membership meetings of the four locals affiliated with it next week.

A report of the peace negotiations which were inaugurated last week with the A. F. of L. "Reorganization" Committee under the auspices of Magistrate Joseph Bonanbluth and the reasons of the break will be given. The questions of the July raises and a reduction of the strike assessment will also be acted upon.

Gangsters' Cases.

The cases of the seven gangsters who on June 24 cruelly cut and beat up four members of the Furriers' Union came up before Magistrate Adolph Stern in Jefferson Market Court yesterday morning.

James Egan, one of the seven killers, had his bail withdrawn and was committed to jail because of his criminal record, while David Goldrenes had his bail advanced from $1,500 to $7,500. The case of the other five gangsters will come up Friday.

Egan and Goldrenes were recognized by James Mextaxes as the men who had attacked him. Mextaxes was the most seriously hurt by the hired gangsters of the right wing, being knocked unconscious at the time of the attack. His left arm was fractured as a result of the beating that was inflicted on him.

At the time of their arrest the gangsters admitted to the police that they had been hired by a right wing official of the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union, named Sobel, at $80 a week to beat up workers supporting the left wing of the needle trades. Former Judge Leonard A. Snitkin appeared as lawyer for the thugs.

Twenty-six fur pickets who were arrested June 27 came up before Magistrate Bonanbluth yesterday morning. The cases were postponed until August.

Plan State-Wide Probe Into School Finances

ALBANY, N. Y., July 21.—Plans for a state-wide investigation of school finances will be discussed at a meeting here tomorrow of the special committee of the mayor's conference, and the special legislative committee on taxation and retrenchment, of which Senator Seabury C. Mastick, republican, of Westchester, is chairman.

The investigation may be made into the school finances of every city in the state, according to William P. Capes, secretary of the mayor's conference.

Ysaye Takes Young Wife.

Dr. Hermann Dinein, of Brooklyn, announced yesterday the marriage of his daughter, Miss Jeanette Dinein, and Eugene Ysaye, internationally famous violinist.

The marriage took place in Belgium on July 9.

Ysaye is 70 years old and his bride, who was his pupil, is 25.

Truck Driver Crushed to Death.

Denis A. Mullane, 20 years old, of 11 Edson street, Corona, Queens, a truck driver employed by the Texaco Oil Company, was crushed to death between two of the company's five-ton gasoline carrying automobile trucks at the company garage at Borden and Review avenues, Long Island City, today. Other employes hurried Mullane to St. John's Hospital but Dr. Hughes pronounced him dead on arrival.

Los Angeles Labor Council Has Lefts As Deciding Force

LOS ANGELES, Calif., July 21.—The most bitterly-fought election battle ever held in the Los Angeles Central Labor Council has come to a close, with the progressive delegates practically holding the balance of power between two warring reactionary groups.

The first slate was headed by J. W. Buzzell for re-election as secretary of the council. Buzzell has always fought the militants, and has stooped to cooperation with the police department to expel left wingers from their unions and from the council. As a member of the Civil Service Commission, a job handed to him by the reactionary clique in power for turning over labor's votes in election campaigns, he has discriminated against even conservative trade unionists who opposed him in the labor movement.

Horn Machine.

But Buzzell had a fallingout with the Horn machine, which runs the labor movement in the interests of the city politicians, so a second slate was put in the field against him, headed by Frank Johnston, former president, for the secretaryship of the council. The Horn-Johnston group has as reactionary a record in the labor movement as does Buzzell, and there is little to choose between them.

The third slate, headed by Jack Valentine of the Carpenters, former secretary of the Labor Party that once flourished here, was the ticket of the progressive bloc in the council, made up of anti-administration delegates, delegates who have some progressive tendencies, and left wing delegates.

The progressive candidates ran on the following platform: 1. Organize the unorganized; 2. Fight for repeal of the anti-picketing ordinance; 3. Sister locals in a given industry to arrange their agreements to expire at the same time; 4. Freedom of speech for the right without discrimination; 5. A United Labor Ticket in elections, and a break with the city political bosses; 6. Establishment of an emergency strike fund. A vigorous campaign was conducted on the basis of this program.

On the eve of elections, a small scare in the progressive bloc bobbed, and went over to the Horn candidate, Frank Johnston. The election results showed in the vote between Buzzell and Johnston, with 104 votes each; Valentine received 73 votes, although other candidates on the progressive ticket received as high as 98 votes. Many of the sessions of the council up to the night of the run-off elections were so turbulent that there were fights, clubs, and chairs—and counter-charges from both camps flew thick and fast. The progressive group which had shown such political strength, had the choice between Buzzell and Johnston, two birds of a feather, in the run-off election. Almost the entire progressive vote had been collected, and if they were able to defeat their bitter opponent, Buzzell their electoral would be complete, and they could rally behind their old fellow opposition in the labor movement for control of the apparatus.

The progressives threw their strength en masse to Buzzell, therefore, and predicted that his election would precipitate a bitter struggle between the two reactionary factions, after which progressives would be the balance of power, and in a very advantageous position thereby for future work.

The result of the second election were, that Buzzell was elected by a vote of 156, against 114 for Johnston, and the fortune of the progressives in the council whose entire apparatus is in the hands of the royal Horn-Johnston group, with which he is not likely to make peace very soon. But what is more important, is the fact that the progressives were able to swing their supporters almost in a body to Buzzell, who is thoroughly disliked by almost everybody, and indicates that the progressive group and its policies has a strong and loyal following in the local labor movement.

Altho it would be a great mistake to place very much reliance on this group, counted as it is of many weak and wavering elements, still the results of the elections in the council show the possibilities for a real campaign by the militants against the labor officials in control who are turning the movement over to its enemies.

J. L. Engdahl Speaks on War Danger July 27th

"The Attack on Soviet Russia" will be the subject of the huge mass meeting to be held on Wednesday, July 27, at 7 P. M. at Bryant Hall, Sixth avenue, near Forty-second street. J. Louis Engdahl, editor of The DAILY WORKER, who was in the Soviet Union at the time of the assassination of Peter Voikoff, the Soviet Ambassador to Poland, will be one of the main speakers.

This meeting has been arranged by Sections 2 and 3 of the Workers (Communist) Party. All members of these sections should come and bring their fellow union members and co-workers in the shops. Those who wish to secure seats should come early as many were turned away at the meeting held in June when Scott Nearing was the speaker.

Demonstrate Before Town Hall at Stamford, Conn., For Sacco and Vanzetti

STAMFORD, Conn.—An open air Sacco-Vanzetti demonstration from the steps of the Town Hall will be held here Saturday evening, July 23rd. The demonstration is arranged by the Sacco-Vanzetti Defense Conference of Stamford, composed of 38 organizations, including many unions, the Central Trades Council, Italian organizations and the Workers Party.

Prominent speakers from New York, Stamford and New Haven will voice the demand for Life and Freedom for Sacco and Vanzetti, and will protest the continued torture of these two labor martyrs in the shadow of death in Charlestown prison.

Thousands of workers are expected to make this the greatest demonstration of Working Class protest in the history of Stamford.

Party Activities

East Pittsburgh—Scott Nearing will address a meeting of Westinghouse workers in the school "The War On China" on Friday, July 22nd at 8 p. m. at Hungarian Hall, Beech Street, East Pittsburgh.

Detroit, Mich.—Scott Nearing will speak in Detroit for the last time Sunday, July 24th at the "Hands Off China" and the "Soviet Union" before his trip to these two countries. The picnic proceeds will go to establish a summer camp for the Young Pioneers.

A joint committee of the Young Workers League and the South Slavic Workers Club with the active assistance of the Party is making all arrangements which will include sports, amusements and refreshments of all kinds. Fifteen lambs will be roasted in the barbecue style to feed the multitudes.

Woodland Grove Park is an excellent place for such a demonstration. Admission will be 25 cents.

Directions. By Auto—Woodward in 11 mile road then turn to right to Duquindre road.—By Street Car:—Take woodward Ave Car to Fords H. P. Plant and a special Star Bus to the Picnic grounds.

Scott Nearing, famous Labor Economist, will deliver two lectures in San Francisco on Thursday August 4th and Friday August 5th in Eagles Hall, 278 Eagle Hall Ave.

On Thursday evening he will speak on "The Meaning of the Chinese Revolution" and on Friday evening his subject will be "Can Russia Consolidate Asia."

Events in China have already had a tremendous effect upon not only the labor and peasant movement of that nation, but throughout the entire world of oppression and colonial peoples. Russia's treatment of the Far East is causing the statesmen of the imperialistic countries many a sleepless night. No one in America is better qualified to discuss the underlying forces operating in the Far East than Scott Nearing.

NEWS FROM NEW JERSEY

Passaic, N. J., July 21. The Teamsters Local 478 have been out on strike for the past six weeks. They have had to combat every form of injunction the bosses and their lackeys could think of.

Tuesday Fred Carino, the business agent of the local, was arraigned in the Chancery Court to answer contempt proceedings instituted by the scab employers. The charge against the union and its members was that they asked two scabs to join the union and go out on strike. Judge Berry, after listening to the prosecution, threw the case out of the court as ridiculous.

The teamsters have been conducting a militant fight to prevent the establishment of the open shop or "American Plan" of organization. The strikers are firm in their demands for a union and all teamsters and chauffers are urged to stay away from the yards that handle materials for building purposes.

Cleaners Strike.

NEWARK, N. J., July 21.—The Cleaners' and Dyers' Union, Local 17606 of New Jersey have gone out on a general strike to force the open shops in Hudson County and New Brunswick to unionize their shops. Six hundred men from the closed shops are out in sympathy strike.

According to Morris A. Klein, business agent, the men have no grievance against the closed shop where the 44-hour week is in operation and the workers get a weekly salary of $30.

MARINES AND SAILORS IMPRISONING NICARAGUAN PATRIOTS

Poor peasants and workers of Nicaragua, whose only fault is that they want their country free of Wall Street domination. Captured in raids by marines and U. S. sailors, and held for an uknown fate by guards from the U. S. fleet.

WHO AM I?

I am the fellow that a popular American novelist immortalized.

I am supposed to be the backbone of the country, but in fact I am only fit for membership in Kiwanian, Rotarian and "loyal" orders of one kind or an other.

I always talk of the country and denounce class rule. I am the "people."

You see me now trying to convince the public that Calvin Coolidge, if elected, would not be serving a third term.

I am nobody in particular but a composite of a large section of the population. You may recognize me the next time you go to your neighborhood drugstore to buy a bottle of listerine.

(If in doubt write to the Who Am I editor of The DAILY WORKER.)

GARBAGE MAN

He tossed upon the truck a rocking car
And cursed and quickly caught another one
Upon his shoulder, gleaming in the sun
With sweat that over his whole body ran.
He stopped and grasped his greasy hat to fan
His florid face and wished his work was done.
"This job," he grimmine said, "is no dam fun!
Summer's no picnic for the garbage man!"

But what to him the stench that thickly rose
Around him there. His was no squeamish pane
He seemed to thrive on it—I held my nose.
And then he said: "Who're garbage is must hang
The stink, just as where human beings stay
There's garbage. So I have a job, good pay."

HENRY REICH, JR.

Woll Softens the Nicaragua Resolution

By MANUEL GOMEZ.
(Secretary—All-America Anti-Imperialist League).

WASHINGTON, D. C. (By Mail).—Not even the slaughter of 300 Nicaraguans by the United States marines could shake the complacent calm of the American Federation of Labor leaders under whose domination the fifth convention of the so-called Pan-American Federation of Labor has been holding brief sessions here-off and on for the past three days, carefully refraining from action of any kind.

The resolution of protest introduced by Salomon de la Selva of Nicaragua, with the fiery warning that "if the marines do not depart from Nicaragua soon they will have to kill all of us," has been buried in the resolutions committee, of which Matthew Woll is chairman.

No action has yet been taken, or even formally proposed, in connection with the cabled news that the Panaman and Haitian delegations were arrested as they were about to embark for the United States. Inasmuch as Haiti is directly under marine rule this is an "embarrassing question" for American imperialism and it apologists.

Today, lest one of the 30 Latin-American delegates—most, but not all, of whom are handpicked by the American Federation of Labor bureaucracy—might be so inconsiderate as to resuscitate the Nicaraguan issue, all sessions are called off while the delegates are being entertained on a personally conducted visit to Mt. Vernon.

De la Selva's resolution on Nicaragua, declared that: "Intervention of the United States is creative of a state of mind not conducive to friendship and good will towards the United States and the American people, who are in no way responsible for the incident."

Call For Emphatic Protest.

"Be it resolved," said the resolution, "by the fifth congress of the Pan-American Federation of Labor to register a most emphatic protest against the presence and activities of the United States marine corps in Nicaragua and against any interference on the part of the United States Government in the domestic affairs of the Nicaraguan people.

"Resolved, that this resolution be transmitted by telegraph to the President of the United States of America at his summer residence with the urgent request that the United States forces be withdrawn from Nicaragua immediately, in accordance with the letter and spirit of this resolution."

The Nicaraguan delegate had a hard time reading his resolution at all, due to pseudo-parliamentary objections by President William Green. Finally he was allowed to present it in open session yesterday morning. He did so, moving its immediate adoption. Delegate Frank Morrison of the American Federation of Labor promptly rose and said: "Why that has to go to the resolutions committee!"

Martinez Seeks Prompt Protest.

At this point Ricardo Martinez of the Venezuelan Labor Union asked for the floor. There was some hesitation about giving it to him, but he succeeded in saying:

"In view of the enormity and immediacy of the matter dealt with in this resolution, in view of the urgent necessity of putting a stop to the crimes which the armed intervention of the United States is committing in Nicaragua, I believe that this convention of the Pan-American Federation of Labor cannot do less than register its prompt protest. We must act not tomorrow but today. Let us suspend the rules, and adopt this resolution now. It should be done unanimously."

But the rules prevailed. Green, who was in the chair, looked a little annoyed, pounded on the table with his gavel and stated tersely that there would be no further discussion on the matter until the resolutions committee brought in its report.

At the first meeting of the resolutions committee it was plain that the resolution will not be allowed to go thru in its original form. Woll insisted that some changes would have to be made, "in deference to the feelings of a good many people in the United States." he was supported by Luis N. Morones, head of the Mexican delegation. A fussle of three hours ensued in the committee, at the conclusion of which a sub-committee completely controlled by Woll and Morones was entrusted with the task of drawing up a substitute for the original resolution.

The attitude of the American Federation of Labor delegation (consisting of Green, Woll, Morrison and Noonan of the electricians) toward concrete manifestations of American imperialism, is all the more glaring because it follows close upon the abstract stand for self-determination of peoples contained in President Green's welcoming remarks to the delegates at the opening session of the convention. The speech, while carefully avoiding any direct criticism of the United States government, nevertheless did try to make an approach to Latin-American sentiment in a way which contrasted sharply with the keynote addresses of Samuel Gompers at previous conventions of the Pan-American Federation of Labor.

Before the opening of the convention there was much speculation among the visitors as to what the attitude of the Mexican delegations would be. Green stabbed the Mexican labor movement in the back during the recent conflict with the Catholic reaction in Mexico, which was intimately connected with the struggle with American imperialism over Mexico's oil and land laws and which theatened all the conquests of the Mexican revolution. At the height of the Catholic rebellion, the Mexican Confederation of Labor (C. R. O. M.) appealed for support to the Pan-American Federation of Labor. Green did not even make this appeal public, and when it was sent out to the newspapers from Mexico, he answered with an ambiguous statement championing "religious liberty" and declaring that in any case the struggle of the Mexican workers was a "purely domestic affair" in which he could not intervene.

Because of the indignation caused by Green's attitude among the workers of Mexico, because of the recognition of Sacasa by the Mexican gov-

26 Communists in French Chamber of Deputies That Meets in Bourbon Palace

By J. LOUIS ENGDAHL

THE French chamber of deputies meets at three o'clock in the afternoon. In the United States the American congress assembles at high noon.

This difference is, of course, of no consequence. What matters is that the French parliament has a large Communist fraction, while there are, as yet, no Communists elected to sit in either the senate or the house of representatives at Washington.

The French chamber, therefore, proves of far greater interest than the American congress. The very air of Paris breathes with the Communist struggle. In a different way and not to the same extent, to be sure, as in Berlin and Moscow. But one gets the "feel" of it anywhere.

"The Communists burned it down" announces the lecturer on the sightseeing bus, quite gravely, and his little audience shivers.

I was on my way in the early afternoon to the chamber of deputies, but couldn't help hear the bus orator as the huge car stopped for a moment at the curb in the Rue des Tuileries. Evidently the Americans aboard, excellent prototypes of Mark Twain's "Innocents Abroad," expected Red bombs to pop around the next corner.

But the speaker was referring to an incident of the Paris Commune in 1871, more than half a century ago.

The Rue des Tuileries is one of the most interesting streets in Paris. It was laid out in 1578 and forms the boundary of the original Tuileries gardens. The grounds on the east side of this street were laid out in 1563, on the site of the old Palais des Tuileries, which actually went up in flames during the Paris Commune. It is the building to which the sight-seeing bus orator referred. These grounds were extended to each side of the Arc de Triomphe du Carrousel in 1806-6.

When an aroused people burn a palace in a revolutionary record, it must have some history of interest attached to it.

The Palais des Tuileries is of some interest. It was founded by Catherine de Medici, widow of Henry II. It's construction first got under way in 1564. The site beyond the city walls of that period, was at the old tile kilns (tuileries). The Pavilions de Flore and de Marsan were afterwards incorporated with the palace. Before the revolution the palace was only occasionally occupied by the French sovereigns, but it was the permanent residence of Napoleon I, Louis XVIII, Charles X, Louis Philippe and Napoleon III.

With the exception of the Hotel de Ville, it is claimed that no edifice in Paris is so rich in historical memories.

On Oct. 5, 1789, Louis XVI was brought from Versailles to the Tuileries, and in June, 1791, he was again installed here after his arrest at Varennes. On June 20, 1792, the anniversary of the oath of the Jeu de Paume, the palace was attacked by about 30,000 people. On August 10, the death knell of the monarchy was sounded.

On July 29, 1830, the Tuileries were again besieged by the populace, and Charles X, the second king of the restoration forced to seek safety in flight. The new July monarchy met with a similar fate on Feb. 24, 1848, when Louis Philippe had to leave the palace, turning it over to the not too tender mercies of the revolutionists.

But it was not until the Paris Commune in 1871 that the full wrath of an aroused Parisian populace broke upon the Palace des Tuileries on May 22-23 of that year, with the result that it was reduced to cinders.

Along the Rue de Rivoli one passes the Hotel de Ville, which is the headquarters of the city government. It was on Feb. 24, 1871, that Louis Blanc proclaimed the Republic from the steps of the Hotel de Ville. In May the building was fortified by the Communards and courageously defended by them against the troops from Versailles. The enemy set the building on fire and 600 Communards died, either being burned in the flames or shot to death. The building has since been restored.

One crosses the Rue de Rivoli towards the River Seine after reaching the Pont de la Concorde, being quickly brought back to present day realities by the gathering of a 1927 throng of Parisians. But it is only an American tourist, in his Henry Ford "flivver," who has collided with a native bicyclist. Several excited policemen are trying to adjust the resulting uproar.

Crossing the River Seine one faces the Palais Bourbon. This meeting place of the French Chamber of Deputies, the lower house of the French parliament, is located at the west end of the Boulevard St. Germain and opposite the Pont de la Concorde. The construction of the building, which is not very imposing in itself, got under way in 1722, being erected for the Dowager Duchess of Bourbon, daughter of Louis XIV and Mme. de Montespau. It was enlarged in 1777 by the Prince de Conde, grandson of the duchess. The building was used from 1795 onwards for the sitting of the "Council of 500" and next for those of the Corps Legislatif (1829) and the chamber of deputies.

The original façade, on the side farthest from the Seine, is in the Rue de L'Universite, The Place du Palais-Bourbon in front of it is adorned with a marble statue of "Law" (1855). The facade towards the river, built in 1804-7 has a Corinthian colonnade of 12 columns, with a flight of steps flanked with statues of Themis and Minerva, D'Agnesseau, Colbert, L'Hopital and Sully. On each side are reliefs by Rude and Pradier, and in the tympanum a group of Cortot, "France with the Constitution," attended by "Liberty and Order, Commerce, Agriculture and Peace."

But all this display of historical characters, some real and others the phantasies of mythology, seems to have gone somewhat into decay.

The flight of steps with all its statues is shut off by a high iron fence. The dozen columns of the Corinthian colonnade look quite lonesome. Thus this main entrance is isolated.

I notice that taxicabs rush up a driveway leading to a side entrance. I pass thru a small gateway, making in the same direction. But I am quickly halted by two soldiers carrying rifles with fixed bayonets. They are quickly joined by another who might be called "the keeper of the gate." Between the three of them, they could not understand a word of American. But I could readily see that they wanted some sort of pass or card of introduction before allowing me to enter.

When I indented that I had no pass, I could make out, in what they said, the word, "Ambassador!"

But Myron T. Herrick, the American ambassador to France, who had just issued a bitter attack on the Soviet Union, is no friend of Bolsheviks, and I didn't need his assistance anyway. I had comrades of my own in the chamber and didn't need the assistance of any capitalist spokesman. But it was a hopeless effort trying to put all this over in French, my French-American pronunciation of Marcel Cachin, Louis Gachery and the names of the other French Communist deputies that I remembered proving 100 per cent unintelligible, insofar as actual results were concerned.

Help came in the shape of a French schoolboy, who was evidently studying English. He translated. An amicable under-standing was reached. The soldiers returned to their posts. I was shown another entrance, for those who had special business with the deputies. At the same time I was given a card, to be filled out, to contain my own name and history, with the name of the deputy I wanted to see. Soon the card, filled out to the minutest detail, was on its way to Marcel Cachin, leader of the Communist fraction in the French chamber of deputies.

Putting Lee in His Place—A Letter From James Fuchs

Editor Daily Worker:

An extraordinary circumstance about certain personal remarks of Algernon Lee, published in your issue of July 20, is the fact that they contain only two lies in six printed lines—which is distinctly below his average:

The first lie is, that my contributions to the Volkszeitung and other labor papers are necessarily busy with him and his doings: "Whenever he writes an'article for them, he always makes a slurring remark about the Rand School and my connection with it."

Mr. Algernon Lee is suffering from delusions of greatness; he thinks he is the right forefoot of a donkey, whereas in reality he is only the left hindfoot of one. I have in my possession letters from Marx Nordau, Israel Zangwill, Georg Brandes, testifying to the value of my labors as a scholar and man of letters in terms too glowing for repetition, even by way of defense against a stupid provocation. Norman Thomas—reported in the same issue of the Worker to have snickered over Algy's remarks—wrote me a letter three weeks ago —in response to an invitation to write a review for the New Masses—assuring me of his especial confidence in my ability and integrity of purpose. Upton Sinclair (in a letter to Horace Liveright, which is in my possession) declared me "the ablest and most conscientious assistant he ever had." To say that a scholar so qualified and always busy with important problems of politics and economics has nothing better to do than to advert in all or in a majority of his published writings to Algy Lee, and his mismanagement of the Rand School, is an outrage upon the credulity of mankind. Perhaps one of my published articles in twenty makes casual mention of him and a once valuable institution of learning which he is so palpably ruining with his cabal of soft-berth lads that even the S. P. authorities are beginning to get uneasy.

The Number Two: I never applied to Algy for a lecturership, this season or the season before, but I suggested to him three seasons ago, when the disintegration of the Rand School was not as yet manifest, that it would be a good idea to have me lecture on Sundays, in the bookstore on the books of the week. He took the attitude which solemn-faced, drifting boobies of his type always take with proposed innovations: he lied and procrastinated as long as he could, and when he couldn't go on that way any longer, he shifted responsibilities. He wrote me a letter closing with my offer, telling me that the bookstore authorities are making the necessary preparations, and wishing me the best of luck in my enterprise! That was two years ago—and "the bookstore authorities" are still preparing!! No apology, no explanation, no reversal of decision, with or without cause, ever came from Lee, in two years!! After this juicy specimen, showing how business is transacted at the Rand School, do the workers of New York (including all rational and reflective-minded members of the S. P.) get an inkling of the Why and Wherefore of the Rand School ruin?

N. Y. City, July 20, 1927. JAMES FUCHS.

WINDOW CLEANERS' BOSSES TO FORM A DUAL UNION

The union wrecking epidemic seems to have caught the imagination even of the bosses in this trade. The existing window cleaning union has improved the conditions of the workers in the last strike and hence the bosses were looking for ways of breaking the agreement. They sent a few of their agents into the union in order if possible to capture it, but having been miserably defeated these agents called a meeting to form a new union. Having had no response they tried again to continue disruption at regular union meetings. By this time the members had become wise to their schemes and they were expelled. Whereupon they set up, with the support of the bosses, headquarters for a new union and the bosses began to break their agreements one after the other and recognize this new union until up to now about 3s bosses have relations with this scab union formed by themselves forcing these workers to join this new union in regular Matthew Woll style.

The regular union, however, is not falling asleep and is preparing to teach the employers a lesson. A serious struggle to force the bosses to live up to the agreement which they signed can be expected in the very near future.

Kutcher Trying To Become a Dictator.

A few curious stunts were recently pulled off in a supposedly progressive organization, the Amalgamated Metal Workers. The membership of this organization, being mostly composed of progressive workers, for quite some time were seeking a solution to the problem of reviving the union in the industry and restoring the conditions that have been lost in the last eight years. The great difficulty was the fact that there were two unions in the field and a convention was to face up this problem. Kutcher, fearing that he may be in the minority with his policy, which has made Amalgamated ineffectual, decided not to recognize the convention.

In true bureaucratic style he finally called a general membership meeting in an unusual way. But finding out that he was in the minority even there the meeting was arbitrarily adjourned without permitting the question to come to a vote. The strong sentiment amongst the members against Kutcher's conduct and policies is being resented by the members more than ever, and shows that the possibility of making headway in unionizing the metal machinery trade in New York has more prospects of results than ever before.

Alteration Painters In Organization Drive.

The alteration painters who have been conducting a successful organization campaign are again on the way to a considerable increase in membership. The new committee which has been elected stated that the policy of the union now is friendly toward the Brotherhood of Painters and Paperhangers with which they are ready to affiliate anytime the latter makes it possible for them to organize the nearly 20,000 alteration painters in New York City. Their headquarters remain at the same place, 85 E. 116th St. The initiation fee is but $5.

ernment, of which delegate Morones is an important cabinet member and because of the general sympatay of Mexicans for Nicaragua and the other victims of American Imperialism, it was thought by some that the C. R. O. M. delegates here might have to make at least some show of resistence to the American Federation of Labor policies at this convention. Others, more familiar with the internal politics of the Pan-American Federation of Labor, foretold that the C. R. O. M. delegates would outdo themselves trying to reestablish their place flush in the good graces of Green and his associates of the American Federation of Labor executive council. This has proved to be the case. From Morones' speech in reply to Green's greeting on the opening day, and from his attitude in the resolutions committee, it is already plain that the Mexican delegation and the American Federation of Labor bureaucrats will present a solid front on all major questions.

Morones' opening-day speech was far more reactionary than Green's, which at least played with libertarian phrases. It did not contain a single progressive sentence. It did not mention Mexico's differences with the United States government and with the American oil, mining and financial magnates. It was one long harangue against "the Reds." The peroration was a paen of praise for the American Federation of Labor and for American Federation of Labor methods.

Aside from the C. R. O. M. of Mexico and the Free Federation of Workers of Porto Rico (which is not an independent body but an affiliated section of the American Federation of Labor), there are no national Latin-American labor federations of any importance represented here. Delegates are present from Guatemala, Nicaragua, Venezuela, Colombia, Peru, Cuba and Santo Domingo. In most cases they represent paper organizations which have no real existence. Few of them have spoken aloud in the convention thus far. Their chief activity has been to fan themselves vigorously during the tedious reading of the officers, report,—which by the way, consisted almost exclusively of letters exchange between William Green, the President of the United States and other important personages, with incidental attacks against the Communists, the larger labor federations of South America and the All-American Anti-Imperialist League.

Nevertheless, the three-hour battle in the resolutions committee indicates that not all the Latin-Americans are content to play the role of "yes" men" which has been cut out for them. With the terrific impact of the Nicaraguan events I we are likely to see some fighting before this convention closes.

The Position of the Chinese Revolution

By N. BUCHARIN

EDITOR'S NOTE: Since the following article by Bucharin was written, the Wuhan government has gone over completely to the counter revolution and is following the anti-labor tactics of Chiang Kai-shek. China is today the greatest laboratory of the class struggle in the world and the developments there cannot be given too much attention. Only by reading analyses such as this can the average worker understand from the disjointed and contradictory news—most of it manufactured—that appears in the capitalist press, what is actually taking place in China.

THE Chinese revolution is in the most difficult stage of its development. The armed forces of the national bourgeoisie are counting more and more, are carrying away with them sections of the Wuhan army and are directing them spearhead against the mass movement of the lower social strata, against the workers and peasants, against the "plebeians" who have been roused by the great agrarian revolution and are storming against the "enlightened" intriguing politicians of the possessing classes in town and country. Behind the deepened curtain of political groupings, of personal conflicts, of combinations of generals, behind the screen of military and official diplomacy, behind the confusion of solemn declarations and equally solemn execution parades, of insinuating gossip about the "three principles" and the throttling of revolutionaries, of "Chinese ceremonies" and orders of execution, behind the chequered and manifold mixture it is easy to see how the sword of the wildest class-war is being drawn, behind all this a desperate class struggle can be clearly seen, about the elementary forces of which some are not yet clear.

The block between Feng Yu Hsiang and Chiang Kai-shek is giving expression to a great differentiation of the class forces in the country. The special peculiarity of the situation is that the three social class camps (roughly speaking) have three organized national centres. It is true that rush enquirers of the type of Comrade Radek ("All the worse for the facts!") have denied the existence of feudalism in China. These comrades have indeed built up their conclusions on the basis of this "analysis," and Radek's colleagues in the opposition have not wanted any words on this error. (This is called an "honest Marxist investigation!"). Nevertheless facts remain facts. The camp of the Northern army with Chang Tso-lin at its head is the camp of feudal reaction. This camp is entirely in the pocket of the imperialists and thinks of no "reforms" but the one, that of founding a new dynasty by crowning the "Marshall." At the present moment this camp is obviously approaching its downfall.

The second camp is the camp of the Liberal bourgeois counter-revolution.

It is characteristic of the present moment that this second camp, at the present stage of development of Chinese events represents for the present a victorious force and holds a very special place in the class-war.

The class foundations of the revolutions of the generals against the people has been sufficiently elucidated; this class foundation is the going over of the Liberal bourgeoisie into the counter-revolutionary camp. Here we must add however that the agrarian revolution of the Chinese peasantry, with its tempestuous rise, which dealt a destructive blow at the Liberal bourgeoisie and caused it to fly into a furious rage must also be apprehended in its specifically Chinese peculiarity. When also in Russia the seizure of the land at first united almost all the strata of the peasantry against the landowners and ranged the whole mass of this peasantry against our Russian "landlords," a class between which and the peasantry there is a sharp dividing line in the Chinese village, where the land is too limited, where also there are but few large landed proprietors and very many small land-owners who can enter into with the Kulak elements, the class-war takes much more desperate forms. The strata against which the agrarian revolution is fighting are very much larger and thus come into contact with the urban Liberal bourgeoisie over a much wider surface.

The class differentiation was responsible for the overthrow of Chiang Kai-shek. Chiang Kai-shek was responsible for the treachery of Feng, on his part will cause the treachery of other generals. This is a source of very serious danger to Wuhan. Chiang Kai-shek plus Feng, plus other generals, plus (possibly left) "Muk-den-ers"—this is the military aspect of the bourgeois block. This block is at present the strongest among the camps which are at war. It forces will inevitably continue to grow in the immediate future.

We must weigh the situation quite without prejudice; it would be a short-sighted policy to underestimate the strength of our opponent who is already taking his stand as executioner of the workers and peasants.

The strength of this liberal-counter-revolutionary camp consits firstly in the numerical superiority of its armed forces and secondly in its political position as compared with the political situation of the feudal camp.

We have written several times that the bourgeois camp is already shooting workers and peasants but that it has not yet amalgamated with feudal reaction and imperialism. It has a tendency to amalgamate with that camp. The more this camp is threatened by the revolts of the workers and peasants the more clearly will this tendency come to the fore. For the moment however an amalgamation does not take place. It still possesses a certain independence and a still greater apparent independence, and that ensures it a still greater political force in the country.

This fact is most clearly evidenced by the program announced by the leaders of the bourgeois counter-revolution—as far as its "ideology" is concerned—and by its battles against Mukden as far as the "facts" of the civil war are concerned.

The tenth thesis of Chiang Kai-shek's declaration (of the "Program of Action" of the Nanking government) runs:

> "Three paths lie open before China:
> 1—Subjugation to militarism and imperialism.
> 2—To follow the path of Communism.
> 3—To carry out in reality the three principles of the Kuomintang and to create a strong government."

The Liberals are turning this point of view to account most cleverly. They pose as genuine liberators of China and contrast themselves with the Communists, whom they treat as agents of the "Russian state," using for this purpose all the lies of Poincare, Chamberlain and the "international" social-democrats. A paragraph of the fourth thesis of the declaration referred to formulates the standpoint in a very cunning and perfidious way though at the same time, viewed from the standpoint of stupefying the masses, in an extremely clever way, in the following words:

> "The Kuomintang therefore to say the right clique of Chiang Kai-shek, N. B.] holds to the standpoint of the right of self-determination of the peoples and of joining the world revolution (do not make jokes! N. B.) on the basis of equality between the nations, whereas the Communists have come to the manipulate us as Russia."

The masses will of course, from day to day, see the mendacity of these statements more clearly. This lie is contradicted and will be contradicted by the language of steel and iron spoken by the executions. This language is being used more and more frequently by the Liberal "dictators" towards the Chinese workers and peasants. This lie will be contradicted by the reprisals employed by these strange adherents of the "world revolution" against the agrarian movement and against the majority of the Chinese nation. In the end moreover this lie will not be helped by the shameful speeches of our opposition which, in a criminal way, calumniates the policy of our Party representing it as a policy

TO JOHN D. . . ON HIS BIRTHDAY

Thy smiling face is made of all the laughter of the sad.
Thy wrinkled brow of all the age of young ones laid below.
All thy poise rests on the crutches made of shattered broken men.
And this day marks but the spending of so many toiling lives
Thy life is but the weaving of the web of slavery for humanity.

The Danger of War in Permanency

trace the mass movement of the working classes in this period, we see how, in spite of all the signals and cries of warning, they did not properly grasp the danger and were not prepared to meet it in the right way until finally, in 1914, in the twinkling of an eye, they were howled over by the monster of the world war, and we almost feel the dramatic excitement of the spectator in a cinema who, in the most thrilling scene, wants to jump up and warn the unsuspecting hero of the murderer who is approaching by stealth.

The nearer the world war approches, the more zealously and feverishly the governments prepare for it, the more perfect do the arrangements for the pacifist deception become, from the czarist manifesto to the Hague institutions, from the "guarantee of peace" of the Alliance to the meetings between monarchs. Even at that time, the pacifist bunkum penetrated into the Second International. Was not the "long epoch of peace" an important argument of revisionism about the peaceful development into socialism? Was there not the days who saw positive sides in the colonial policy and Karl Leuthners, who saw them in the Triple Alliance? It is also interesting to read today some of the speeches in the Reichstag at the time of the crisis in Morocco, how many forewarnings of the 4th of August did we, as good social-democrats carelessly pass by at that time.

The epoch since the world war exhibits all the phenomena of the previous period on an extended scale. The almost uninterrupted chain of wars has grown into a war in permanency. Murder has never reached at all. We have also entered on a new epoch of colonial wars, the epoch of the defense of colonies and spheres of influence against the revolutionary uprisings of the populations of these districts. The armaments for war, preparations, contributions and dangers of war have become much mightier and more alarming than before the Great War. Consequently, the endeavors of the bourgeoisie to deceive the working masses as to the true character of the present epoch must be much more strenuous. The League of Nations and the guarantee pacts bring their with all the rest of the pacific bunding are the result of these endeavors, and moreover, behind these institutions, are hidden the efforts of the great imperialist powers to prepare the ground for more premature explosions; for the experience of the world war has taught them that not only must every preparation be made for a war, but that the moment of its outbreak must be well chosen and should not come by surprise.

The imperialists can be well satisfied with the result of their endeavors to deceive the masses as to the true character of the present period as one of war in permanency. Million of workers who are under the influence of the social patriotic leaders, believe their assertations that the danger of war is only a Communist clamor and that the League of Nations, the Treaties of Locarno, etc., are actually guarantees of peace. Can there be a greater triumph for the imperialist propaganda than the fact that the leaders of the revived Second International can, without being synonimously turned out, assume to the masses the exact opposite of the truth and can represent the present period when peace is more endured than ever, whereas as compared with the time before the war, the danger of war is far more imminent?

Clausewitz, in his famous saying that war is the continuation of politics with other means (i.e., the means of force), has pointed out the close relationship between politics and war. Today, his saying is out of date. Even the variation that the world world policy of the imperialists since 1918 is nothing but the continuation of the imperialist world war with other means, does not express this enormous change precisely enough. In the present period of imperialism, politics and war have been welded into one, they form one unit. It may almost be regarded as a symbol that the imperialist statesmen, at the very time when they are sitting together in League of Nations conferences or peace conferences, issue orders for the bombardment of Chinese towns and Riff villages in Morocco, and that Geneva and Locarno are at the same time centres for international profiteurs who traffic in war material.

Not only the imperialist war, however, but the class war also is in permanency today. The bourgeoisie, from its side only, has declared it in permanency against the revolutionary proletariat which at the same time has prompted it to conceal this war as it did the imperialist war, behind a pacifist decision, in this case that of democracy and parliamentarism, in order to deceive the masses as to its true attitude towards them.

The parallel forces itself upon us. Neither the Paris Commune nor the murders in Chicago, neither the intensification of the revolutionary fights in Russia, nor the consequences of the proletariat by the bourgeoisie in other states preceded most of the leaders of the Second International from regarding the period of civil war as finally concluded and from considering it out of the question that the proletarian class war should develop into a civil war. The famous preface by Engels to Marx' "Class War in France" has remained for them the most precious asset of political Marxist literature, and the experiences of the first Russian revolution of 1905 have existed for them only as interesting events in an exotic country which have as much significance for their "own" country as have the canals on Mars for the actual geography of mother earth. The more the class fights have been intensified the more obstinately have these leaders refused to enter into any definite discussions, to mention making any practical preparations for more serious methods of fighting. They have not gone beyond the ballot paper.

What are the occasional massacres instituted by the bourgeoisie against the proletariat from May 1871 in Paris to the fights on the Lena in 1912 as compared with the sanguinary war of extermination which the bourgeoisie has been carrying on against the revolutionary labor movement from October 1917 until the present day? How many thousands of proletarians have been slaughtered by the bourgeoisie and their social patriotic executioners in Russia, Finland, Bavaria and Hungary, in the Ruhr district and in central Germany, (March 1920 and 1921), in Roumania and Poland, in Yugoslavia and Italy? Has this murdering, this blood-thirsty class been stopped for a single year? The bourgeoisie carries it on uninterruptedly, whenever there is a pause, it prepares for the next wholesale slaughter.

AFTER SEVEN YEARS

[illegible] having taken [illegible] Georgia, it [illegible] natural for the [illegible] keen [illegible] outside of Georgia. On this point we find this most interesting parts of their correspondence. The Bolshevik order destroyed the Georgian nation, its national system and culture," writes Jordania ("the Bolshevik order" accomplished this in an extraordinarily conspirative manner so that not only outside observers, but even the Georgian people themselves could notice it. What devilish bloody people the Bolsheviks are!), "but it advanced nationally other, non-historical (?) nations and directed them on the path of regeneration. We were for instance the eyewitnesses of the creation of the Ukraine. This 40 million strong nation represents such an enormous power that should it want to separate from Moscow (!) the latter would have to concede involuntarily. The other nations would follow afterwards. For us this would facilitate methods as the Ukraine would stand between us and Moscow and would liquidate our common borders therewith (Moscow). The dismemberment of the Soviet Union into national units can be accomplished in a better organized form if the Ukrainians would take this task upon themselves. Under such conditions, . . . the Georgian nation would enter the framework of the Ukrainian nationalist movement." (The reader, if he pleases, can put here as many exclamation marks as he likes).

LET me first of all congratulate the Ukraine for having been classified among the "non-historical nations." I must say that as a "Russian historian" of the old order I feel greatly offended. The devil take it! The Ukrainians are not a historical nation? Excuse me! And what about the Kamelnitsky episode, is it not history?

Then, I cannot but congratulate also the Georgian nation with Noi Jordania's plan to hide it behind the broad shoulders of the "non-historical" Ukrainian. This is a great honor indeed. I must frankly admit it suits me better than when I see Jordania and Co., sitting not behind, but a bit lower under the British generals. What can I do. I am only an old "Russian historian" after all. As long as I live I will repeat only what I have imbibed with my mother's milk.

Noi No. 2 concretises the general reveries of Noi No. 1. "Our perspective is mostly connected with the second polley outlined by Jordania," says Ramishvili to Alexandre. Jordania mapped out three possible ways of the "regeneration of Georgia": 1.—The collapse of Bolshevism from within; 2.—National uprisings in the border lands, and 3.—An Anglo-Russian war, "namely, the consolidation of the nationalities. This is precisely why we organized the 'Committee of Caucasian Independence' and published the 'Prometheus' in the French language. This committee is comprised of our representatives and representatives from Azerbaijan and the mountain republics, two from each republic. The 'Caucasian Committee' is closely connected with the Turkestan Independence' and with the 'Ukraine' (Levitsky). Petlura's representative is our alm to separate from Russia by common action of these nations and by the establishment of a military alliance both during the war with Russia and after it."

THUS, not only is a mass rising in Georgia impossible and undesirable, but isolated action by Georgia will lead nowhere. The nations which are in the same position as we have at last realized that in order to destroy the enemy, unity and joint action is necessary," says Gibo, "the Ukraine, Caucasian and Turkestan have united. Their joint action is an accomplished fact. The consolidation of a united front is a question of the near future."

We may rest assured that before very long there will be a scrap amongst them. For the Ukraine, the Sochi Denikin episode (see "Georgia Under British Rule") is a guarantee. Father Levitsky surely thinks that Kuban is Ukrainian. And from the point of view of Jordania's political geography this should be so—if one looks at it. But it is unlikely that we shall ever see this "immediate future." The dialectics of history have brought about a situation when the once seemingly powerful national groups have become metamorphosed into weak groups of plotters which have no roots in the masses, as they themselves admit. This is definitely so in Georgia. This is more than probable in the Ukraine and in Turkestan. The dialectics of history was always on the side of the Bolsheviks, and where else could it be?

workingclass of Vienna will not forget the lesson of last week. The workers will now see more clearly than ever before, that there can be no peace with capitalism, that the policies of the social-democratic party are designed to help the capitalists and not the workers, and that the hope of workingclass liberation lies only in militant revolutionary struggle. The Communist Party of Austria will from now on grow much faster than before and thus build up a power strong enough to lead the workers to victorious and eventual victory.

Peace in Nicaragua reigns supreme. In order to prove this to everybody's satisfaction, the military forces of American imperialism in Nicaragua have staged a little "peace party" which resulted in some two hundred Nicaraguans being wounded, murdered or crippled for life. The American imperialists must be feeling very proud of their accomplishments because the latter show that the "young and inexperienced" imperialism of the United States is fast mastering the arts of colonial oppression and already has nothing to learn from the older colonial robbers such as England, France, Belgium, etc.

Coolidge very likely continues to enjoy his "vacation" without much being disturbed by these happenings. What are several hundred lives of Nicaraguans in the scheme of conquering Latin-America for the big capitalists of the United States? Nothing, of course. And as to the good will of the Latin-American peoples, this again means nothing to the American imperialists. The ruling class of the United States is out to subject the Latin-American countries to its domination and is proceeding to accomplish this end by all means at its disposal. The fact that these developments are leading straight to war is only an additional reason in the eyes of the American imperialists for strengthening its military forces and for suppressing the labor movement at home.

American imperialism is becoming a menacing and cruel reality not only for the peoples of the so-called colonial countries but also for the American masses themselves. Militarism and navalism are beginning to show their teeth. The conception of civil liberties of the old, pre-imperialist days is losing all meaning. Big capital is establishing itself supreme in the economic and political life of the country as against the overwhelming majority of its toiling population. Imperialist war has become a costant everyday danger.

The Nicaraguan developments cannot be ignored as they signalize the approach of serious danger. The Coolidge administration seems to feel quite safe in proceeding with its present course and will undoubtedly go to the whole length towards large scale imperialistic wars of conquest. The anti-imperialist and anti-war elements in the United States must make haste in their preparations for struggle if their efforts are to be in any way effective. But most of all does this condition call for preparation on the part of the American workingclass and its organized labor movement.

At this writing, the fifth congress of the Pan-American Federation of Labor is about to open its proceedings in Washington, D. C. It will be extremely interesting to see what this congress will do—if anything—in the matter of Nicaragua and American imperialism in Latin-America generally.

The real nature of the Pan-American Federation of Labor, as far as its dominating influences are concerned, is by this time well-known. Suffice it to mention the fact that its president and treasurer are William Green and Matthew Woll, respectively of the American Federation of Labor. These two worthies are carrying on the Gompers policy of making the Pan-American Federation of Labor serve the interests of American imperialism in Latin-America. And it is for this reason that the working masses of Latin-America are viewing with the greatest suspicion the activities of the leaders of the Pan-American Federation of Labor.

The burning need for joint struggle by the workers of all the Americas is beyond question. Never perhaps in the history of this part of the world were the workers of the American countries in greater need of a common organization and common struggle against the native and foreign exploiters, particularly against the imperialist oppression and exploitation of the United States. But the reactionary leadership of the Pan-American Federation of Labor has been developing the organization in an entirely different direction. In the hands of these reactionary leaders, particularly those representing the American Federation of Labor and dominating the whole movement, the organization has become an instrument for the subjugation of the Latin-American countries to the rule of American imperialism.

The fifth congress of the Pan-American Federation of Labor is meeting at a time when it becomes impossible to ignore the growing aggressions of American imperialism (Mexico, Nicaragua, the Philippines, etc.). Despite the fact William Green and Matthew Woll will undoubtedly make an attempt to sidetrack the congress from these important matters or to hide the real issues with some such proposition as the "good neighbor" policy, they should not succeed in doing so. They will probably have difficulty in keeping the Pan American Federation of Labor in the interests of American imperialism. It will be the duty of the delegates from the Latin American countries to bring their protest against "dollar diplomacy" to the attention of the congress.

SAY! WHAT KINDA BANKER ARE YOU? YOU'RE NOTHING BUT A GANG OF MURDERERS!
MY FRIEND SAYS THE AMERICAN BANKERS ARE MURDERERS!
YOU WILL HEAR FROM MY SECOND!
HE AIN'T MY FRIEND, AND I'LL PUNCH HIM IN THE JAW!
HE AIN'T MY FRIEND, BUT

worst executioner; in this way it is becoming (and this overbalances everything else), the worst and most murderous counter-revolution.

This however is just the concrete personification of the question as to the two paths open to the class forces and the fight between them. The first path is that of a Liberal compromising solution of the question, a union of China on the basis of a "permanent" bourgeois order of justice under an economic protectorate of imperialism (with correspondening concessions on the part of the latter) and of a compromise with the feudalists within the country. The second way of solving the question is that of a "plebeian" solution of the tasks of the democratic revolution, of a decisive extermination of all remnants of feudality, a decisive fight against imperialism, the dictatorship of the workingclass and the peasantry, the power of following a socialist path. Or, in other words, a fight for the hegemony in the bourgeois democratic revolution between the workingclass and the Liberal bourgeoisie. This struggle for the hegemony, or, which amounts to the same thing, the struggle between the liberal and the plebeian line of development of the Chinese revolution, is the very grist of the present class conflicts.

The more dangerous the situation is at present, the more energetically must the third camp be supported, the more completely must the masses of workers, peasants and petty bourgeois be mobilized. The "plebs" must be organized and put on its feet in this great historic battle against the forces of imperialism, of the feudal and bourgeois counter-revolution, who all together, "on parallel lines" are shooting and executing the workers and peasants, setting on fire whole villages and workingclass districts, and who are howling in chorus against the Communist Party of the Chinese proletariat, against the agrarian revolution, against the "terror" of the workingclass.

It is obvious that the policy of the Communist International is to mobilize the masses to let loose the agrarian revolution, to unchain the labor movement, to fight to the death against traitors and renegades. One of the chief slogans must be: "Workers and peasants, trust in your own forces alone! Do not trust the generals and officers! Organize your armed troops!" The fight is developing now along all the lines; very clear thinking is demanded. It is necessary to reject with great tenacity all attempts to come to an understanding on the part of the semi-agents of Chiang Kai-shek and Feng. It is imperative to steer towards purging the leading section of the Kuomintang of these vacillating elements. It is essential to consolidate the real "Jacobin" plebeian cadres which are capable of holding out in the fight, in spite of all dangers and defeats. Feng has gone over to the camp of the opponents of the people's revolution; we must declare merciless war on him.

It would be absurdly naive to imagine that the Communists, the wokers and peasants, are now under an obligation to pursue tactics of compromises with Feng & Co. Such tactics could only be based on an attitude of absolute abandonment of the agrarian revolution and of the fight for the plebeian way of Chinese development.

There is however no reason to adopt such an attitude. Even supposing that Wuhan were to be surrounded by the enemy and to fall, the struggle would have to go on in another form. It is by no means an easy task to effect a military occupation of the whole of China, the China of the people of the workers and peasants. The desperate forms which the fight is taking are proved by the very fact that more than 3,000 peasants were murdered in the province of Hupeh in the months of May and June; the troops of the landowners have murdered about 2,000 functionaries of the Peasant Union in the territory of the National government.

However furiously the rabble of officers and nobles may rage, even large armies cannot occupy vast territories in which the flame of the peasant revolt will inevitably flare up. The objective tasks which the revolution has set itself, will not be promoted an iota by the shooting of hundreds or thousands, nay, of tens of thousands of peasants. The Liberal counter-revolutionaries are not capable of finding even a half-solution to the peasant question, the agrarian question, and this fact leads them on to an inevitable defeat, however great may be the partial victories they carry off against the revolutionary people.

The following fact necessarily belongs to the picture; the more desperate the fight of the bourgeoisie against the masses of the people becomes, the sooner will the bourgeoisie throw itself into the arms of the imperialists and implore them for help. The more rapidly, on the other hand the bourgeoisie expounders the remains of its political capital, the faster it will rush towards its defeat, the more rapidly will it become evident that a consistent national fight for freedom in China can only be waged against the bourgeoisie.

Another question may arise, that of the policy of the Soviet State. The question may be asked: Is it essential that the Soviet State should denounce all connections with the Nanking government?

This question must of course be answered in the negative. None but the poorest politicians and extremely "naive" persons imagine that the nature of the proletarian state is such that it has absolutely no connections with capitalist milieu. Certain relations are indeed desirable. No reasonable person has suggested "abolishing" completely the institutions of Soviet diplomacy and the foreign minister for the sake of the so-called "purity" of our principles. If however this Soviet state has its representatives in the bourgeois countries of the west and east, if it maintains relations with the feudal state of Marshall Chang Tso-lin, if it has its representatives in the fascist "paradise" of Signor Mussolini, there can be no reason why it should forego relations with the Nanking government. These customary forms of connections should be kept up.

Still more! If Soviet diplomacy is obliged to take into account the relative contradiction of interests of the imperialist powers in certain directions, it is all the more bound to take into consideration the antagonism between the Liberal statements to the unity of China and their imperialist partners, both of whom, it is true, plunder China without regard to the "form of government."

The practical distinction between the Comintern and the Soviet government is so absolutely clear in this respect, and we believe we have explained it in so popular a way, that even Chamberlain could understand it. In its diplomatic and trade relations the proletarian state refuses to be guided in any way by the point of view that it should "approve of" the policy of the capitalists or the feudal exploiters. The Communist International however conducts neither diplomatic nor trade relations with "other powers." It directly organizes the revolution.

Let us return to the question of the policy of the Comintern. Our violent opposition who all the time has been "indignant" and "enraged" and has protested against the slogan of secession from the Kuomintang being unjustly attributed to them, now openly declares that it demands this secession.

The question is why? Is it possibly because those at the head of the Kuomintang vacillate? And the mass of the members of the Kuomintang is that of no account? Since when has the attitude towards a mass organization been determined by what happens at its very "summit"?

All the forces of the Liberal counter-revolution are at the present moment concentrated on driving the Communists out of the Kuomintang and on surrounding them. All the forces of the counter-revolution are piping to the same tune. It is a well-known fact that the influence of the Communist Party in the Kuomintang is steadily growing. It is a matter of common knowledge that the inferior organizations of the Kuomintang, especially the worker and peasant organizations, are under the leadership of the Communists. It is known that the very reason why Chiang Kai-shek and his clique fight against Wuhan is that they regard the left Kuomintang as an "agency" of the Communists. Finally, it is well known that the slogan of the arrest and execution of Borodin, the slogan of the removal of the Communists from the Wuhan government and from the C. C. of the Kuomintang are Chiang Kai-shek's slogans. And at a time like this it is suggested that we ourselves fulfil the wishes of these gentlemen from the "revolutionary" standpoint!

We must not set ourselves in for such tactics. We must strengthen still more our work in the Kuomintang, must cleanse it from the bourgeois elements and the renegades of every species. To secede voluntarily, however, just when the line of war opponents demands it, would indeed be strange tactics.

At the conference between Chiang Kai-shek and Feng when they met at Sui Chow, a platform about on the following lines was passed:

1. Wuhan shall acknowledge its "mistakes."
2. The Communists shall be excluded from the Kuomintang.
3. Borodin shall be dismissed.
4. The "high contracting parties" shall organize a campaign in common against Peking.

Chiang Kai-shek's "informers" are prepared to accept this plan (Wan Chao-wei is not among them, he takes a firmer stand than the others). Those who are in opposition to us however are steering straight for this "platform."

Instead of dealing in detail with such naivities we must see to it that our position in the Kuomintang is reinforced. We must maintain our position in the national government by throwing overboard and unmasking the "informers." Whilst freeing ourselves from ballast and organizing the "real left" from above we must fight round our banner.

And if we do not succeed? If our opponent gains the upper hand at the present moment? This may happen. It is possible that the central government may, in certain circumstances, be disrupted by its internal dissensions and that it may be impossible to organize a truly Jacobin "left." But we must fight our way along such a path. We must fight still more valiantly for our positions in the Kuomintang, to maintain and consolidate them, when the overwhelming majority of its members are under the influence of the Communists. The Kuomintang will perish unless it follows the path of giving rein to the agrarian revolution. The Communist Party is not interested in that; it is interested in consolidating its influence in these organizations, in developing it rapidly and turning it into a powerful party with workers and peasants as its foundation, into an organ of the democratic plebeian revolution. This possibility exists, and it would be sectarian to forego it now.

Let the despairing sceptics croak over the success achieved by the traitors. The Marxist-Leninists know that the elementary forces of the Chinese revolution which have been aroused cannot but break their way through to victory, however imposing be the obstacles placed in their way by the bourgeois counter-revolution, however many revolutionaries feudal reaction may execute, however huge be the guns with which the foreign troops of occupation fire on Chinese towns.

EDITOR'S NOTES

By ALEX BITTELMAN

EVENTS in Vienna, Austria, of last week are instructive in more than one way. They show an accumulation of anger and resentment among the working masses which few had suspected would be in existence. They also indicate a fighting spirit among the workers which under favorable conditions, such as the presence of a powerful Communist Party, might have led to a revolution and a successful struggle for political power by the working-class. And last, but not least, they expose the "model" socialist party of the world, the Austrian social-democracy as no what better than the kangaroo of the German workingclass, the Noskes and the Scheidemanns.

The ordeal and the misery through which the toiling masses of Austria have passed during the post-war period are too well known to require a fresh recital. The present day wages and the general standard of living of the Austrian workers is about the lowest in Europe. The Austrian workingclass is required to produce profits and luxury not only for its own capitalists, the Austrians, but also for the big European and American bankers which are supporting and financing Austrian capitalism. Under this double weight of oppression the Austrian workers have been suffering ever since the conclusion of the late imperialist war. And on top of this, the workers have been subjected to a regime of arrogance and brutality of which the recent acquittal of the fascists guilty in murdering workers is only one of many examples. It was this provocative action of the capitalist court which precipitated the bloody events in Vienna.

And the social-democratic party of Austria, led by the so-called left socialists such as Otto Bauer, Adler, etc, again vindicated itself as the loyal servant of capitalism. While the governmental troops were shooting down the workers, murdering their women and children, the trade union reactionaries and the socialist leaders were demoralizing the ranks of the workers by attacking their militants, dividing their ranks and paralyzing their fighting spirit generally.

Now the socialist leaders are carrying on "peace negotiations" with the Austrian government for the only purpose of completing the suppression of the workers. In this effort Bauer and Co. will most likely succeed for the present, and Austrian capitalism will be saved for another while. But the

By CARL RADEK (Prague)

WHEN the danger of sanguinary conflict in the revolutionary class war is at its highest, social patriotic treachery is nearest. The truth of this adapted proverb has once more been proved in the days of the highest tension between Great Britain and the Soviet Union. The lackeys of the bourgeoisie, in their pale red liveries, have increased their attacks against the Soviet Union at almost the same rate as have their masters; and whilst at the beginning of the tension between Great Britain and Russia, even the Berlin "Vorwaerts" only wished to remain neutral, when there is a clash between revolution and counter-revolution, even the Prague "Sozialdemocrat," in whose case, in view of its insignificance from the point of view of the international bourgeoisie, it can be nothing but a work of supererogation, has, during the last few days, raved against the Soviet Union with an acrimony and a zeal which betrays that the alliance between the Social Patriots and the bourgeoisie is beginning to turn from an objective community of interests into a sentimental community of souls. For this reason we can sympathize with these noble souls that they remain callous and cool when English warships slaughter 7,000 Chinese in Nanking, but that they foam at the mouth when a few Russian aristocrats are shot in Moscow.

Every day is not Sunday, and the week day comes into its own again. Then it becomes a question of resuming the everyday walk for the bourgeoisie. And since today war against the Soviet Union does not yet seem opportune to the bourgeoisie, since the worker must not yet be stirred up to direct revolutionary class war is at its highest, social patriotic treachery is nearest. The truth of this adapted proverb has once more been proved in the days of the highest tension between Great Britain and the Soviet Union. The lackeys of the bourgeoisie, in their pale red liveries, have increased their attacks against the Soviet Union at almost the same rate as have their masters; and whilst at the beginning of the tension between Great Britain and Russia, even the Berlin "Vorwaerts" only wished to remain neutral, when there is a clash between revolution and counter-revolution, even the Prague "Sozialdemocrat," in whose case, in view of its insignificance from the point of view of the international bourgeoisie, it can be nothing but a work of supererogation, has, during the last few days, raved against the Soviet Union with an acrimony and a zeal which betrays that the alliance between the Social Patriots and the bourgeoisie is beginning to turn from an objective community of interests into a sentimental community of souls. For this reason we can sympathize with these noble souls that they remain callous and cool when English warships slaughter 7,000 Chinese in Nanking, but that they foam at the mouth when a few Russian aristocrats are shot in Moscow.

Every day is not Sunday, and the week day comes into its own again. Then it becomes a question of resuming the everyday walk for the bourgeoisie. And since today war against the Soviet Union does not yet seem opportune to the bourgeoisie, since the worker must not yet be stirred up to direct revolutionary class war, the work must be resumed which the bourgeoisie regards as appropriate when it is preparing for war, until the moment when it resolves to strike out, at which moment immediately war propaganda begins, the work of soothing the masses, of lulling up the danger, of representing any resistance to the threatened danger of war as "war chauvinism," and in this way bringing things to such a pass that the bourgeoisie takes the masses by surprise with the war, that it does not hear the cock crow at the eleventh hour before they have resolved on any defensive action.

One of the most usual methods by which the bourgeoisie rules, is that of deceiving the working classes as to the true character of the period of history of the moment. A classical example of this is provided by the policy of the bourgeoisie in the period from the beginning of the imperialist epoch until the great war. That was the first period in world politics in which the governments had to take into consideration the interest taken by the masses in their policy, to consider the moods of the masses and their movements of opposition. The epoch of the bourgeois revolution and of the formation of the National States was closed in Europe by the Peace of Frankfort in 1871; the Balkans were lagging behind in the main in 1878, without that this ceasing any appreciable interest in the parts of Europe. If we make the experiment to calculate approximately amongst the workers of Central Europe, we can bet a hundred to one that in the memory of most of those who protest, the period from 1871 to 1914 or, at any rate, from 1878 to 1914 (Balkan wars) remains in their memory as a period of peace (from their experience their reading and lectures they have learnt).

But what was in reality the aspect of the period? With Great Britain's campaigns against the Negroes in 1878 and 1879 and against the Zulu kaffirs, a chain of colonial wars began which never ceased to be broken, and these were soon followed by the wars of the imperialist powers among themselves for the colonies (1898 the Spanish-American war) and spheres of interest and for the division of the world. If we follow up the history of the years from 1878 to 1914, we have a clear picture of the net of the threatened danger of a world war was being drawn closer and closer, so to speak, see the war in the offing. If, however, as

TAMMANY JOINS I. R. T. AGAINST TRACTION UNION

Current Events

By T. J. O'FLAHERTY.

ONLY a few weeks intervene between now and the date set for the execution of Sacco and Vanzetti. Even the easily-satisfied liberals who believe in the innocence of the two labor leaders but oppose mass protests in their behalf, lest such demonstrations might seem to reflect on the impartiality of governor Fuller and his committee of intellectual yes-men, are now beginning to entertain doubt. Ugly rumors are afloat that the governor's commission will uphold judge Thayer and the jury's verdict and that Sacco and Vanzetti may either be electrocuted or imprisoned for life.

A NEW wave of hostile propaganda is appearing in the capitalist press. Whenever a new development in this historic case takes place, stories of bomb plots and threatening letters are to be found in abundance. Take the yarn of the bombing of the American consulate at Nice. At first it was charged to friends of Sacco and Vanzetti. Now we are told that the intended victim was some Czarist prince who had committed some private wrong for which he was marked for punishment. But thousands who read the first startling headline may never see the later version and they will be prejudiced against the victims of capitalist injustice as a result.

WITH death staring at our two comrades in the face and the scream taken out of the mass movement that was under way in their behalf by liberals and reactionary socialists there is no time to be lost in arousing the workers and all other sympathetic elements in this and other countries to the great crime that may be committed against Sacco and Vanzetti. One mass movement is more effective in this case than the sympathies of ten thousand separate bourgeois intellectuals and pacifists.

THE big bosses are not afraid of slaps on the wrist. They are afraid of the wrath of the millions who are huddled together in the mills and in the mines. When the electric thrill of class indignation surges thru those millions the master class sit up and take notice. It was the collective protests of the masses that saved Moyer, Haywood and Pettibone many years ago. It was the same power that saved Tom Mooney from the electric chair. It is in the hands of this power to save Sacco and Vanzetti.

THE Rumanians now have a five-year-old king. That's the kind of a king to have, easy to handle. When the little fellow ascended the throne he kissed a crucifix, then the cannons roared outside and the kingling burst into tears. Ion Bratiano, the real boss of Rumania was there but Marie was not. Ion and Marie will have things their own way until the workers and peasants give them the gate.

ONLY a few years back, Warren S. Stone was the uncrowned king of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers. His word was law in the union and those who would oppose his policies were crushed with an iron hand. As long as he was on top, sycophants paraded his genius. But after his death it was discovered that his genius was largely bluff. He brought a powerful organization to the verge of ruin. A few days ago a brotherhood convention defeated by the narrow margin of seven votes a motion to remove an oil painting of the late chief from the brotherhood bank. Yes, Mr. Stone was an investeata foe of Communism and a "safe, sane and conservative" leader.

SACCO, VANZETTI WEAK AFTER LONG HUNGER PROTEST

Fuller Pays Visit to the Imprisoned Workers

BOSTON, July 22.—Gov. Alvan T. Fuller who holds the power of life and death over Sacco and Vanzetti today visited the two condemned men in Charlestown prison. The interview lasted more than an hour.

He also talked with Celestino Madeiros, who has confessed to the crime for which Sacco and Vanzetti are to be electrocuted.

Both interviews took place in Warden Hendry's office who was present all the while. The governor first talked to Madeiros for fifteen minutes and then for the same length of time with Sacco. Then Vanzetti was called in. The imprisoned workers plainly showed the effects of their hunger strike, they looked pale and haggard.

As Vanzetti entered the office he carried three sheets of paper apparently covered with notes. As representatives of the press and public are barred from all of Fuller's hearings it was impossible to ascertain what transpired at the hearing in the warden's office. After an absence of more than an hour Vanzetti was taken back to his cell.

Are Guarded.

This was the first time since their transference to the state prison that the condemned workers have seen daylight. They were taken from Dedham jail on the first of this month. As the men were brought from their cells, separately, each was accompanied by a deputy warden and a prison guard.

Permit Denied.

The Sacco-Vanzetti Defense Committee has issued a call for a mass protest demonstration and parade here setting the date for Sunday, July 31. When the matter came up in the street commissioner's office, opposition developed to the granting of a permit for the demonstration. Superintendent Crowley, in whose hands the matter lies, withheld permission on the grounds that the meeting might lead to violence. His assertions were vigorously denied by Garden Jackson and Mary Donovan, both of the Defense Committee.

Milwaukee Mayor to Protest.

MILWAUKEE, July 22.—The Sacco-Vanzetti Provisional Committee of this city has issued a call signed by Mayor Hoan for a conference to organize the labor forces of Milwaukee "to participate effectively in the movement to free Sacco and Vanzetti."

The statement read in part: "Governor Fuller yielded to the pressure made upon him by the thousands of resolutions, mass protest meetings, petitions and telegrams, from home and abroad, to the extent of appointing an advisory committee. This pressure must now be doubled, and continued until Sacco and Vanzetti are given full justice. An openly conducted investigation must be demanded."

GENEVA, July 22.—Using a pretext that he pasted a Sacco-Vanzetti protest poster on a city wall without legal authorization, a worker was arrested here yesterday and is being held pending a further "investigation."

Protests from many sources against the execution of Sacco and Vanzetti continue to pour in to the American legations at Berne, Geneva and other points.

The walls of Geneva are literally covered with posters which protest against the imprisonment and possibla execution of the condemned men.

The conservative Journal da Geneve, which is widely read thruout Europe, yesterday ran a leading editorial, declaring that everything indicates that Sacco and Vanzetti were condemned not because they were murderers, but because they were revolutionists. After declaring that the case gives the impression that the men were condemned because they ware foreign-born radicals, the paper continues, "Unhappily, it is too true that in the United States poor immigrants are often considered as being human beings in the second category."

Sacco and Vanzetti Shall Not Die!

For the Struggle Against War

"The struggle against war is not a single act; it demands bloody sacrifices from the Working class, a whole series of mass actions (demonstrations, strikes in munition factories, etc.); whose outcome is the victorious revolt of the proletariat."

May Plenum of the Executive Committee of the Communist International.

The training for the struggle against the new war menace begins with the accomplishment of the simplest tasks, in this instance and in this country, the campaign to defend The DAILY WORKER from the attack of the Federal Government and the War Patriots. The sacrifices required in order to build a defense fund for our paper, the only voice raised against the new war preparations, is but a forerunner of the greater sacrifices which will be demanded of the American proletariat.

Already the Certificates for the GUARD THE DAILY WORKER FUND are beginning to pour in. Already the comrades are beginning to respond to The DAILY WORKER'S call. The fight against the War Danger demands quick and effective action. Capitalism usually confronts the workers with an accomplished fact—WAR—here it is. The workers must confront the ruling class with an accomplished fact—a revolutionary paper—The DAILY WORKER—protected by the solid wall of the Defense Fund—and hurling daily its proletarian challenge in the teeth of the war makers.

Attend Daily Fair Is Request to All Workers by Party

All workers are urged to attend The DAILY WORKER Carnival tomorrow in a statement issued by the District Executive Committee of the Workers (Communist) Party.

It reads as follows:

"The DAILY WORKER will hold a carnival at Pleasant Bay Park this Sunday. The carnival was originally scheduled for Saturday and Sunday. In view of the fact that the Coney Island Stadium Concert arranged by the defense committee was postponed from last Saturday to this Saturday, The DAILY WORKER has donated this day and has given way to the defense committee so that the defense committee can hold its concert in the Coney Island Stadium Saturday night.

UPHOLSTERER CONVENTION KILLS PROGRESSIVE RESOLUTIONS; EVADES LABOR PARTY ISSUE

The defeat or the referring to the general executive board of all progressive resolutions featured yesterday's session of the Upholsterers' Union convention at the Hotel Cadillac, 43rd St. near Broadway.

Among the resolutions that were either defeated or turned over to the general executive board where undoubtedly they will die, were those favoring the recognition of the Soviet Union, Hands Off China, and affiliation with the Workers Health Bureau.

Against Russian Recognition.

The resolution committee brot in a recommendation for non-concurrence with the resolution favoring the recognition of the Soviet Union. Before the vote was taken Delegate Carl Appel of Boston, the progressive spokesman on the convention floor, made a masterful speech in which he said that "the Soviet Union will not suffer by the defeat of the resolution. But in the future when anyone examines the records of our union he will be ashamed at the attitude our organization has taken."

Socialist Delegate.

The resolution calling for the withdrawal of American troops from China, the recognition of the Nationalist government and the affiliation with the Hands Off China Committee was referred to the General Executive Board.

A. Solvioff, socialist delegate, said that while he favored the withdrawal of troops from China he was bitterly opposed to the Hands Off China Committee which he charged is a Communist organization. Before giving the resolution to the executive board the portion mentioning the Hands Off China Committee was deleted.

The resolutions committee recommended that the Labor Party resolution be not accepted because "the American Federation of Labor is opposed to a labor party."

William Kohn, president of the union said that until the A. F. of L. starts a movement for a labor party he will not work for a labor party in this country. "We will instead," continued Kohn, "devote ourselves only to the Upholsterers' Union."

The resolution for affiliation with the Workers Health Bureau was also sent to the executive board.

Today's session will act on the other resolutions and elect the new officials.

CAPPELLINI GANG PANNED BY C.L.U. OF SCRANTON, PA.

Opposition Defeats Four-Year Terms

COLUMBUS, Ohio, July 22.—With an injunction and a carload of machine guns to help them, part of the Ohio coal operators will try once more next week to open mines with scab labor. Rose Valley and Goodyear Rubber Co. mines at Steubenville, and the Lahrig Colliery Co. at Lahrig will attempt to start work Monday. The injunction is by the Lahrig Colliery Co. against District President Hall and 83 officials and members of the union. The court's order allows only six pickets. Quarters for scabs are prepared, and all these mines will utilize armed guards, barbed wire fences, searchlights and quick firing guns to break down the picketing and terrorize the union miners.

SCRANTON, Pa., July 23.—An invitation to Judge Maxey to address the convention of District 1, United Mine Workers of America here, and failure to invite the officials of the Central Labor Union to address the delegates has brought harsh and unrestrained criticism of President Cappellini and other miners' district officials from the heads of the local labor movement.

Favors For Maxey.

It was stated openly during the last strike that Cappellini had allowed Judge Maxey to operate his coal washery all during the tie-up, contrary to union regulations. Maxey also favored Cappellini in a suit in which the validity of his election to the office he now holds was involved.

Democrats and Republicans.

The Central Labor Council officials support the democratic party as a rule while Cappellini follows the traditional official U. M. W. A. policy and supports the republicans. This is probably the real basis of the present struggle in Scranton labor circles. The district convention shows however that there is a genuine rank and file opposition to the Cappellini regime.

Lawrence F. Hart and Frank Walsh, president and recording secretary, respectively, of the Scranton Central Labor Union, addressing a special meeting of the central body last night at headquarters, 521 Lackawanna avenue have seriously questioned the trade unionism of Rinaldo Cappellini, Enoch Williams and other officials of District No. 1, United Mine Workers of America, for their failure to invite President Hart or some other officer of the C. L. U. to say a few words of welcome or fraternal greetings to delegates at the biennial convention of the miners' union at the opening in Town Hall on Monday.

Mr. Hart also accused Cappellini of not living up to promises made at a convention some months ago in Harrisburg when he said he would strive to have the various mine locals in this district become affiliated with the Scranton Central Labor body.

"Rinaldo Cappellini and Enoch Williams saw fit to invite a politician and not the president of the C. L. U., to welcome the delegates to Scranton," Mr. Walsh declared. Continuing, he said: "The officials of the mine union, for the most part, are young men and I believe them to be intoxicated with agotism.

HEDLEY CALLS FOR POLICE AID AND GETS IT; COPS, DETECTIVES, "SUPES," SPIES, SURROUND BROOKLYN LYCEUM

Amalgamated Association of Street and Electric Railway Employes Mass Meeting "Picketed"

Present Union Demands to I. R. T. Today; Meet Tuesday to Consider Reply

New York police, in large numbers, operating in close accord with innumerable company detectives, blockaded and strangled the first of the two meetings of traction workers arranged for Brooklyn Labor Lyceum last night. The meeting of the day workers opened with the crowd driven away by more or less open intimidation from company guards and their Tammany assistants.

The meeting was called to order an hour and three-quarters late, at 9:45 p. m., and General Organizer James H. Coleman of the Amalgamated Association of Street and Electrical Railway Employes, announced to the hundred or so who had forced past the guard lines outside that more were expected when the night shift came down, but that this meeting had shown the company practising intimidation on the workers and keeping them out of the meeting at which they meant to formulate demands on their employers.

An offer by Mayor Walker to interview a delegation of the workers and hear grievances was read by Coleman, and voted accepted. The demands are for the right of collective bargaining (the Amalgamated instead of a company union) and for a wage increase. Another meeting Tuesday will consider further action if the demands are not granted.

Long before the hour set for the opening of the meeting a crowd of workers, subway workers most of them, but traction workers all of them, began to gather outside the doors of the hall. It looked then like a record meeting. Organizer Coleman's prophesy of 13,000 attendance seemed likely to be fulfilled.

The "Force" Arrives.

But soon another crowd began to gather too. The I. R. T. had shouted for police "protection." "Plain clothesmen" like those who clubbed strikers in the last subway strike were there in gangs. The police came, enough of them to block the street. They didn't actually do that, but they hung around the doorway, and closely scanned every worker who came near it. And still more of the company crowd came. Above company with the police, to scan the faces of the workers—company officials, superintendents, foremen, stool pigeons, spotters, bosses of every variety. The undoubtedly cut down the attendance at the meeting, but it also showed how seriously the company took even a threat to strike, what elaborate efforts it was making to mobilize all power against workers who were only asking for a somewhat better wage, a little more chance to live, and the right to form their own union.

Earlier in the day the strike threat had penetrated into the inner councils of Tammany—it was effecting the executive body of the city government, and Mayor Walker was being "forced" to make a public statement. He was told that the union leaders had said that he was the only man who could stop the strike. He replied, "I hope that is so. If there is danger of a strike, I do hope that I will be able to prevent it." And he called on his chairman of the Board of Transportation, John H. Delaney, to corroborate him. "Delaney is trying to build more subways to give the men more work," said the mayor.

More work—with company union, wage cuts, espionage, black list and all the present ills, dangers, and semi-starvation? The mayor didn't say anything about that side of it.

To Try Personal Suasion.

But later is was reported at the Brooklyn mass meeting that he had invited the union officials to come to his office today, to confer with him; he did not say that he had invited the company officials to be there too. Evidently it is not arbitration, but "persuasion" the mayor has in mind.

Mayor Walker came under fire from ex-Mayor Hylan during the afternoon. Hylan said the mayor should arbitrate.

But Walker by that time had sent the police to intimidate the prospective strikers, and probably he hoped that that would be all that was necessary.

It was Frank E. Hedley, president of the Interborough, who made the official application for police. He came in person, yesterday afternoon, to see Police Commissioner Warren. He sat with him in secret session. He refused to make a public statement about his conversation with Warren. But Warren talked. He declared that Chief Inspector Lang would lead a detail of police to "guard against violence at the Brooklyn meeting" of the workers of the traction companies. Whether Lang lead them or not, there is no doubt but that the police were there.

WALL STREET CONTROL OF P. A. F. L. BARED BY MUZZLING LATIN PROTEST

WASHINGTON, July 22.—Attacks on the foreign policy of the United States in its dealings with Latin American republics, coupled with charges that the machinery of this government was being used in the interest of Wall Street bankers, caused President William Green to demand a halt in such speeches on the part of Latin-American delegates to the Pan-American Federation of Labor in session here today.

Green told the delegates that nothing more must be said against the policy of the United States in Latin America, as the convention was "not a clearing house for political ills of South America."

Against De La Selva.

The gag law was applied in the course of discussion of a resolution offered by Salomon De La Selva, Nicaraguan delegate, calling for an investigation of the running amuck of an American marine in Haiti earlier in the week, resulting in the killing of one and the wounding of two natives.

Green's intervention followed a vehement speech by delegate Martinez,

Chinese Trade Unions Ask Joint Conference With Indian Workers

WUHAN (By Mail).—The fourth All China Congress of Trade Unions just closed.

A representative of the U. S. S. R. delegation presented the congress with a banner in the name of the seven million organised workers of the U. S. S. R., and a Java delegate, Alimin, presented a banner in the name of the Pacific Conference of Trade Unions.

The Congress adopted an appeal to the Central Committee of the Kuomintang demanding a punitive expedition against Chiang Kai-shek.

The Congress also made an appeal to the workers of all countries, calling on them to join the united front struggle against reaction in the whole world.

"The only way," says the appeal, "to wreck the plans of international imperialism is to create a united front of the workers of all parties, and to restore unity to the trade union movement, nationally and internationally."

The Congress proposed that the Indian Trade Unions call a joint conference to discuss questions of interest to the toiling masses of both countries.

On the report of the Labor Minister, Hsu Chao Sen, the Congress adopted a resolution charging the labor minister to hasten the enforcement of the normal working day, and to issue labor laws for the protection of labor.

Persecute Young Communist.

SHANGHAI, July 22.—Recently the persecution of the Young Communist League which commenced with the defection of Chiang Kai-shek, has been increased. The Young Communist League organizations which have been suppressed everywhere with the exception of the Province of Hupe, have to be carried on illegally. The Young Communist League has at the present time 2,000 members in Shanghai and 1,000 members in Canton. In the province of Hupe, in particular in Wuhan itself, the League is growing steadily and now has 8,000 members. The Young Communists are doing great work amongst the youth sections of the Kuomintang.

The total membership of the Young Communist League is reckoned at 31,000 members. There are approximately 1,000 members of the Young Communist League in the Wuhan national army. The illegality in a number of provinces has caused an interruption in the communication between the local organizations and the Central Committee, and this has increased the difficulty of the work. According to a report from Hunan, a number of members of the provincial Committee of the Young Communist League have been executed. As yet the names are not known. Mass arrests have been carried out amongst the membership.

According to a report from Changsha, the provincial government of Hunan commenced its official activity with the execution of four persons suspected of being members of the Communist Party. Executions are also reported from the south of the province Hunan. Travellers arriving from Hunan speak of the growing discontent of the broad mass of the people with the regime introduced by the renegade Chiang Kai-shek there. Despite all persecutions, the activity of the Communist Party organizations in the districts under the control of Chiang Kei-shek is being continued.

Martial Law in Canton.

CANTON, July 22.—Despite the terror of the ruling clique, the resistance of the working masses to the counter-revolution is growing. The working masses are already commencing to attack the reaction. The trade unions have recommenced their activity. Protest demonstrations are being made against the persecutions of workers, imprisonments and executions. Such demonstrations very often end in blood-shed as the police and the military shoot into the demonstrations. New striko committees have been organized.

The reactionaries have unsuccessfully attempted to dissolve the organization of the Hongkong strikers which has 40,000 members.

The authorities are using war methods more and more in the suppression of the working class. Martial law has been declared in the working class quarters. Mass arrests and executions are taking place.

General Li Shi-shen is continuing the struggle against Chiang Kai-shek. At the same time he is giving way to the pressure of the reaction. He has expelled the left-wing trade union leader Chen Fu-mo from the province of Kwangtung. Many trade unions have been dissolved. Delegations of workers proceeding peacefully to the Labor Bureau to place their demands before the authorities were received by fire from the police. There were many dead and wounded.

Nanking Aids Japanese.

There are 12,000 foreign troops in Tientsin. Of these 3,000 are British, 2,800 Americans, 2,700 French, 2,300 Japanese and 1,200 Italians.

The re-call of the Indian brigade in Shanghai by the British is put down to the concern of the British authorities at the propaganda amongst the Indian troops.

The movement against Japan is growing weaker thanks to the pressure of the Nanking authorities in Shanghai. On the other hand the anti-Japanese movement in the south is spreading. Mass demonstrations have taken place in Canton and demands have been put forward for the breaking off of commercial relations with Japan.

The persecution of workers in Shanghai has been increased. General Yang Hu well-known on account of the mass executions undertaken at his order in Ningpo has conducted searches on the territory of the foreign settlement with the assistance of the secret policy. Numerous persons were arrested. Ten of these persons were executed for alleged activity directed against the Nanking government. The names of those executed are concealed by the press.

In Canton the police has raided the University. Many students were arrested. Martial law has been declared in the town as the police declare that they have discovered an organization which attempts to smuggle weapons into Canton. However, despite all persecutions, the revolutionary movement is growing.

The town Taiseng has been besieged for two days by a troop of irregulars numbering 5,000 men.

GANGSTER CASES POSTPONED UNTIL COMING TUESDAY

Discord in Right Wing Ranks Continues

The cases of seven right wing gangsters who have been beating fur-rier pickets have been postponed until next Tuesday. Five of these came before Magistrate Adolph Stern in Jefferson Market Court yesterday morning, and were postponed, the others were set over when they appeared last Wednesday.

The gangsters are charged with brutally beating and cutting up four scabs fur workers on June 24, when they were on the picket line. On Wednesday's hearing, one of the gangsters had his bail withdrawn while the other had his increased from $1,500 to $7,500.

In a statement issued yesterday the Furriers' Union Joint Board calls upon all members to be on the picket line Monday morning when a large demonstration will be held in the market.

Right Wing Discord.

Discord within the ranks of the right wing of the Fur Workers' Union is now beginning to manifest itself strongly. It is rumored that the rights are divided into four definite groups, all fighting for control of the organization.

Fistic engagements between cohorts of the various groups are frequent occurrences and whenever a rank and file worker expresses himself to any degree he is immediately beaten up and thrown out of the right wing headquarters.

H. Schlissel Quits.

H. Schlissel, who was appointed manager of the right wing organization when the Joint Board, Furriers' Union was expelled, mot a member of Local 25, Newark, yesterday and told him that he has quit his association with the right wing cliquo, being disgusted at their gangster tactics. Ho said that he would not continue to work with such men as Alex Fried and the other gangsters who are now dominent in right wing circles.

Several fur workers were thrown out of the right wing office on 27th Street, Thursday, when they went to ask Edward F. McGrady about the July raises.

Winnick vs. Sorkin.

Winnick and Sorkin, leading figures in right wing circles, who in the past fought together against the militant members of the Fur Workers' Union, have come to the parting of the ways and are now hitterly combatting one mother in their attempt to gain prestige in the right wing camp. In addition to the Winnick and Sorkin cliques, at least two more are in the field, while new ones appear any day.

COOLIDGE PLANS TO BUY FARM VOTE

WASHINGTON, July 23. (FP).—Calvin Coolidge is planning on buying farm support for his third term, if need be, with a federal gift of $250,000,000.

Persistent reports from the Black Hills, the summer capital, indicate that if forced to it by growing farm discontent, the administration will be willing to allow a farm relief measure resembling the McNary-Haugen bill to pass and become law.

Quarter Billion Bribe.

That Coolidge will be obliged to dip into the treasury for a quarter billion in the shape of a huge bribe for farmers' votes is becoming more apparent as summer progresses with reports of a bumper wheat crop and a slim corn crop. Although the bumper crop stories make good reading for the city population, they mean bankruptcy prices for the wheat farmers who operate the vast wheat fields of Indiana to the Rocky Mountains and from Oklahoma north to the Canadian boundary. The small corn crop, although it will send prices up, is hardly welcomed since most of it is fed to hogs, on which prices are still low.

Another alarming indication of continued farm depression is the report made public July 20 by the department of agriculture showing a decline of $600,000,000 in agricultural income in the last fiscal year. This means a drop in the rate earned on the farmer's capital investment from 4.3 per cent to 2.7 per cent in 1926-27. For the industry as a whole, net earnings declined from 5.2 per cent to 4.2 per cent, compared with the 13 per cent earned by corporations. The average return to the farmer for the labor of himself and his family and for his management was $627.

May Lose Anyway.

The recent St. Paul farm conference with its insistence on the McNary-Haugen bill is believed to have cast the die in forcing the president to agree to some measure of farm relief this winter. The Coolidge camp is desperately in need of some weapon to kubck the Lowden opposition in the bead.

Although unwilling in a non-election year to tolerate a law seeking to give the farmers a look-in on the prosperity enjoyed by the corporations, Coolidge and his advisers cannot follow their own wishes in 1928. With any appreciable opposition to his renomination, the third term will vanish. The anti-third term tradition is held to be so firmly rooted that only an overwhelming demand which amounts to "drafting" him in his party's service would permit Coolidge to run again.

With the farmers bought off, labor quiescent and progressive forces weaker than any time in the 20th century, Coolidge may be able to put the crown on his head for a third term. Unless—and this is an important proviso—unless the financial and industrial forces behind the republican party decide that Coolidge has played his role in tax reduction and that a "strong man" is needed now to execute the program that the evil effects of Coolidge's foreign policy and his ineffectiveness in meeting national industrial problems.

CLEVELAND POLICE ARREST MANY WORKERS AT BIDDING OF STRUCK BAKERY BOSSES

CLEVELAND, Ohio., July 22.—Seven workers were arrested here when police broke up a street meeting arranged by the Workers (Communist) Party in support of a strike called against a local concern by the Jewish Bakers Union.

The strike was called four weeks ago when Beckerman's Bakery refused to renew their contract with the Bakery Drivers' Union. The drivers struck and the bakers walked out with them. Refusal of Beckerman to sign the new contract is the opening gun in the bosses drive against the Drivers' and Bakers' Unions. In order to intensify their open-shop campaign the bosses are making desperate efforts to patch up the Master Bakers' Association, which the Union succeeded in breaking up some time ago. None of the other bosses have broken their contract as yet. It is apparent that their attitude will depend largely on the outcome of the union's struggle with Beckerman. For this reason considerablo importence it attached to the present strike eltho only seven men are involved.

Policean Consults Employers.

The first meeting of the Workers Party was held directly across the street from Beckerman's shop. As soon as the meeting started the police captain in front of the shop went in to consult with Beckerman, and then promptly arrested the first speaker. The speaker was relieved shortly and the meeting was allowed to proceed. A second meeting was arranged for the following day after the meeting had proceeded over an hour and a half, a dozen cops appeared and tried to break it up by driving the crowd of 200 away. They charged into the crowd of workers several times pushing the audience away from the speakers' stand and driving them across the street. A few minutes after each charge, back the crowd would come in response to the speakers calls. Within 15 minutes after the police started their football tactics, the crowd had grown to 300 or more, as a whole, not built more for comfort then for speed, were beginning to sweat. They soon saw that all they were getting from their efforts was a lot of exercise, so they arrested the speaker, T. Johnson. Comrades Fishmnn and Amter followed him on the stand only to be pulled down at once and hustled into the patrol wagon. All three were later released on bail until their trial, fixed for August 5th.

Another meeting was held later on the same street with identical results. Again the police attempted to drive away the large crowd of over 500. When this failed they arrested the three speakers, Comrades Sadie Amter, Shafer and Hecker, as well as four workers who happened to be standing right next to the speakers' stand. All were released on bail.

The Workers Party is determined to continue the fight for the striking bakers, and to definitely establish the right of free speech in Cleveland, a right which is apparently abolished by the police at a nod from the bosses.

Motherly Old Lady Has No Appeal for Aimee's Congregation; Revolts

LOS ANGELES, July 22.—An ultimatum, virtually demanding the ousting of Mrs. Minnie Kennedy from Angelus Temple, was issued here today when 200 members of the insurgent group of the four square congregation signed a petition calling upon Aimee Semple McPherson to return. Mrs. Kennedy is the evangelist's mother.

Drive for Slave Labor Backed by Conscription Bill in British Africa

KENYA, (By Mail).—A Conscription Bill has been introduced here which makes military service compulsory for every white man, and does away with the oath of allegiance.

Foreing Native Labor.

The great problem of the white settlers in Kenya, Tanganyika, and Rhodesia is to obtain a constant supply of cheap (or free) labor for the developing of big plantations. This means that land is to be taken from the natives so that they may be forced to work for the white men and the whole of East Africa turned into a great slave plantation.

This point of view is expressed in a speech by a member of the Legislative Assembly in Rhodesia, who declared: "They could not get a labouring class out of landowners. Every native in the country was a landowner and had no real necessity to go and work. Raising the tax was no remedy, because that merely made the native produce more in competition with the white men.

"In this district they were employers of labor. In other countries they got their labor from the landless men, but here they had no landless men. The man who made the best use of the land was the man who had the right to it, and the white man did not conquer the country for the benefit of the native but for himself."

This is the outlook of the white planters in East Africa. In Rhodesia these white men, a mere handful of the population, have secured for themselves "self-government," that is, the right of unhampered exploitation of the natives. Kenya and Tanganyika are now seeking the same, and we may soon see a federation of "independent" slave States in East Africa.

Fear Labor Government.

What these people fear most is possible interference from a Labor Government in England.

The Conscription Bill has now been read a second time, the missionary representative of native interests voting for it. There is no question of the unarmed natives rising, and that the measure is intended solely to enable the armed planters to resist interference by an enlightened labor slavery Government in England is clearly hinted in a petition to the King organized by opponents of the Bill.

The petition reads: "The petitioners further submit to your Majesty that the Bill now offered deliberately excludes the oath of allegiance to your Majesty. The petitioners have every reason to know that this has been done so that the military organization the Bill creates may be available unhampered by the penalties of military law in the event of certain contingencies well known to your Majesty's Government."

Your Majesty's Government is clear: native labor is to be forced to work for the planters. If the home Government, especially a Labor Government, attempts to interfere with the robbery and extortion involved, the planters will resist by force of arms. They expect to be supported in their rebellion by their friends at home—the upper middle-classes and decadent landed aristocracy of Great Britain.

Build the Anti-Imperialist Army

The heavy foot of American imperialism is crushing the workers of the world.

Slowly but surely the cry of revolt is being raised against the rule of the American dollar.

In this revolt the workers of America must unite with all oppressed groups, who groan under the yoke of Yankee imperialism. Enlisted in this struggle is an army of Daily Worker readers, who spread daily the message of the struggle.

We want Five Thousand New Readers for the Daily Worker to join the ranks of the Anti-Imperialist Army.

We want Five Thousand recruits for this great battle. Every reader of the Daily Worker should be doing his share to swell our Proletarian Army.

Help us to win the Five Thousand new members for our Daily Worker Army. Help us to win new fighters against American Imperialism.

EXPECT 25,000 AT BIG CONCERT FOR DEFENSE TONIGHT

Twenty-five thousand workers representing every calling and every phase of industry are expected to attend the immense concert and opera in the open air arena of the Coney Island Stadium, tonight at 8 p. m. to raise their combined voices in what will be one of the greatest emulations of mass solidarity in New York and its environs.

Last Saturday the elements betrayed the wives and children of the imprisoned Sacco and Vanzetti, for whose benefit this affair is being made. Latest reports from the weather bureau, however, say that we are destined for a more worthy climax this week. But, in the event that lingering clouds cause a storm, the concert will take place on Saturday, August 6th.

A selection of the finest musical selections by the world's most renowned composers will be featured by Maximilian Pilzer, who will conduct the New York Symphony Orchestra of 100 artists.

Kosloff Will Appear.

Alexis Kosloff, known the world over for his Terpsichorean accomplishments, will personally appear in and stage Les Dances Polovtsiennes Du "Prince Igor," in addition to ten other classical dance divertissements, the most important of which will be the Ballet Internationale. Rita De Leporte, solo danseuse of the Metropolitan Opera House, and a pupil of Rosina Galli, will enact the principal feminine character, playing opposite Mr. Kosloff. Other ballet and pantomime performers will be featured on the colorful program. With this talent in view, an artistic success is easily assured.

Tchaikowsky, Wagner, Johann and Richard Strauss, Borodine, Berlioz, Goldmark and Bizet will be well represented in the musical program. Comrades have but to recall last year's concert at the Stadium for the Passaic textile strikers, to get but an inkling of what to expect tonight. Maximilian Pilzer's direction of the big orchestra will add much to the success.

Gold Will Speak.

As for the moral triumph, Ben Gold, militant leader of the Furriers' Joint Board and Louis Hyman, manager of the Cloakmakers' Union, will address the audience on the latest developments in the needle trades in New York and the general outlook and forecast of the industry. As he has so splendidly demonstrated in the past, Ben Gold will await his oratorical temperament in arousing the workers of the vicinity, in general, and the workers throughout the entire country, in particular, to solidarity with the arrested cloakmakers and striking furriers.

Workers Party Statement.

A statement issued by the New York District Executive Committee of the Workers (Communist) Party, says in part:

"This evening the concert arranged by the Joint Defense and Relief Committee of Cloakmakers and Furriers will be held at the Coney Island Stadium. As you know, this concert was to be held last Saturday evening but was postponed on account of rain.

"By attending the concert tonight at the Coney Island Stadium you will help raise funds to continue the struggle while at the same time you will hear a first class musical concert. The Workers Party calls upon all its members, members of the Young Workers League, left wing organizations and all sympathizers to refrain from going out of town to the camps, etc., until Sunday morning and to attend the Coney Island Stadium tonight and do their share in this great struggle."

The Importance of the Traction Organization Campaign to the Labor Movement

The struggle for the organization of the traction workers is marked by rapid developments. The exchange of communications in the press between Vice President Shea and General Organizer Coleman of the Street Railway Employes' Union and Hedley of the Interborough Rapid Transit Company is becoming exceedingly acrimonious and the I. R. T. continues to defy the labor movement.

The Central Labor Council, representing the bulk of the New York City labor movement, following a similar statement by President Green of the A. F. of L., has pledged support to the organization campaign. A big mass meeting under the auspices of the Amalgamated Association of Street and Electric Railway Employes and endorsed by the Central Labor Council was held last night.

A survey conducted among the I. R. T. workers shows that a big majority of them are for union organization and against the company-dominated "brotherhood" which they are now forced to join. Wages are low, hours are long and the "yellow dog" contract puts the workers completely at the mercy of the company.

As we have said before, the present struggle is something far more important than a local fight for union recognition. The whole question of company unionism, in its most vicious form, versus trade unionism is involved. The outcome of the present struggle will have far reaching effects upon the American labor movement.

With the full support of the labor movement a strike is bound to win the right to organize and recognition of the union. This outcome of the struggle would have a tremendous effect upon the labor movement nationally and would serve to check the offensive of the bosses which shows itself in the mining industry, the building trades and other less well organized industries.

But the interests of the traction workers are paramount now and there must be the greatest care exercised to see that the organization campaign does not become the football of rival groups of republican and democrat party office-seekers.

Once a strike is called there must be no settlement without a referendum vote of the workers involved. Any suspicion that the interests of the workers are being manipulated to further the ambitions of one or the other capitalist party political machine will do irreparable harm to the labor movement by creating suspicions among the workers which would make unionization impossible for years to come.

Some Dangerous Aspects of the Opposition Bloc in District 1, U. M. W. A.

The convention of District 1, United Mine Workers of America, now the largest district in the union with between 80,000 and 90,000 members, shows strong signs of the development of a powerful opposition to President Cappellini—the official representative of the Lewis machine in this district.

The defeat of the district president and the executive board on the question of extending the term of office to four years was a close but decisive one. This was the issue around which the opposition crystallized. It numbers among its leaders William Brennan, who was the candidate for secretary-treasurer of the U. M. W. A. of the "Save the Union" bloc in the last election and was the predecessor of Cappellini in the office of district president.

This opposition, however, can play no important part in wresting control of the union from the Lewis machine and initiating a progressive program unless it changes its whole approach to the problems of the union. At present it seems to be without a definite program, there is nothing said so far as can be ascertained about the many vital issues that the strike of the bituminous miners puts before the membership and the progressive program of the "Save the Union" bloc appears to have been discarded in order to attract purely job-seeking elements.

We are informed that even well-known rank and file members of the union who took a leading part in support of John Brophy and the "Save the Union" program, are following the leadership of William Brennan in the fight on Cappellini without insisting on such important issues as organization of the unorganized, democracy in the union, a labor party, militant conduct of the bituminous strike—in a word without connecting the struggle in District 1 with the national problems of the U. M. W. A.

Such an opposition, even tho it is successful in defeating Cappellini, will only confuse the membership and place in responsible positions men who are committed to no program whatever—which means that they will do nothing but become the tools of the reactionary elements which today dominate official circles of the U. M. W. A. The fight in District 1, if it is carried on under these conditions, will continue to be in reality a struggle between democrat and republican politicians.

The honest left wing elements in District 1 will have to make an open statement to the miners and demand that the program of the "Save the Union" bloc be made the basis of the struggle against the Lewis machine and Cappellini in this important section of the miners' union.

If the leaders of the opposition to Cappellini will not endorse and support this program, the left wing must expose them as obstacles in the way of building an honest and militant rank and file movement around a program of concrete demands whose enforcement will make the U. M. W. A. an effective union embracing all the coal in the United States by freeing it from the influence of the coal operators and their agents in the union.

Marcel Cachin, Editor of Communist Daily in France, Goes to Prison

By J. LOUIS ENGDAHL

NOTE—While in Paris on his return to New York from Moscow, Comrade Engdahl attended the session of the French Chamber of Deputies on the day that parliamentary immunity was denied Marcel Cachin, the French Communist deputy, who is also editor of the central organ of the French Communist Party, l'Humanite. As a result Cachin has been sentenced and will serve six months in La Sante Prison as a result of the anti-militarist activities carried on by the French party during the Moroccan War. Engdahl writes of this historic event as follows:

HERE are his words:

"I have nothing to ask from the Chamber of Deputies. I am ready to go to prison. I have been there already. A Communist is not degraded by being jailed in defense of the ideals of his party. On the contrary, the more you strike at us, the more sympathy you will create for the Communist Party and for its principles, in the minds of the working class masses. We will not cease for a moment to defend peace and fight against imperialism."

Thus Marcel Cachin, editor of the French Communist daily, l'Humanite, thundered against the imperialist reaction in the French Chamber of Deputies.

It was an historic moment. Only a few moments before I had been admitted to the gallery of the Chamber on the invitation of Comrade Cachin. When I entered M. Barthou, the minister of justice, was addressing the Chamber from the Tribune, declaring that the Chamber had the power and the duty to withdraw the parliamentary immunity that is supposed to be a privilege of every deputy. Barthou, sleek, slender and bald-headed, was the typical imperialist statesman. Twenty-five more pounds in weight would have made him the twin brother of Nicholas Longworth, the son-in-law of the late Theodore Roosevelt, who presides over the house of representatives at Washington, D. C.

Barthou finishes shortly. Then the spokesman of the various parties, of which there are many in the French chamber, are recognized in turn by the president of the chamber, Mr. Bouisson, who sits on a high dais. He is dressed in immaculate evening clothes.

Speaker after speaker, especially on the extreme right, are repeatedly interrupted by shouts of derision and jeers and invective, hurled at them from the left. The Communists are seated at the extreme left of the presiding officer. M. Bouisson has a long stick with which he beats upon his table to quiet the turmoil. When this fails he begins ringing a bell, rather violently, and with a great show of temper. There is plenty of noise and action in the French parliament.

But there are few interruptions when Cachin speaks. He repeats the stand of the party on the Moroccan war. For that is the charge against him. The government of Poincare wants to withdraw parliamentary immunity so that it can send him to prison because he had helped to carry on the Communist war against the imperialist war that had cost the lives of 10,000 soldiers, workers and farmers of France. Cachin pointed out that this sacrifice in blood had been made for the sole profit of bankers and militarists.

Cachin declared that the Communists had no apologies to offer for the fight they had made. He declared that not one word uttered by the party would be retracted—the words for which several comrades were already in prison.

"During the war in the Riff we called upon the soldiers of the French republic not to fight their brothers in Africa. We called upon them to say to the soldiers in Morocco:

"'No! We will not fight you.' We will join hands with you like brothers. We are equally unfortunate with you. Let us unite instead, and fight against our common enemy!'

"Such was our crime. We called upon each and every soldier of the republic to say to his supposed enemy:

"'Brother! I do not come to fight against you. I come to join arms with you. Like you, I am enslaved. I am armed. I have determined to strike down our common tyranny. I will be free. Do you wish to become free likewise? There is my hand!'"

These were the words of revolutionary fraternization that the French Communist Party urged upon French soldiers as they faced their brother workers and farmers in Morocco.

Pierre Semard, the party secretary, was already in prison. Cachin, the editor of the party daily and leader of its parliamentary fraction, also faced prison. Only the thin thread of capitalist parliamentary immunity had saved him for a few days. That thin thread was now being cut.

The socialists were urging that the Poincare government delay the imprisonment of Cachin until the end of the session. Evidently they thought that the workers would then give less attention to the incident. It was on this motion that the crucial test came in the voting. The government won by two votes, 241 to 239, with the socialists and radical socialists, who refused to join the fight for immunity for all members of the chamber alike, evidently believing that they would thus stave off the wrath of the workers in their home constituencies. They feared the voice of the workers at the next elections.

The Communists abstained from voting. They refused to violate the revolutionary dignity of the party by participating in the mockery of capitalist parliamentarism. In the words of Cachin:

"This is the Poincare government's affair. We have nothing to ask of it. The workers will judge us."

Not only Cachin, but the managers of l'Humanite, as well as its printers, face the common six months in prison. La Sante Prison, like the Bastille of old, feeds on new victims.

Down in the reception room of the chamber, however, one remembers that there is a huge painting of Jean Jaures addressing the parliament of France, when he was alive and one of its members. Jaures was assassinated on the eve of the world war by a patriotism-crazed jingo, typical of the mob spirit of the day. Jaures, one of the most persistent anti-militarists in the ranks of the Second (Socialist) International before the war, suffered martyrdom in the struggle that is now being continued by the French Communist Party.

The war against the imperialist war marches on in France in spite of death and prison.

Results of the Plenary Session of the Executive Committee of the Communist International

By N. I. Bucharin.

This is the first installment of a speech delivered by N. I. Bucharin, editor of Pravda and chairman of the Executive Committee of the Communist International, given at the plenum of the Moscow committee of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union on June 4th, 1927. The subject dealt with by comrade Bucharin is the result of the recent plenary session of the Executive Committee of the Communist International.—Editor.

Comrades!

The Plenary Session of the Executive Committee Communist International just ended, although it has been formally an ordinary regular plenum of the Executive Committee Communist International, is no less important, will prove indeed to be perhaps of even greater importance, than the session of the Enlarged Executive. This greater importance arises from the circumstances that the work of the Plenum has been done in the midst of a most extraordinary international situation—extraordinary for a number of reasons.

First of all, it was during the session of the Plenum that the rupture of diplomatic relations between the Soviet Union and the British Empire took place. This in itself was an event fully exposing the extreme acuteness of the international situation.

Further, the session has coincided with a new phase in the development of the Chinese revolution, and with this with a new phase in the history of the world. These two events alone suffice to give this Plenary Session, whose main task it has been to deal with these events, a position of unique importance in the history of the development of the Communist movement and in the history of the struggles of the Communist International.

The third factor imparting special importance to this session has been the attitude adopted by the Opposition. It need not be said that I do not think of ranking the attitude of the Opposition in a position of importance to be compared with the great historical events just mentioned. But it is none the less necessary that attention should be drawn to this attitude, the more that the Opposition has never before expressed itself in such a form, in such a tone, or with such purport. Never before has the Opposition taken a stand so brask, so anti-Party, and at the same time so "decided," as at the Plenum of the Executive Committee which we have just concluded.

There were three important questions on the agenda. The question of the fight against the danger of war and against war as likely to arise out of the present international situation; the Chinese question; the English question. In the course of the session a fourth question arose: that of the judgement to be formed on the attitude of the Opposition.

On the War Against War.

As point of departure we take the incontestable fact that in China a capitalist intervention is going forward against the forces of the Chinese revolution; we have our conclusions for the most part on the assumption—which has already almost become an axiom, or will presently become one—that the British Government is working systematically, not only to surround the Soviet Union by a ring of fire, but for the preparation of actual war on the Soviet Union. The problems which the Executive Committee of the Comintern set itself the task of solving at this session are the result of the peculiarity of the present international situation, which differs greatly from the situation in 1914, the period which brought us to the threshold of the "great" imperialist war. The tasks confronting us at the present time differ correspondingly from those faced by the organizations of the revolutionary proletariat in 1914. A large number of the problems, slogans, and various tactical tasks, with which we have to occupy ourselves at the present juncture, are bound to differ greatly from the problems, slogans, and tasks falling to the Bolsheviki during the first world war.

The Concert for the Left Wing Defense.

The concert to be given at the Coney Island stadium tonight is something more than a splendid symphony and ballet program. It will be a demonstration of solidarity with the striking furriers and with the cloakmakers who have been sentenced to savage prison terms and at the same time a protest against the shameful treachery of the Wolls, the McGradys, the Sigmans, the yellow socialist leaders under the influence of the Jewish Daily Forward and their police and gangster pals, all in the service of the union-wrecking bosses.

It is the task of the musical reviewers to deal with the splendid features of the program, which is one given at popular prices, within reach of workers, that is seldom duplicated even at the exclusive prices that can be paid by the bourgeoisie. The proceeds of the concert go to the defense of those workers who are fighting not only their own fight, but who are today bearing the brunt of the attack by the reaction. Their fight is the fight of the all militant labor in the United States.

If they are aided in this struggle, if they are furnished with the ammunition to carry on the fight, the reaction will hesitate to attack the rest of the labor movement. If they do not win it means that every section of the labor movement that dares challenge the right of the bosses to break the union, to beat down the standard of living of the workers and the right of the labor lieutenants of capitalism to sign repulsive agreements and force the workers to observe them will be faced with the same fight to the bitter end.

The thousands who attend the concert tonight, besides enjoying themselves, will also be contributing to the fund that will enable our valiant needle trades comrades to carry on the fight against the enemies of labor.

Mamaroneck Bathing Unsafe.

MAMARONECK, N. Y., July 22.—Announcement that bathing in Mamaroneck is unsafe except at certain hours has been made by Dr. Edward M. Clark, health officer, who said sewage pollution has rendered bathing dangerous except for four hours, twice daily, during high tides.

Various delegates asked for immediate copies of this "splendid resolution," together with the inaugural speeches of Green and Morones in order to be able to "counteract propaganda flooding their countries against the P. A. F. L."

God Save "Leaders."

Green then made a tired harangue, as mentioned above, linking "Reds" and all dissenters with capitalists as enemies of unions. He seemed especially worried by the attacks on leaders. He said he wanted Labor to exercise a growing part in the political life of the various countries, that is, regain rights of citizenship. But he added that he wanted labor to be "responsible." He wanted it to make wage agreements, and observe wage agreements when made, and to liquidate obligations in an honorable way. This banal buncombe he delivered with the air of a lecturer to schoolchildren.

Brow-beaten in Secrecy.

Earlier opposition in the resolutions' committee against Green's policies was overcome behind closed doors, so that Wall in the beginning of his report was able to declare unanimity on all points and thank the Latin delegates for helping present a solid front on the American continent, thus helping the Pan-American Federation of Labor. He admitted that the resolution on Nicaragua had been "slightly modified."

Weak Resolution.

When the resolution was finally presented in the afternoon, it was seen that it contained no real protest and by inference helped to whitewash American imperialism. It petitions Coolidge, "respectfully but energetically" to withdraw the marines from Nicaragua.

A resolution against the dictatorship in Venezuela and one on the Nicaraguan national bank were adopted. No practical trade union proposals were made, nor any against imperialism.

The greetings from Machado of Cuba were read over the protest of one delegate that Machado is committing countless crimes against the Cuban workers and that he wanted to cover these crimes by a mantle of pseudo laborism, and for that purpose had sent an empty cable to the Pan-American Federation conven-

DORSHA, FLORENCE STERN AND VAUDEVILLE FEATURES ON CARNIVAL PROGRAM TOMORROW

THE visitor to Pleasant Bay Park tomorrow where The DAILY WORKER is holding a Carnival and Fair will be surprised and astonished at the diverse program arranged and which will occupy the entire day and most of the evening.

Below is but a sprinkling of the musical, dance, and vaudeville program. Dorsha, the inimitable dancer, who needs no introduction to radicals; Florence Stern, the well known violinist and a big hill of vaudeville will help to make the day a memorable one. Besides this there will be a baseball game, a soccer game, a tug of war match, and a Grand Flower Dance and dancing of course. The complete program follows:

The dance program arranged by Dorsha will include; A Gypsy Dance, The East Indian Nautch and March Slav.

Florence Stern, violinist, accompanied by Julius Koehl will play, "Canzonetta," by Tschaikowsky; "Landler," Mozart; "Beth Hamidrash," Elstein; "Scherzo Tnrantella," Wieniawski.

The vaudeville will include: Jessie Weinstein, soncing; The Workers Ballet in a series of dances; Fred Ellis and William Gropper, cartonnists; Sam Nessin, humerous monologue; James E. Philips and Ruth Agee, in folk songs, a special item from WEAF radio station and Tearny Troup who will render a Highland Fling and Irish Jigs. Pauline Rogers will lead the mass singing.

FLORENCE STERN

The noted violinist will render a group of solos at the Carnival and Fair to be given at Pleasant Bay Park tomorrow.

The park is within easy reach of all boroughs. Take either the Lexington or the Seventh Avenue Brown Park subway to East 177th Street and change for the Unionport car to the end of the line.

WALL STREET CONTROL OF PAN-AMERICAN LABOR FEDERATION EXPOSED IN GAG INCIDENT of Venezuela, in which he undertook to air not only the Haitian situation, but also the troubles in Nicaragua. He charged that since the days of Monroe the American government had used its power to obtain a strangle hold on the economic welfare of all Latin America.

Salomon De La Selva declared that the real and sole purpose of the present and past intervention in Nicaragua was to give "New York bankers control of the finances and civil, and political rights, of the Nicaraguan people."

By MANUEL GOMEZ
(Secretary All-America Anti-Imperialist League.)

WASHINGTON, July 22.—Servile acceptance of the American Federation of Labor "Monroe Doctrine of Labor" by a unanimous vote, reading of a cabled salutation from President Machado of Cuba, and loud applause for the tirade of Chairman Green, A. F. L. president, against "Communism and every other 'ism' which tries to disrupt the labor movement by criticizing leaders," featured the morning session yesterday of the Pan-American Federation of Labor, and indicated complete control by Green and his men over the "paper" delegates, whose way was paid here.

Burlesque First.

Green's speech came at the end of an almost burlesque discussion of a resolution submitted by the A. F. L. delegation on the general principles of the Pan-American Federation of Labor. This was a resolution embodying the "Monroe Doctrine of Labor." It committed the P. A. F. L. to collective bargaining, democracy, and non-interference in affairs of other continents, adding "we will not permit others to dictate to us or impose principles of tactics. We are not wedded to any theory. We are for democracy." The resolution also declared in a general way for political, moral and spiritual freedom.

PRESIDENT Hedley of the Interborough Rapid Transit company will ignore mayor Walker's invitation for a joint conference with the officials of the Amalgamated union representing the employes and the mayor representing the so-called public. Hedley speaks defiantly like a man who knows that he belongs to the ruling class that runs this little burg of ours. The labor leaders do not speak in similarly defiant tones. They are apologetic, the approximately 25,000 workers who run the subways, elevated and surface lines are behind them.

WHO Hedley is just a citizen of the United States the same as any one of the thousands of employes on his lines, ba is a member of the governing class and when he goes to the police commissioner for uniformed aid against a strike he will receive it. Tho he represents a class that is only a comparatively small minority of the population, his voice weighs heavily in government circles because his class has economic power and political power.

HUGH FRAYNE and other reactionary officials of the American Federation of Labor, fresh from a strikebreaking job against the Furriers' Union are posing in the capitalist press as friends of the transit workers. I would hate like the devil to depend on those fakers for assistance. They are the best friends the employers have. While Hedley is energetically making preparations to break the threatened strike those reactionary labor leaders are explaining their case to capitalist politicians and assuring them that they are not radical.

THE Amalgamated union has now a real opportunity to organize the transit workers in this city. The sentiment for organization among the men is strong. The whole labor movement is in sympathy with them. Last year a group of militants conducted a strike that taxed the strikebreaking ability of the traction barons to the utmost. With the aid of the municipal government and due to the failure of the reactionary labor leaders to support it the strike was broken. If a strike is now called the militants who are under constant fire from the reactionaries will be the backbone of the struggle.

WILLIAM GREEN and Matthew Woll are having their hands full trying to justify American imperialism in Central and South America at the Pan-American congress in Washington. Those lackeys of the Wall Street, bristle like angry pups whenever the representatives of the oppressed peoples of Latin-America criticise the brutal policy of American imperialism. We said when this congress opened that the function of the Pan-American Federation of Labor was to serve as labor auxiliary to the armies and navies of Wall Street in the Southern half of this hemisphere. So far the developments there, have amply proved this contention.

GREEN stands up and bellows in defense of the Monroe Doctrine, which is to reserve the lion's share of the virgin wealth of the Latin-American countries for the predatory interests of Wall Street. Woll defends the so-called president of Cuba, the butcher responsible for the murder of hundreds of Cuban trade unionists. Even tho this monster was exposed by the American Federation of Labor as an executioner of labor, his greetings to the congress was accepted by Woll and Green. This puts the icing on the sincerity of those labor leaders.

France and Germany Conclude Low Tariff Commercial Agreement

PARIS, July 24.—France and Germany have at last concluded a commercial agreement establishing lower tariff rates between the two countries. It is expected that a large increase in trade will follow the conclusion of the treaty.

Commercially, it is expected that the treaty will increase the exports of French wines and automobiles to Germany and will boost the export of German chemicals and machines to France.

Politically, the treaty indicates a closer alliance between the two countries, for which Briand has worked and which Poincare has balked. It may also put a crimp in the recent overtures by the French for British friendship.

20,000 Workers Attend Coney Island Concert

The eighth week of the strike of New York fur workers against the Associated Fur Manufacturers, Inc., begins today, with the workers standing firmly with the Joint Board in their determination to force recognition of the union and the officers which they want.

Membership meetings of the four locals, called for this Thursday evening at 8 o'clock will hear reports from Ben Gold and Isadore Shapiro on the peace conference with the A. F. of L. Committee where Gold and Shapiro represented the Joint Board. It is evident from the conversations of workers at Joint Board headquarters, that the action of the A. F. of L. Committee in rejecting the peace terms of the Joint Board is viewed as a further betrayal of the furriers' union. It undoubtedly indicates a de-

GREEN EXPOSED BY VENEZUELAN LABOR DELEGATE

U. S. Masses Victims of Imperialism

WASHINGTON, July 24.—William Green's subserviency to American imperialism received a stinging rebuke yesterday after the close of the sessions of the congress of the Pan-American Federation of Labor in the statement issued by the Venezuelan delegate, Ricardo Martinez. The Pan-American Federation is used by its leaders to forward the interests of American imperialism, just as the Pan-American union is an instrument for Wall Street propaganda. When Green stifled criticism of the government's repacious policy in the Latin-American countries he avoided being assailed effectively as he would otherwise have been. But Martinez issued a statement that accused Green of concealing rather than exposing American imperialism. In reply to a charge that he had insulted the American people in his attack upon the application of the Monroe doctrine in Latin America, Martinez issued the following statement:

American Workers Victims.

"I consider the American masses just as much victims of imperialism as the oppressed peoples all over the world.

"Far from disparaging the American people, I believe that we workers of Latin America have the most intimate interest in common with the workers of the United States, and that it is necessary to establish the closest possible relationship in order to fight shoulder to shoulder against the imperialist oligarchy of Wall Street and Washington that oppresses us.

"Unless the Pan-American Federation of Labor, or any other organization claiming to represent the interests of the workers, makes a determined fight against American imperialism on the whole line it will not justify its existence.

"It is because I believe Mr. Green has helped to conceal rather than expose American imperialism and to avoid a concrete fight on it that I spoke as I did. Every sincere Latin-American worker and every forward-looking worker in the United States will approve my stand."

Liberation of Vanzetti And Sacco to Be Demand Of N. Y. Workers Friday

The immediate liberation of Sacco and Vanzetti will be demanded by New York workers at a demonstration to be held this coming Friday, 6 p. m., at Union Square by the Sacco-Vanzetti Emergency Committee. The demonstration will be held 13 days before the date set for the execution in the state of Massachusetts. Well known speakers of the labor movement will speak.

SACCO VANZETTI WEAKER AS FAST REACHES 7TH DAY

New York Workers to Protest Friday

BOSTON, July 24. — Sacco and Vanzetti are growing weaker on the end of the seventh day of their hunger strike to protest against the methods being used by Governor Fuller in investigating their case.

As the date of their execution comes nearer it becomes clear that the only way that their lives will be saved will be thru the mass protests of the world's workers.

It was announced at the state house that Governor Fuller will soon pay his second visit to the Charleston State Prison to talk with Sacco and Vanzetti.

Friday, the governor visited the two workers, and when he left the prison it was rumored that the attitude taken by the chief executive of the state was not favorable for the release of Sacco and Vanzetti.

T. U. E. L. CALLS FOR WORKERS TO PROTEST OCOTAL

Demand Marines Get Out of Nicaragua

CHICAGO, Ill., July 24.—The national committee of the Trade Union Educational League has issued the following statement in regard to the killing of Nicaraguans, many of them members of the Nicaraguan Federation of Labor, by American marines at Ocotal, and other places.

The statement, which is addressed to workers and members of the organized labor movement, is headed, "Demand the Immediate Withdrawal of the American Military Forces from Nicaragua!" and "Demand the Punishment and Removal From Office of the American Officials Responsible for the Nicaraguan Slaughter," and continues:

HANKOW YIELDS TO REACTION WITHOUT FIGHT

Talk While the Generals Stage Coup

MOSCOW, July 25.—Special correspondence in an article in Isvestia describing the Hankow coup de etat reports that this coup was effected gradually and was in the nature of a petty bourgeois democratic change without outward events, the revolutionary order yielded place to militarist order, the situation is still far from representing bourgeois "order."

The definite rupture was preceded by preparation in the press with the Kuomintang leaders criticising Marxism in the styles of student's essays. Ku Meng-Yu, Wang Ching-Wei and Sun-Fo demontrated their theory that Communist tendencies are deceptive by quoting Dostoevsky and Bakunin, they blamed "bad labor-leaders" and swore to their own loyalty to the mass workers' and peasants' movement. This radical prattle and noise masked the reactionary coup, at meetings and demonstrations the demand was put forward for immediate action against Chiang Kai-shek, the traitor to the mass movement.

Troops Occupy City.

Under cover of this shameless masquerading the Generals silently and noiselessly pursued their deed. General Ho-Chen's troops spread thruout the city, occupied the premises of labor organizations. These troops had covered themselves with infamy by suppressing the peasant movement in Changsha. The workers also quietly left the stage without giving in provocation. The trade unions daily becomes more depleted and the active workers disappeared underground.

SCRANTON, Pa., July 24.—Rinaldo Cappellini, president of District 1 of the United Mine Workers, asserting under the criticisms that have begun to pour in against him for sabotaging the defense of Sacco and Vanzetti, seized the district convention platform during discussion of the fate of the two condemned workers in Massachusetts, and launched into a roaring attack on those who called on him for action. He called them all indiscriminately "radicals" and turned aside from Sacco and Vanzetti for a private "Red Hunt."

He said the district federation was doing all it could for the defense of Sacco and Vanzetti, and that he had no objection to the convention's calling on Governor Fuller to "grant fair and just treatment to both Sacco and Vanzetti."

Proud of Treason.

But then he told in bitter tones of

COMPANY BARNS LIKE ARMED BARRACKS AS STRIKE LOOMS TOMORROW MIDNIGHT; STREET CAR MEN TO FOLLOW SUBWAY WORKERS IN GENERAL TIE-UP

Armed Thugs Guard Scabs At Company Barns And Terminals; Ready For War

Eight Thousand Cops Held Ready by Warren To Smash Huge Traction Walk-out

The traction kings are expecting a strike and they are preparing to meet it.

Hundreds of strikebreakers have been imported from all parts of the country and are being herded into the barns of the Interborough Rapid Transit at 145th street and Lenox avenue while at the doors of the barns and at the terminal parade armed company thugs.

If the men on the Interborough walk out tomorrow at midnight—and according to all indications they will—they will be joined by their fellow-workers on the Brooklyn-Manhattan Transit, the Third Avenue Railway and the Brooklyn Transit Company.

The walkout of traction workers on subways, surface car lines and elevated lines in their fight for the recognition of their right to organize and for a decent living wage will bring about the most complete tie-up that New York City has ever seen.

Referring to the strike, James H. Coleman, general organizer for the Amalgamated Association of Street and Electrical Railway Employes, said, "It will be a complete tie-up, motormen, guards, power house men, ticket agents and even porters, and on every line—subway, elevated and surface."

"There may be a strike call at any moment if company officials discharge workers for attending a union meeting," he declared. "We are organized. The men want it. But out of courtesy to the mayor, who is trying earnestly to make a settlement, there will be no answer before Tuesday night. Hedley's attitude, however, warrants action right now."

The dismissal of an employe for attending a union meeting, however, would warrant immediate action, union officials declared.

Between 6,000 and 8,000 policemen will probably be martialled in Manhattan alone to aid the company thugs and strikebreakers in their war on the traction workers if a strike is declared, it has been stated.

The spirit with which the men are welcoming the organization drive is indicated by the fact that more than three hundred workers filed applications for membership in the union. The rapidity with which the men are joining the Amalgamated Association of Street and Electrical Workers belies Hedley's statement that most of the men favor the company brotherhood. More than seventy-five per cent of the subway, elevated and surface lines employes will answer the strike call when it comes, according to J. H. Coleman.

Hylans' Statement.

Denouncing the attempt of the company officials to stampede the organization drive, John F. Hylan, former mayor, said, "The company union is an offspring born under unnatural conditions. The president of the brotherhood is hand-picked by Hedley.

"Such a union," he said, "is conceived in iniquity and means a life-and-death struggle against honest unionism not alone in New York City but thruout the nation."

The attitude of the company officials is indicated by the reply of James L. Quackenbush, general manager of the I. R. T., to a statement on the importation of scabs and armed thugs. Asked if there were any scabs in the I. R. T. yards he said, "I wouldn't be surprised if there were."

"Given adequate police protection," he said, "this company will continue service on subway and elevated lines.

Long Preparation.

The company has long been preparing for the strike which seems inevitable. Scabs are being rushed into the city by transit officials. Hard-boiled thugs who parade outside of the company barns with guns in their pockets indicate that company officials will not yield without a struggle.

Unless a strike call is not forced sooner by the attitude of the transit barons the strike call will be voted at a meeting of workers at the Brooklyn Labor Lyceum, Willoughby avenue and Broadway, Brooklyn, tomorrow.

Militant traction workers when interviewed said they are determined that Frank Hedley's mass picketing move on Friday will not deter strike action at the next meeting. Hugh Frayne, general organizer for the American Federation of Labor, arch-denouncer of mass picketing, was most effectively gun-pocketed last Friday night at the Brooklyn meeting when the I. R. T. and B. M. T. surrounded the hall with hundreds of spotters, "finks" and prevented the several thousand workers who came to attend the meeting, from entering.

Workers Expect Strike.

In spite of the fact that all appearances to the meeting hall were blocked by groups of company spotters, and in spite of the fact that thousands of traction workers were fearful of running the gauntlet and thus risking discharge, the fact remains that the majority of rank and file subway workers will respond to a strike call when it is made. There is every indication that such a call will be issued on Tuesday night.

When the strike is called it is to be hoped that the strike leaders will benefit by the mass picketing lesson which Frank Hedley taught them on Friday. It requires a strong nerve to face a mass of pickets.

Hedley Won't Confer.

On Saturday the strike leaders conferred with Mayor Walker at his request. Although on Friday Walker said that if the traction presidents failed to show up in reply to his invitation "he would consider it an act of great discourtesy," they failed to do so.

The City Hall conference was fruitful of nothing at all and the confab postponed until Tuesday. This was to be expected in view of the fact that Walker would not dare to make any definite move without the axplicit sanction of Tammany Hall—hence the delay.

That the traction workers are anxious to lock horns with the subway corporations was evidenced on Friday when Edward Lavin, the leader of last year's traction strike was wildly cheered when he was called upon to speak. He urged the men to or-

BRITISH TORY PRESS ASSAILS U. S. AT GENEVA

Churchill Gets a Chill Over Crisis

LONDON, July 24.—The British tory press is completely mobilized in defense of the course of the delegates to the tri-partite naval conference that reached a deadlock at Geneva after just forty-five minutes in session on the first day. The game is to try to save the faces of the tory gang by throwing the blame for the failure of the farce upon the United States.

It is recognized in London that the aftermath will be either a cheap, easily perforated compromise that even a child can detect, or an outbreak of recrimination between the United States and Britain. Hugh Gibson, the chief of the American delegation, has already severely publicly criticized the British chief, Bridgeman, and both groups are still berating each other privately in preparation for the open break; which will be the signal for the loosening of the campaign of propaganda between the two Anglo-Saxon nations, who are fighting each other for domination of the rest of the world.

Churchill Gets a Chill.

With the Hon. W. C. Bridgeman and his associates here, it was thought that the foreign secretary, Winston Churchill, would avail himself of the opportunity to address the house of commons tomorrow, but indications today are that he will not appear. The excuse is that he is ill, having suffered from a severe chill after the arrival of the Geneva delegates.

Tunney to Fight Dempsey in Chicago.

CHICAGO, July 24. — George L. "Tex" Rickard is expected here this week. He will go into a series of conferences immediately following his arrival. All of the minor details of the proposed heavyweight championship bout, involving Gene Tunney, the world's title-holder, and Jack Dempsey, the old champion, will be disposed of during these conferences.

STOP THE WAR ON SOVIET RUSSIA

All militant workers will protest against the attack on Soviet Russia by coming to the LARGE MASS-MEETING on WEDNESDAY, JULY 27, 7 P. M., at BRYANT HALL, 6th Ave. and 42nd St. The main speakers will be Moissaye J. Olgin, J. Louis Engdahl and Joseph Freeman, the last two of whom have just returned from the Soviet Union. The subject will be "The Attack on Soviet Russia." All workers are invited and are urged to bring their friends.

If You Are Opposed to a New World War / If You Are for the Defense of the Soviet Union — You Must Defend The Daily Worker

Daily and hourly, the capitalists of the world are preparing for the new World War. All the forces of industry are being mobilized for the coming conflict. Every occasion is being utilized to stimulate preparedness propaganda. Huge armaments are the order of the day, with new and more terrible instruments of destruction constantly being devised.

Against whom is the new World War being prepared? Against whom are the engines of destruction being devised? They are being prepared now for the new conflict, not against a rival capitalist nation, but rather against the Soviet Union and the Chinese Revolution, against the advance guard of the world proletariat.

As part of the preparation for the coming World Class War, the capitalists of the United States are seeking to crush the trade unions and destroy the only voice of opposition, The DAILY WORKER.

They must not succeed in their attempt to silence our daily organ. The charge of the Federal Grand Jury must be met by our comrades, everywhere with a rallying cry in defense of The DAILY WORKER. The GUARD THE DAILY WORKER FUND CERTIFICATES must be circulated widely in every workers' organization and wherever workers congregate. The vanguard of the working class, the Communists and the left wing must win support for the GUARD THE DAILY WORKER FUND and thus rally ever wider masses in the fight against the approaching war danger.

RUSSIAN PARTY OPPOSITION IS "RUN AGROUND"

Bankrupt Politically and Organizationally

MOSCOW, July 24. — An article in Pravda headed "Opposition Run Aground" referring to prospects of further development of the party writes: The party is strong and united and there can be no question of a split. The party will remain as it is today. Only the stranded opposition prattlers whom the party will always be able to put in their right places can "threaten" party prospects, with a "split."

The party as a whole is taking as its starting point Lenin's theory of the possibility of building socialism in our country. It is overcoming contradictions between the working class and peasants. It is convinced of the full possibility of preserving "united and one" party. It repudiates "two parties" theory which eventually is useful only to enemies of the proletarian dictatorship.

Opposition Hits "Sand Bank."

However, if "irreconcilable" supporters of "second party" will carry on an anti-party struggle they will meet proper Bolshevist repulses worthy of the party of the proletarian dictatorship which is leading first socialist state thru the most difficult zig-zags and passes in the world's history. The opposition within our party has actually struck a sand bank ideologically and organizationally. Ideologically because all thru the opposition there is a clear indication of a severance with Leninism which our party will never barter for Trotzkyism or any thing else. Organizationally because apart from limited circle of avowed oppositionists, apart from microscopical "Cadre of Cadres" nobody stand behind opposition in the party. This unenviable situation must be thought out by opposition and conclusions must be drawn from it a theory which leads to a sand bank must be repudiated. There must be no more sailing with this unreliable compass. While it has not yet to social democratic "pole."

SACCO-VANZETTI MASS MEETING IN UNION PARK, CHICAGO; JULY 30; PROMINENT SPEAKERS

CHICAGO, Ill., July 24.—A monster outdoor mass meeting is arranged to take place here on the afternoon of July 30 at 3 p. m. in Union Park, at Ogden Ave. and Washington St. to protest the intended murder of Sacco and Vanzetti by the electric chair. Among the speakers invited are Clarence Darrow, John Fitzpatrick, head of the Chicago Federation of Labor; John H. Walker, of the Illinois Federation of Labor; Dr. John Lapp, Rev. Norman Blair, and James Cannon, secretary of the International Labor Defense. The meeting is under the auspices of the Sacco-Vanzetti Confshops of Chicago.

conditional release of Sacco and Vanzetti.

As the July 7th demonstration at the same location was broken up as a result of the combined efforts of socialist party leaders and the police department, this Friday's gathering is of utmost importance. Leading members of the workingclass movement of this city will speak.

Paris Meeting.

PARIS, July 24.—More than 10,000 workers gathered at a Sacco-Vanzetti damonstration held here at the Cirque da Paris where the freedom of the two Italian workers was demanded.

Following the meeting the workers marched to Sante Prison where Marcel Cachin and J. Doriot, leaders of the Communist Porty of France are being held.

Police Smash Meeting.

Shouts of "Down with the government" and "Libertd Cachin, Libertd Doriot," were the slogans of the workers. The police were called upon, who broke up the demonstration injuring many workers.

Arrest Argentinian Workers.

BUENOS AIRES, July 24. — The Sacco-Vanzetti case in America is being used as an excuse by the authorities here to raid and arrest radicals who they have been watching closely for a long time.

A bomb, which it is believed was planted by government agents was found unexploded in front of the Ford automobile agency. Immediately the police got into action and took many radical workers into custody. Guards have also been placed around the United States embassy and the American consulate.

Germany's Postal Rates Go Up; Dawes Payment Is Due; Money Needed

BERLIN, July 24.—On August 1 German postal rates will become the highest in Europe. The latest result of the Dawes plan pressure for more government revenue is bringing much opposition, but there seems no way to avoid it, if reparation payments and government expenses are both to continue. The Federal Council refused to sanction the increase, whereupon the Executive Council went ahead and ordered it anyway. A sop to republican sentiment is contained in the decision to put Ebert's face on one of the stamps. Letters will cost 4 cents, postcards 2 cents, and papar rates go up. Telegraph rates increase sixty per cent. It is expected to clear $250,000,000 a year this way.

ROMANY MARIE PLAYS ROLE OF WEEPING QUEEN

Everything Rotten as Usual in Roumania

BUCHAREST, July 24. — Marie, queen of Roumania, chief figure in a series of debauches with soldiers at tha front that would quake a bootchakootchie dance green with envy, and who shared with the Britiance and Prince Stirbey, her partner in depraved excesses, responsibility for the frightful terror against the Bessarabian peasants and the workers of Roumania, is now playing a new role. Her latest publicity stunt is to do the garb of a "broken-hearted" queen, whose sole interest in life is the welfare of her country.

Pulls Publicity Stunt.

Calling in the sychophants of the press, who make their living crawling before the mush of European royalty and despotism, this old debauchee, declared amidst artificial tears inspired, like movie actresses, with a plentiful supply of glycerine, that she had never sought nor would seek to become regent of Roumania. In spita of her professions she is the nominal figure-head, as tha Britishers operating things behind the scenes.

The regency that was created to operate until the five-year-old "King Michael" is of age, comprises Queen Marie, and two very old and political imbecile men, Miron Christa, patriarch of the Greek orthodox church in Roumania and Chief Justice Buzdugan, both of them elevated to their present eminences by Jan Bratiano, and through whom he will dominate the situation until kicked out of power either by a palace rebellion led by former Premier Averscu that has as its object placing Cecil on the throne as his puppet or ousted by a workers' and peasants' revolution.

Everything here is as rotten as usual and while the old king lays dead the debauchery proceeds as usual and the masses suffer as they have long suffered in chains and silence.

PARIS, July 24.—Apparently the former crown prince of Rumania, Carol, has a large following among the Rumanian colony here. As he was leaving church this morning where a memorial was held for his father, he was enthusiastically greeted by many of his countrymen.

Prince Cantacuzeno, Rumanian minister to France who accompanied Carol, was a silent observer of the incident which may have a far-reaching effect on the future of his country. On returning to his Neuilly Villa, Carol received a delegation of Rumanian political leaders said to be sympathetic with his ambitions of those who would restore his royal prerogatives. Carol said that no plan would be formulated until after the period of mourning, even in the event he decides to emerge from the retirement which began with his renunciation of his rights to succession eighteen months ago.

Elaine Lupescu, Carol's beautiful red-haired companion, kept in the background today, although when Ferdinand's death was announced first, she immediately started agitation to have the self-exiled prince recognized as the rightful king.

Pawns Of Generals.

The Kuomintang leaders hesitated to the end and feared a rupture but they were playthings in the hands of the generals. On the question of the expulsion of Communists the Kouming tang leaders were split, definite decisions were put off the practically they were already carried out in action. The Communist withdrawal from the government put an end to a state of painful uncertainty. The revolution severed the semi-decayed past in order to follow new ways in the heavy struggle against counter-revolution.

Hunger Strikers Released.

SHANGHAI, July 24.—The Soviet citizens arrested on board the Ilenli have been released on Chiang Kai-shek's orders. The arrested citizens of the Soviet Union declared they were badly treated during the entire time of their imprisonment and were held in chains, therefore they declared a hunger strike which lasted for four days until their release. The Soviet Consul General lodged an emphatic protest declaring reports by the military authorities that the prisonars were well treated was absolutely false.

Mexican General in Presidential Race Is for Capitalism

MEXICO CITY, July 24. — The camp of reaction in Mexico is split by the appearance of General Francisco Serrano, as another "anti-reelectionist" candidate against General Obregon, but also rival to the reactionary General Arnulfo Gomez, already in the field.

General Serrano, under a cloak of "liberal" arguments, promises in his proclamation of his candidacy, issued today, he will turn over the oil rights to the United States because, "nationalization of the sub-soil, as stated in the constitution, should not apply to those rights held by foreigners before the constitution was adopted.

A Black-Shirt Liberal.

Now that the liberal bourgeois and right wing labor movement have the power of government in their hands, Serrano, representative of the old faudal and priestly forces, is in favor of "free press", and announces that separation of state and church should go so far that the state has only police powers in the state-owned church buildings. Since his own party has tried armed counter-revolution and has had numerous members axfled for that offense, Serrano is in favor of recalling all political exiles. Serrano's subservience to foreign capital is stated almost without subterfuge:

Strong For Capital.

"My attitude toward Mexican and foreign capital," he says, "will be one of sincere protection and cordial welcome.

"To believe that with our own resources we can reconstruct the damages of past revolutions is plain lunacy, as without the power of capital we condemn our country to depopulation, misery, ignorance, continual revolutions and crime, waving the hated banner of false nationalism.

"Nature made us neighbors, with what is now the greatest country in the world, the United States. What has been called the fatality of geography should not be turned to our injury, but should be utilized for ties of friendship and strengthened bonds of frank and sincere amity."

Textile Paper Boasts Hundred Percent More Exploiting In Decade

"Wages are too high in any individual textile mill," says the American Wool & Cotton Reporter, employer trade paper, "unless that mill—on the basis of full time—is today operating its equipment with a little more than 50 per cent the same number of operatives that it had on the payroll ten years ago."

The editor goes on to tell of worsted mills that run 12 looms to a weaver instead of 3 as formerly, and cotton mills running 66 looms instead of 18.

What he does not tell is how this speeding has developed an unemployment situation that hangs like a black cloud over the textile workers.

IMPERIALISM
The Final Stage of Capitalism
By LENIN

THIS book, a classic of Communist literature, was written, (as Lenin explains in his introduction), to help the reader to understand the fundamental economic question, without the study of which modern war and politics are unintelligible.

With a growing danger of an imperialist war, at this time particularly it should be read by every worker.

International Co-Operative Day in the Soviet Union

By SHELBY REEVE.

ON International Cooperative Day I happened to be in a military camp about 35 miles from Moscow. Here as well as in all parts of the Soviet Union, judging from the reports in the newspapers, this holiday was celebrated with the greatest of enthusiasm.

And not only with enthusiasm, but with their famous talent for putting theory to practice, the Soviet Russians make use of this day to increase the strength and membership of the cooperatives. Our meeting wound up with the organization of a camp cooperative. Two Red soldiers (this was a rather small camp) were elected to take charge. This committee will get in touch with the main Red Soldiers' Cooperative already existing in the vicinity and it is expected that within a few days the Red soldiers in this camp will be spending their pin money in their own cooperative "Lavka." (booth).

THIS, the main speaker at our meeting said, was the fifth celebration of International Cooperative Day in the Soviet Russia, and an opportune time for examining the progress of the cooperative movement in the Soviet Union and of that in the capitalist countries.

In Russia before the war, the membership of the cooperative for the year 1915 totalled two million and had a turnover of half a million gold roubles. In 1927 the membership of the consumers' cooperatives in the Soviet Union, which covers less territory than did old Russia, totals approximately 20 million members which together with their families number 100 million individuals. In the Moscow Gubernia (province) alone the turnover of the cooperative for the fiscal year 1925-26 was 760,200,000 roubles and five million four thousand roubles has so far been turned over in the fiscal half year of 1927-28.

Eloquent proof of Comrade Lenin's viewpoint that only under the dictatorship of the proletariat can the cooperatives really develop free and unhindered in the interests of all the toilers can be found in the fact that the increase in the cooperative turnover of the Soviet Union between the years 1923-25 was 344 per cent, while the increase of cooperative turnover in the capitalist countries ranged from 10 to 15 per cent.

IN pointing out the dangers of a policy of neutrality on the part of the workers', peasants' or workers' and peasants' cooperatives, he brought the actions of the leaders of the English cooperatives at the time of the English coal strike as an example of "neutrality" which served only to strengthen the capitalist class by taking a neutral position towards the strikers instead of aiding them materially in their struggle, as the cooperatives were so well fitted to do if they cared. Contrary to this position, he said the cooperatives have as their supreme task the feeding and clothing of all workers, peasants and soldiers in the Soviet Union should the preparation of the imperialist powers for a war against the Soviet Union materialize.

The peasants' cooperatives, to which the real growth and success of the cooperative movement can best be judged, because of the peasant's natural disinclination to social forms of organization show a tremendous growth in the last four years. From a membership of 2,297,000 in 1923 the village cooperatives have grown to the enormous number of 7,260,000 in 1927. If we take the average family to consist of four individuals, then the village cooperatives embrace over 29 millions persons. The consumption statistics of these peasant cooperatives, for 1926, over 27 million roubles, show an increase of more than eleven million roubles over the consumption of 1923 which was 16,105,000 roubles.

THE village cooperatives hits straight and hits hard at the Kulak. Not only has he no place or power in the cooperatives but he and his brother the Napman are daily losing more and more of the little trade they are now permitted to do, as they cannot compete with the nationwide cooperatives. For instance the prices of all products of which there are a sufficient quantity to supply the demand, and these are generally natural products, are eleven per cent lower in the cooperative stores than in the private booths and stores. Industrial products on the other hand, the quantity of which is generally behind that of the demand because of the continuous growth of wages and income of the workers and peasants, are sold to the consumer by the cooperative enterprises at a price 30 per cent lower than that of the private storekeeper in the village.

In addition to this the members of cooperatives receive a yearly premium on their purchases from their respective branches as well as a proportionate percent of the profits. But since neither the profits nor the premium are paid out until a definite percentage of the profits is alloted to a fund for aid to the poor peasants in the village, as well as for clubs and other cultural work, the cooperative becomes the very heart of the social life of the village.

OF late a campaign for lower prices has been started and a great number of cooperatives have already achieved a decrease of 10 per cent in their prices. As in all other campaigns carried on in the Soviet Union, it is the rank and file worker which is drawn into activity to insure its success. Revision commissions composed of members of the cooperatives are elected at cooperative membership meeting to survey the apparatus of the administration, the methods of buying and distribution, etc. These report to the membership and bring concrete suggestions for lowering the cost of production and distribution and thus the prices.

Thus while the workers and peasants cooperatives in capitalist countries must aid the workers and all toilers in their struggle against their imperialist exploiters, if they are to fulfil their real task, the cooperatives in the Soviet Union have as their task to draw in the millions of workers and peasants of the union into active participation in the building of Socialism in the First Workers' Republic.

MOSCOW, July 2. (By Mail.) — In reference to the International Day of the co-operation the centres of co-operative systems have summed up the results of their work during the ten years of the existence of Soviet power.

During these ten years the general turnover of the consumers' co-operation has grown from 500 million to 7,000 million roubles yearly, while the number of shareholders increased five times, actually reaching 12.5 millions.

Seven Million Homes.

Agricultural co-operation counts 60,000 co-operative societies uniting 7 million peasant homes, which is almost one third of all the peasant population of the union. Two thirds of the co-operated rural population are united in mass agricultural societies. Out of the 27 thousand odd tractors operating in the USSR 30 per cent belongs to the agricultural co-operation.

The home industrial co-operation, which is the youngest branch of Soviet co-operation, actually unites 20 per cent of all the handicraft workers, or about 600,000 persons. The general turnover of the industrial co-operation is 650 million roubles, while the yearly production amounts to 2,600 million roubles.

War Protection.

In pointing out the development of the Soviet co-operative movement, PRAVDA writes: "Should the USSR be directly faced by the danger of war the co-operative movement will be in a position to assure the regular circulation of goods within the country and help the Red Army on the front. In the contingency of war it will not by any means be necessary that the USSR revert to primitive methods of distribution which prevailed in the period of war communism. While fighting the enemy and, if necessary curtailing superfluous outlay, the USSR will carry on, on modern lines, the development of socialistic forms of economy. Thereby the co-operative movement will render invaluable service to the country."

War Plans Continue In Eastern States

The largest peace time reserve training camp is now taking place in New York State. Full preparations are under way for the next war.

Yesterday 369 men left their homes to join 250 reserve officers already in the field. Practical field training for more than 1,750 citizen officers during July, August and September is planned. Not only will every army post within the second corps area which includes New York state, New Jersey and Delaware, be utilized for this purpose, but large army training centers in other corps areas will accept contingents of local officers.

In addition to the 1,750 reserve officers, hundreds of volunteer officers will be trained in special, semi-official contonments called "contact camps."

Under the war department policy the reserve officers will remain in camp for 14 days, other groups replacing them at the end of that time.

Monster Picnic In Jersey.

The United Clubs of New Jersey State arranged a monster picnic and carnival Sunday July 24th, 12 noon, which will take place in Linwood Grove Lake, between Matuchon and New Brunswick.

The Singing Society of Elizabeth, Maddalin Orchestra of Plainfield, a Band music and other entertainments have been arranged for this carnival. Admission is only 35 cents. The entire proceeds will go toward the Defense. Sam Liptzin will be present. All workers in New Jersey State are urged to attend this affair.

PREMIER, NOT BOY KING, RULES IN ROUMANIA

Since the ending of the colorful and turbulent career of King Ferdinand of Roumania by death, it has become evident that the real ruling power of the land is not, of course, the five-year-old grandson of the King who succeeded to the throne as King Michael I, or any other member of the royal family, but Premier Ion Bratiano. Above are pictures of the chief actors in this unusual royal drama, which the world has been observing with intense interest. At the very top, the artist has sketched high spots of Ferdinand's reign. He was the lone Hohenzollern to stand with the Allies in the World War. In the center is Michael, boy king, whose mother is Princess Helen, eldest daughter of the late King Constantine of Greece. To his left, the last portrait of the late King Ferdinand before his last lingering fatal illness. To the right is Premier Bratiano. Below, left to right, are: Queen Marie, whom Americans know first-hand; Prince Carol, father of Michael, who renounced the throne to go his own way in Paris; Princess Ileana, and Prince Nicholas, aunt and uncle of the new monarch, the prince also being one of the three regents named to protect the interests of the throne.

numbers of workers, members of the Nicaraguan Federation of Labor, peasants and others who refuse to surrender their freedom and national independence, who insist upon resisting the regime of slavery foisted upon Nicaragua by the big capitalist of the United States.

Challenge to American Workers.

The lives of these three hundred Nicaraguan toilers and trade unionists, sacrificed by American capitalists to increase their profits, constitute a challenge to the solidarity, honesty and integrity of every workingman and working woman in the United States. The blood of the Nicaraguan patriots and fighters for their national independence and freedom is crying out to the American workers and their labor movement for the most determined struggle against the American invasion of Nicaragua, against the brutal regime of American imperialism.

The Trade Union Educational League, speaking for the left wing and militant workers in the American labor movement, calls upon you to raise your voice in the most energetic condemnation of the killers and murderers of the Nicaraguan toilers and trade unionists. Every trade union in the country must adopt resolutions of protest against the invasion of Nicargua demanding the immediate withdrawal of all American armed forces and the punishment of the United States officials guilty for the slaughter.

Support Nicaragua Labor.

The demand of the Nicaraguan Federation of Labor must be supported by the entire organized labor movement in the United States. Delegate De la Selva declared before the congress of the Pan-American Federation of Labor now held in Washington, D. C., that the laboring people of Nicaragua will not submit to imperialism, that they will rather die fighting the American marines than become slaves in their own country.

The Pan-American Federation of Labor, must condemn in no unretain terms American Imperialism in Nicaragua. It must give it fullest support to the demands of Niaraguan Federation of Labor that the American imperialists withdraw from and keep their hands off Nicaragua. The half-hearted, insincere and evasive efforts of William Green on behalf of the Nicaraguan toilers must be substituted by energetic and honest struggle of the organized labor movement against American imperialism and its bloody agents in Nicaragua.

Pass resolutions of protest and condemnation of the killing of Nicaraguan toilers and trade unionists by the armed forces of American imperialism.

Stand by and support the demands of the Nicaraguan Federation of Labor.

Demand the punishment and removal from office of the American officials guilty in the Nicaragua slaughter.

Demand the immediate withdrawal of all American military forces from Nicaragua.

—The National Committee of Trade Union Educational League.—W. Z. Foster, Secretary.

MORE NICARAGUANS IN SIGHT

Three hundred workers of Nicaragua have been shot down in cold blood by American aviators. This ruthless murder has created a profound stir in the ranks of the labor movement of the United States and Latin America. But the killing of several hundred natives at Ocotal, is not the last blood to flow in the rapacious march of American imperialism through Latin America.

Max Winkler, famous statistician, of Bertron, Griscom & Co., Inc. raises a beckoning finger to American bankers, and points to greater and more glowing profits, which can be extorted from the sweat and toil of the South American workers. He points to the fact that our investments in these countries have grown from about $100,000,000 before the war to $1,372,300,000 today, and that our commerce during that period has grown correspondingly from $328,000,000 to over $1,000,000,000 annually.

Mr. Winkler paints an inviting picture for the American imperialists showing that as far as natural resources are concerned, Argentina has a per capita wealth of $1,442, Uruguay is second with $1,067, followed by Chile with $832, Brazil with $550, Peru with $303, Bolivia with $305 and Colombia with $300.

Mr. Winkler is of the opinion that loans floated in these countries for revenue producing purposes should be welcomed by American bankers and investors because they are bound to result in materially furthering our foreign trade.

The future history of these countries will be white with an ever-increasing record of American imperialist ruthlessness and cruelty, in its chase for profit. No less than 32 military "interventions" is the record to date, covering Cuba, Panama, Dominican Republic, Nicaragua, Haiti, Mexico, Honduras, Costarica, and Colombia. More will follow as the American bankers eagerly seize upon Mr. Winkler's cue, until the workers of North and South American eventually join hands in a revolt against their common enemy.

THE WAR AT GENEVA

Another "war to end war" is being fought at Geneva, Switzerland, and it threatens to be just as successful of its objective as was the war of 1914-18,—and not more successful.

The fight at Geneva seams to be between two former allies—Great Britain and tha United States. They are fighting to see who shall have the bigger navy,—as a necessary peace precaution. Britain wants 600,000 tons of sea-fighting machinery cruiser class. Ambassador Gibson and the other American delegates object. Whereupon Viscount Cecil, a Britisher, loses his temper and hurls a verbal broadside at the Americans in the words "perfect nonsense." And, of course, if Americans are to be accused of nonsense, they object to being accused of perfect nonsense, —and Lord Cecil is asked by the American Ambassador to retract his charge,—or the "war to end war" will itself be ended.

The joke is: When this conference was called, everybody thought it was going to be a fight for advantage between Americans and Japanese, between white and colored. But, bless your soul, the fight has come between English and American, the two biggest "white" powers on the earth. They cannot agree,—exactly —for both want the same thing—naval advantage. The Japanese must be vastly amused.

Our papers say that the action of the British is not very "tousinly" toward the Americans. The papers are wrong: the British action is more than cousinly, it is brotherly; for that is what brothers do—fall out and fuss over the inheritance. The more there is to fuss about, the bigger the fus.

A suggestion to Geneva: perhaps it would be much simpler and easier to decide that nobody should have any navies at all than it is to decide who shall have the largest navy.

If the Admiralty lords and ambassadors do not hold their "tempers," somebody will need to step in and put an end to this "war to end war."

TWO British princes and one prime minister are on their way to the dominion of Canada, to help keep the natives of our northern neighbor contentedly holding to Mother England's apron strings. The empire is going thru a far reaching crisis now, and needs the hearty co-operation of all her far flung colonies. Not only is she preparing for war with the Soviet Union but her bagmen and those of Wall Street are growling at each other. There is always something more than the craving for a hike behind the visits of British royalty.

MANUFACTURERS of airplane motors were not crazy for nothing over the trans-oceanic flights of Lindbergh, Chamberlin, Byrd and others. The Wright Whirlwind motor company has just pocketed a nice fuicy government contract that speaks to the tune of $1,500,000. Those who held that those flights served to bring the peoples of the world closer together were correct in a sense. They will come together all right if the capitalists have their own way and instead of saying it with flowers, they will say it with bombs.

SPORTING fans are still discussing the ways and what nots of the great Dempsey-Sharkey battle. It seems to us that outside of those who bet on the marine the discussion is conducted with a gantlemanly regard for etiquette. Those sporting writers who work up so much indignation over rival pugs are in the business for what they can get out of it and unless they get the fans excited the gate receipts will not be enough to go around among managers, trainers and sports writers.

Off with a Rush

The call for Five Thousand New Readers for the Daily Worker has been heralded with enthusiasm by the troops of the Daily Worker Army.

Section 2 and 3, New York, have ordered Ten Thousand copies of this issue of the Daily Worker for free distribution chiefly in the garment district.

This is the third New York group to carry on a distribution campaign.

Meanwhile the western forces are attacking the enemy with energy. The Chicago district has already brought in $222.30 worth of subscriptions since July 1st, the opening of the drive for Five Thousand New Readers.

The San Francisco District has sent in $188.80 worth of subs. Other districts are following the lead of our foremost battalions. Let us have every comrade on the job, working with energy and vigor toward our goal.

The Expulsions in the Shoe Workers' Union

It is not necessary to be an official of an American Federation of Labor organization in order to play the role of a labor agent of the capitalist class. That role is being done in the approved manner by Daniel J. Fitzgerald, secretary of the Shoe Workers' Protective Union, an "independent" union, which has its main offices in Boston. Of course the orders are carried out by Fitzgerald's man Friday, John D. Nolan of Rochester, who has for the past two years been president of that organization. Fitzgerald is the real boss of the general council, a political machine within the union that has but one object in life—to maintain itself at the head of the union and to obtain just sufficient members to enable them to get salaries.

The shoe workers of Greater New York have been victimized by almost every conceivable variety of labor faker. Unions have been organized time and again, only to collapse. Even the bosses organized a union to prevent the organization of real unions and then the membership got control of it and used it against its creators. No group of workers have suffered more from a multiplicity of unions. Many workers in that industry are cynical and have despaired of ever achieving anything. But in spite of this condition the majority of the district council in the Shoe Workers' Protective Union carried on organization campaigns, fought against an aggregation of the lowest, most tricky and petty larceny gang of bosses that ever infested an industry, and at the same time had to fight against a general office that tried to put every obstacle in the way of real organization.

Faced with such obstacles the work of organization proceeded and the district council and its two principal locals, 53 and 54, although controlling but few shops out of the hundreds in the industry, prevented, by their very existence, the wholesale reduction of wages and worsening of conditions. It was a situation that required militancy and the workers were aggressive to such a degree that they criticised the inaction and sometimes open betrayal of the Fitzgerald-Noisn machine. A national election is approaching and Nolan is up for reelection.

Last year Fitzgerald had to resort to all sorts of political trickery in order to maintain power and even expelled from the organisation his opponent, P. Pascal Cosgrove. This year the district council that Nolan and Fitzgeraid thought would succumb to neglect on the part of the general office and the attack of the bosses is still in existence, so Nolan simply suspended the charter of the council and the two leading locals. It is a performance that would do credit to George L. Berry, Wm. Green, Matt Woll or any of the rest of the more prominent fakers.

It is to be hoped there are sufficient members left in the organization in Haverhill, St. Louis and other places where units of the organization exist, to kick the Fitzgerald machine out of office so that the shoe workers can carry on a fight against the greedy employers of that industry.

Government Reports Are Political Propaganda

A few years ago statistical reports from the various departments of the United States government were fairly accurate and enabled one to obtain a picture of the economic condition of the country. Today, however, with much more elaborate machinery for gathering facts, the reports are utterly unreliable because they are nothing other than mere propaganda for spreading illusions about prosperity. In order to maintain the fiction of Coolidge prosperity the department of commerce, under Herbert Hoover, has been turned into a headquarters for concealing facts about the economic conditions of the country.

If economic facts do not coincide with the political line of the Coolidge government, so much the worse for the facts.

The latest effort of the government to conceal facts under the fiction of lying figures emanates from the department of agriculture and dove-tails into the Coolidge policy of trying to convince the farmers that everything is all right with them in spite of the fact that most of them know that the price they can obtain for their products does not cover the cost of production. A recent ponderous document issued by the department of agriculture at Washington labors mightily to persuade us that there is real prosperity ahead for the farmers because the winter wheat crop is estimated to be 50,000,000 bushels below last year, and that the wheat production of Canada, Australia and the Argentine is also reduced.

But the fiction of the government fades before the light of the facts shed from the stock exchange. It isn't what the government says, but what the stock exchange does that counts and the Chicago market closed Saturday noon with a very material setback in wheat prices because of the large scale movement of freshly harvested winter wheat and indications that it would far exceed the crop of last year. The prices were sustained fairly high because it was thought the long dry spell would produce blackrust and destroy millions of bushels, but the rust did not materialize. When the farmer does not suffer from the blight of rust, he suffers from low prices. He has no chance, no matter what happens as long as Coolidge's pals, the bankers, the railroads, the flour trust and the rest of the gang get theirs.

A contributing factor in the decline is the information that the identical places throughout the world, that the department of agriculture claims have failures, in reality have bumper crops, creating a situation where, in the parlance of the stock exchange, "the buying demand will be too slow to absorb the selling."

The poor farmers will have to organize, not only in this country alone, but internationally, in order to overcome the anarchy in agricultural production. As part of the great producing class of the world, their only salvation is to ally themselves with the proletarians in the cities, instead of permitting themselves to be victimized by the scheming politicians.

In this country it is not the Coolidges or Lowdens that will aid the farmers, but the support of the drive to build up a class party that will be a political expression of the interests of the workers and the farmers.

The "Left" Social-Democracy in Action

By T. LOAF.

DURING a discussion before the recent convention of the German Social-Democratic Party in May the "left" wing in the German Social-Democracy, in its criticism of the present leadership of the Party laid particular stress upon the "correct," "Marxian" policy of the Austrian Social-Democracy that was able by its allegedly "non-opportunist" policy to get an unshakable grip upon the Austrian proletariat and to develop a mighty proletarian organization. The left opposition in the German Social-Democracy expected a strong support of its stand from the fraternal delegates of the Austrian Social-Democratic Party. This they did not get. The "fraternal delegates" of the Austrian Party behaved in the German city of Kiel (place of the convention) in the same manner as they had been invariably behaving in the Soviet city of Vienna: they were applying the brakes against any sharper leftward turn in the movement of the proletarian masses.

TO be sure, fraternal delegate Renner had something to say about the Austrian Social-Democracy; he thus served the delegates with the gist of the Austrian social-democratic philosophy:

"WE muster now 43 per cent of all votes. We improved 7 per cent since 1919. Seven per cent more and we have a half. (laughter).. But the last seven per cent are always the hardest (renewed laughter). We have never put to a voter the innocent question: 'what is your stand on religion'? . . . Forward, towards capturing the state and forward, towards national unity of all Germans within the framework of the International!"

WE are presented here with the central idea of the agitation of Austrian social-democratic leaders: wait till we get the perliamentary majority, we shall obtain and wield power then. This slogan of a parliamentary majority transferring to the proletariat actual power in the state has struck deep roots in the working masses of Austria and has aided the Austrian social-democratic leaders in breaking off the sharp edges of the proletarian struggles in Austria.

THEN the Austrian social-democratic masses were ready to fight. They were ready to fight in the year 1919, when their spontaneous revolutionary outbreaks were suppressed in blood, and they have shown their revolutionary mood in these days of bloody struggle against the Austrian variety of Fascism. They have entrenched themselves almost absolutely in the trade unions, embracing, with the exception of a few hundred thousands, whom but a small percentage are organized (less than 50,000 out of 500,000), practically the entire Proletarian mass of the country and leaving but a small fraction of the workers either unorganized or in the yellow organizations (about 5 per cent, mostly Christian-Socialist). Although the membership of these social-democratic unions in the last years fell from over a million to something over 500,000, still the Austrian proletariat is the best organized in the whole capitalist world. Also, these unions have built out of their midst a powerful political organization, the Austrian Social-Democratic Party, that numbers little less than 500,000 members, of whom 200,000 are in Vienna. Of the 3,940,000 votes cast in the last (April 1927) elections, 1,500,000, or 43 per cent, were polled by the Social-Democratic Party; this party has in Parliament now 71 seats against 94 seats of the bourgeois bloc (mostly Christian-Socialist Party) and has developed a formidable party apparatus, busy with the municipal and other small, every-day welfare work of the Party and to a large extent always ready to "share" with the capitalist parties the "responsibilities" of government.

NEXT to the building up of trade unions, an extensive party organization, influential cooperatives, the Austrian Social-democratic masses were able to form a numerous proletarian guard, the so-called "Republikanischer Schutzbund" (about 100,000), which is to a considerable degree extent than the German "Reichsbanner" is social-democratic in its composition and proletarian in its character. It was formed out of the armed defence guards of the workers' councils (dissolved in 1923) as shock troops against the growing danger of Fascism, but unlike Germany it has not been confronted with such a radical and disciplined Communist defence organization as the "Frontkaempferbund" is. All these years it had never an occasion to face and by a "higher order" to suppress a revolutionary proletarian outbreak; and even now its role during the recent proletarian uprising is not altogether clear.

IT is a fact that the proletarian masses of Austria had been more used to radical action than the German workers and it is altogether clear that they have moved considerably to the left. It is also a fact that the leadership of the Austrian Social-Democratic Party had been and is on the face of it more "radical" than the leadership of the German Social-Democracy. It is well known that the Austrian Social-Democracy was the kernel of the Two-and-a-half International and is at present considered by all, the "model" of a social-democratic party. Although the smallness of the Communist Party of Austria cannot be altogether ascribed to the tactics of the social-democracy, still it is a fact that they have been able to meet the influence of the Communists with more dexterity than their political brethren in other countries. What is the reason for it?

WE shall indicate it but briefly. The Austrian social-democrats (the "Austro-Marxians" as they are often called because of the special trend or "school" that they have developed in the camp of Marxist ideology) had a peculiar line of development. Because of the feudal character of the old Hapsburg monarchy that had been for years denying to the workers elementary civic rights and had been basing itself upon the feudal privileges of a landed aristocracy, militated for the benefit of the growing large bourgeoisie, the social-democracy, as the representative of the proletarian masses, had not been able to "grow in" into the institutions of the capitalist state with the same rapidity as other parties of the Second International had been doing it before the war. Moreover, what it was met by proletarian cadres that have become more accustomed to mass demonstrations and mass strikes, both of the workers of the Czarist Russia and particularly the Russian revolution of 1905 had a deep effect upon the workers in the Austrian Monarchy. Thus the leadership of the Austrian social-democracy, although in its ideological and psychological make-up rather akin to the opportunist majority in the Second International, had to develop a tactical line of mass action that was keeping them more rooted in the proletarian masses. The rather poor existence of these masses had been likewise working against developing an atmosphere of petty-bourgeois opportunist satisfaction.

ANOTHER no less important factor shaping the character of the present Austrian social-democracy was the nature of the old Hapsburg monarchy, composed of so many nationalities with their movements for national liberation. Against the increasing danger of a "national unity" between the social-democratic labor leaders and the bourgeois nationalists within these nationalities (as in the Czech territory, in Western Galicia etc.), the German part of the Austrian social democracy—which was the leading part—could set only one weapon the appeal to the international solidarity of the workers, coupled with a temporary solution of the problem of nationalities on the basis of national autonomy within the framework of the existing state. Accidentally this program of the Austrian Social-Democracy was the only one, by which the tottering Austrian state could he yet somehow kept and was held together. Its final downfall was due to the imperialist development of Europe.

THUS the necessity for more radical mass action and the necessity for "internationalism" were the two main factors that have shaped the character of the present Austrian Social-Democracy. As the Austrian social-democrats were not so strongly tied to the Austrian state, their social-patriotism was lacking the strong imperialist trend of a large part of German Social-Democracy: hence their vacillation and pronounced pacifism during the war. If we add the fact owing to the influence of the Catholic church, they had to institute at a time a "free-thinkerish" anti-religious movement, we get an approximate picture of these "leaders" of the Austrian masses.

TYPICAL centrists, their every political confession contains the unavoidable formulation of "on the one hand" and "on the other hand." On the one hand they are for a Soviet Republic, but on the other hand for bourgeois democracy; they are for workers' councils and against them, for the Soviet Union and against, for arming the workers and against, for the necessity of Two-and-a-half International as against the Second and at the same time for unity with it, finally for proletarian dictatorship, but—not now and not by force. Their political conduct after the fall of the Hapsburg state and the establishment of the top-heavy Austrian Republic was fully in line with their make-up. They choked the revolutionary movement in Austria and refused to join Soviet Hungary and Soviet Bavaria, throwing themselves instead upon the mercy of the Allies and later the League of Nations. The reason they put forward was that that Austria would be unable to keep itself and would be surely invaded by foreign troops.

BUT the result they have obtained is that Austria is choking economically inside the tariff walls put up by the neighbor states. She is under the constant control of the League of Nations and is constantly watched by the "Little Entente." True, the social-democrats have put out a program of political unity with Germany (so-called "Anschluss"), but imperialist France together with the "Little Entente" and surely also Poland are jealously watching against such a step; the only means to achieve this presents itself in going for the bait of England in whose interest it might lie, particularly in view of the planned anti-Soviet campaign. But this would mean getting embroiled in a war, or exactly getting into a mess which they allegedly wanted to avoid by refusing to join the revolutionary wave of 1919, at a time when such action would surely strongly enhance the chances of an European revolution.

THEY went out for "democracy" and for getting the country "socialized" by "evolutionary methods." To obtain it they formed a coalition government with the Fascist Christian-Socialist Party in which they stayed from the beginning of 1919 till the end of 1920. They left the coalition, practically pushed out by the growing Fascist reaction on the one hand (remember the Ford money!) and the discontent of the masses on the other. Since then the question of coalition has been disturbing the party; then although the discontented masses were able by outvoting the right wingers at the party conventions to prevent an open coalition, they have not been able to prevent the social-democratic parliamentarians from a constant veiled coalition in Parliament and other representative bodies. The masses had to see the great "socialization" program given up step by step and their own revolutionary achievements, foremost among them the workers' councils, pushed out of existence and finally dissolved, and the whole party going clearly to the right.

TRUE, the party was pushing forth its program of social legislation: child labor laws, 8-hour law, protection of home workers, unemployment funds and was thus able to keep its foothold in the masses. But the masses saw the effect of this another way, knowing unemployment (about 180,000 unemployed), by the mounting cost of living and by the anomalous condition of the whole economic life of the country, absolutely deprived of any possibility of existence and without a ray of hope to change it under the present conditions. True, the party has entrenched itself particularly in the municipality of Vienna and was developing there a grand program of housing as well as a program of workers' entertainments, sport, education etc., thus again offering the masses some reformist crumbs. But the masses had to see their tenement law trampled upon by the emboldened landlords and their treasured defence guard deprived, thanks to the weakness of their leaders, of any real chance of arming itself.

IN the meantime the fascist reaction was on the march. Events were developing in the neighboring Fascist Hungary that were not only encouraging the hand of Fascism in Austria but were foreshadowing a possible plunging of the country into a violent counter-revolutionary turmoil with the figure of a Hapsburg returning to his "happy Austria." The provocations of armed Fascist Government with its reactionary police troops, recruited from the most backward peasants, communists and against the defenseless workers reached a culmination point. The masses were demanding retaliation for their murdered brothers. Capitalist justice was freeing the murderers and mocking the workers. The masses lost patience. They were ready for action. The small Communist Party could not organize the movement, but it was able to penetrate it, give it the necessary slogans and put itself unflinchingly in its lead. The masses moved.

THIS time the "model" Social Democracy could no more play with their usual phraseology, they had to face the rising masses, they had to lead. And they acted so that their real role as the marauders of the revolutionary labor movement will no more be concealed to the Austrian working masses. They did everything not only to "bring order" into the mass movement, to retard its impetus, but in their political cretinism they decided to use this uprising of the masses to force their parliamentary schemes of a coalition government with the very butchers of the masses. While they were doing at a time when they themselves by their anti-revolutionary tactics were depriving the masses of every vestige of forceful pressure, in consequence they were slapped in the face by the emboldened fascist Seipel government.

THE Austrian Social-Democracy has now shown its counter-revolutionary face to the masses. It has clearly shown to the masses that it cannot exist as the party of revolutionary hope; it has no future. To be sure, thanks to the fear of "international complications," of a foreign invasion, and furthermore thanks to the particular character of the Austrian political life (practically a two-party system), the Austrian Social-Democracy will still be able to function as a "People's Party" and will try to relist a decline. The reported "heated debate" in the councils of the party about the immediate tactics proves that ordinarily patched-up differences between the "right" and the "left" elements in this centrist party will probably now become more apparent and will have to be actually fought out in the open.

BUT more important than this is the fact that the Communist Party of Austria has in this movement received its new baptism. Only a short time ago a "left" social-democratic leader, Dr. Adler, in a speech in Parliament, in which he was criticising the Communists, declared that the Communist Party of Austria was a party of "Bolshevik Jews" and "Russian agents." Now the Communists have shown that they are a party of Austrian workers, that they are the only party that is leading the masses in struggle against the bourgeoisie and its Fascist hirelings. The Communist Party of Austria has now a chance to grow into a mass party.

DRAMA

Tolstoi's "Power of Darkness" Opens at 55th St. Cinema

The Russian Cinema seems to be in the air and on the screen. With "Crime and Punishment" heavily attended, "Resurrection" in its Hollywood version showing throughout the country, "Ana Karenina" announced as Greta Garbo's next vehicle, the Slavic situation eventfully climaxed by the 55th Street Cinema's presentation of the American premiere of Tolstoi's famous tragic interpretation of the Russian peasant's soul, "Power of Darkness" at the little film-house on 55th street.

"Power of Darkness" is the sister production of "Crime and Punishment" directed as it is by the same regisseur, Robert Wiene, who also gave us "Caligari." These two screen masterworks were made by a section of the Moscow Art Players who were in Berlin several years ago.

Wiene has departed from his usual employment of distorted scenic backgrounds to achieve his effects in "Power of Darkness." Instead he has inspired in his cast an intensified and vivid characterization of all roles, even the smallest, which more than compensates for the lack of crooked streets and toppling buildings. Some European critics, particularly those of the stage, have voiced the opinion that they have never witnessed such deeply tragic emotional work as is projected by the Moscow Art Group. The famous writer's son, Leo L. Tolstoi, who is now delivering a series of lectures in this city on his father's works is expected to attend the premiere.

The surrounding program will include "The Life of Chopin," "Manhatta," a study in celluloid of Bagdad-on-the-Hudson and "Epitaphs," a series of jocular tombstone gags.

Broadway Briefs

The Theatre Guild's production of "The Silver Cord" will close at the Golden theatre tonight.

A. H. Woods has acquired for early production, an American comedy, titled "Beautiful But Dumb," by Fred Rath and Joseph J. Gerren. The latter is the author-composer of "Collect," which opens here in October.

Another closing listed for this evening is "Queen High" at the Ambassador. The theatre will be dark until September when the new Schwab and Mandel show "Good News" opens.

The Palace program of the week include: Marion Harris, Walter McNally; Nitza Vernille, with Charles Collins, Joseph Napolitano, and Tosha Samarov's Gypsy Quintette; William Gaxton, and Co. in "Partners," by Leon Errol; Dewey Barto and George Mann; Al Shaw and Sam Lee; Fortunello and Cirillino; Van Horn and Inez and Julius Schichti's "Modern Marionettes."

Morris & Shaw; Hap Hazard; Jerome & Ryan are the feature acts at the Broadway theatre this week. The playhouse is also showing the Dempsey-Sharkey fight pictures.

Strike Assessment.

The Joint Board members will also discuss on Thursday the proposal to reduce the 10 per cent strike assessment which was voted early in the strike. Two weeks ago at a membership meeting this suggestion was presented by the officers, but it was rejected by the workers who felt they wanted to continue this voluntary financial support of the strike work, and of those who are standing firm in the strike ranks.

Thursday's meetings will be held in three halls, Local 1 meeting in Royal Hall, 85 East 4th St.; Local 5 in Stuyvesant Casino, 142 Second Ave.; Local 10 in Stuyvesant Casino; and Local 15 in Astoria Hall, 52 East 4th St.

Carried in Bundles.

Petitions to Mayor Walker for an investigation of the fur strike, and picket line arrests, are now being carried down to the City Hall in bundles. It was feared that the postman would break under the strain if the letters were all posted, so as they are signed by workers they are left at Local 22 or the Furriers' Joint Board, and special messengers transport them by the hundreds to the mayor's office.

All workers who want copies of these letters to pass on to their friends can get them at the union offices, prepared with addressed envelopes. Don't give Mayor Walker or Governor Smith any rest on this proposition. Keep them bombarded with letters, so that they may understand what a huge body of citizens is vitally interested in the treatment of workers, and in the preservation of workers' rights on the picket line and in the courts.

Coney Island Concert.

In spite of the threatening weather 20,000 workers were present at the Coney Island Stadium Concert for the relief and defense, Saturday evening. While rain was imminent during the entire afternoon it cleared up enough late in the day to allow the concert to take place.

Ben Gold and Louis Hyman, militant leaders of the left wing in the needle trades were greeted with thunderous applause when they mounted the platform to make brief addresses to the assembled workers.

Gold said that the right wing forces are now spreading new lies. "When they say," asserted Gold, "that I am going to Russia they are not telling the truth. I am not going to run away from the struggle, but will stay here and participate in it.

Fight Goes On.

"The fight begins anew every Monday morning. We declare today that we will continue until we achieve victory. All workers should be on the picket line, Monday 7 a. m."

Juliet Stuart Poynts, presided and took up a collection for the defense and relief fund.

The concert program included the New York Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Maximillian Pilzer and divertisements by Alexis Kosloff of the Metropolitan Opera Company and a ballet. The entire program was broadcast by station WGBU.

KNOXVILLE, Tenn., July 24.—A tax strike has been called here as a result of a mass meeting held under the auspices of the Taxpayers' League that adopted a resolution to attack the city's assessment by court action and agreeing to pay no taxes until the suit is decided.

SOVIET UNION ON WATCH

Chinese Labor and American Delegates Attack Imperialism

By DICK ETTLINGER.

SAN FRANCISCO, July 24.—On July 14th the first Hands Off China Conference was held in San Francisco and was attended by delegates representing twenty-five various working class organizations. Of these fifteen were bona fide union delegates from the Building Trades Council, District Council of Painters, Structural Iron Workers, Millmen's Union, Cooks' and Waiters' Union, Amalgamated Clothing Workers, etc. In addition to these trade union organizations, delegates of the Workmen's Circle, Workers' Clubs, socialist party and Workers (Communist) Party were also present.

Chinese Called It.

This conference was called together by a provisional committee consisting of three important Chinese organizations, the Kuomintang, the National Studants Alliance, and the Sun Yat Sen Societias.

The keynote speech was made by T. Chi of the Kuomintang who ably pointed out the development of the Chinese Nationalist movement as part of the working class movement throut the world, and the direct menace to it by the mabilization of the imperialist forces in China. That the sending of warships, marines and troops by the United States was a threat to the Chinese revolutionary movement and one that would inevitably lead to war between China and the various imperialist powers and between the imperialists themselves.

Demand Withdrawal of Troops.

A resolution was adopted demanding the withdrawal of troops from China and that all interference of the imperialists in their efforts to crush the Chinese revolutionary movement cease.

A copy of this resolution to be forwarded to California's representatives in congress, to Senator Borah and to the labor and general press. To carry out the work of the conference an executive committee of five was elected and plans outlined for the holding of a series of mass meetings to bring receiving letters of condemnation because he and other officials of the miners' union did not attend Sacco and Vanzetti meetings held in Pittston. "I want to tell you now that I am proud to say that I didn't attend that meeting and neither will I attend any mass meeting in which Pat Toohey and others of his rotten gang participate," the district leader said in a voice that could be heard in all sections of the hall.

Pat Toohey is a progressive miner who supported the "Save the Union" ticket in the international elections last year, and thereby gained the fierce hatred of the members of the reactionary clique which rules District 1.

The Pittston meeting which Capellini assailed was called when it became evident that district president would do little or nothing to assist Sacco and Vanzetti. Local Union No. 1616, with 1600 members, elected a committee to see Cappellini, and tell him that if he wouldn't call a conference to aid Sacco and Vanzetti, the local would. The district president refused, so the local called the conference. The local gathered other locals around it, aggregating 4,500 members and issued the call June 16. Forty locals are now affiliated in the work, and Toohey was made secretary of the joint committee established. Cappellini was invited to a conference held by the joint committee, and refused to come.

this issue clearly before the American people.

The calling of this conference is historic, first because San Francisco is the direct gateway to the Orient, and because here where most of the Chinese in the United States live we see for the first time taking place a joint conference of Chinese and American workers called for the purpose of helping the Chinese masses and stopping the war program of American imperialism.

Right Wing of ILGW Starts War Against Chicago Militants

CHICAGO, July 24 (FP).—Entering the Chicago Federation of Labor meeting July 17, national officials of the International Ladies' Garment Workers were asked for help in ousting "reds" from the Chicago organization. The request was referred to the executive board but not before it had evoked sympathetic response from federation officers. A similar crusade 3 years ago had the ultimate effect of strengthening the victims who came back in practically full control of the Chicago union, which they still retain.

The federation voted indorsement of the stand of the musicians' demand of $100 a week for the members of the Chicago symphony orchestra. Negotiations are still under way.

Hope to Build Largest Airport in the World

The world's largest airport might be developed in Brooklyn if the plans of Charles S. Doran, chairman of the Airport Committee of the Brooklyn Chamber of Commerce materialize.

"The project, if carried through," he said, "would give Brooklyn the world's largest airport. It would be built about 1,500 feet from Brooklyn's shore line, would be two miles long and one mile wide—about three times the size of Roosevelt Field.

granite and attend the strike meeting on Tuesday.

Wants Police "Protection."

Hedley in a letter to Walker declining to take part in any conferences said, "I feel I am in a position to assure you that, with adequate police protection, which I am certain will be afforded, no strike which the representatives of this Amalgamated Association can bring about, will amount to any serious inconvenience to the people of this city, as far as the Interborough system is concerned."

In reply to this threat P. J. Shea, vice president of the Amalgamated yesterday issued a statement in which he said, "We are not going to have anyone beaten up in this strike. We say this advisedly. Mayor Walker, in our conference of Saturday, volunteered to arrange a meeting with Police Commissioner Warren for us."

Speaking of the Amalgamated's ability to carry through a successful strike J. H. Coleman, organizer for the Amalgamated said; "We are well organized, well financed and, we think, well understood by the public."

Coleman further admitted yesterday that the traction companies would not welcome a strike because it would be instrumental in effecting an increased carfare. He said, "Labor trouble is an instrument in the hands of these manipulators. That is why Messers. Hedley and Quackenbush cling to this Brotherhood deception after all New York knows it is a company union—controlled by the company and used only to exploit its ostensible members."

Strike Likely Tuesday.

At the union headquarters officials insisted that a strike will certainly be called on Tuesday night unless something unforeseen develops at the conference at the City Hall. They charged that company detectives have been shadowing them for months past.

Mayor Walker has announced that he will issue orders today to the proper city departments to make preparations for a traction strike in order that traffic would not be interfered with. The Department of Plant and Structures will be asked to make arrangements for bus and ferry service for the emergency.

The Interborough has issued a call to all of its employes who are away on their vacation to immediately return to duty. George Keegan, assistant to Hedley, admitted that I. R. T. departments were issuing such a call.

In explaining his sudden interest in the threatened traction strike altho it has been brewing for some time past Mayor Walker said, "These gentlemen representing the American Federation of Labor and the Amalgamated Association have requested me to invite to a conference on neutral ground at the City Hall, the executives of the Interborough and the B.-M. T.

"They say they take this action because they believe that a tie-up and strike may be called on those two lines.

"They tell me that the strike is the last thing they want to happen and in requesting me to call a conference they do so because I am the chief executive of the city, because of the city's investment in the subway system and because of the great inconvenience to the travelling public if a strike should occur.

"Not a Busybody."

"Another reason given by these labor men for the conference is their sincere belief that ways and means may be found to avoid a strike and at the same time bring benefits to the workmen, the companies and the city. In keeping with this request an invitation will go out on Monday morning to the Interborough and the B.-M. T. for a meeting at City Hall as early as possible, in view of the possibility and probability of a strike and because of my hope of avoiding it. Concerning the history of this request, I want it understood that I am not interfering here as a busybody. The request came to me from the Amalgamated and I am under obligation to do all in my power to prevent a strike.

"The men came in here frankly and fairly and said they believe in arbitration and asked me as chief executive of the city to bring together the executives of the companies and the representatives of the men."

A canvass at the various terminals and power-houses reveals that the men are ready to respond to a strike call. When some of the men were asked why the Friday night meeting was thinly attended they said that they did not want to lay themselves open to discharge, but at the same time they said that the strike call would be answered by fully ninety per cent of the key men.

List of the Proletariat Growing Menace to Unstable Capitalist Rule in France

By J. LOUIS ENGDAHL

NOTE.—Here is another article by Comrade Engdahl on what he saw during his three days' stay in Paris, returning to New York City from Moscow. Engdahl writes about the tomb of Jean Jaures at the "Pantheon," which he visited. In the last issue he wrote about the debate in the Chamber of Deputies that resulted in the withdrawal of parliamentary immunity from Marcel Cachin, editor of l'Humanite. Tomorrow Engdahl will tell about "The Red Wall," the memorial to the 36,000 workers slain during the last week of the Paris Commune, May 21-28, 1871.

THE center of attention in the big ante-room to the French Chamber of Deputies was a Worker. Though big thing about him was that, in this throng waiting at the doorstep of the parliament of France, he was the most self-assertive.

He was a Worker and he did not choose for a moment to hide it. He was not humble.

His was the spirit of a May Day demonstration or the celebration of a Soviet Anniversary. His cap was pushed back on his head; his hair in joyous disorder. He was still wearing his overcoat. The shirt was wide open, displaying a grizzled chest that testified to well-developed lung power.

The priest sitting in the corner, with hands folded, was meek. The widow, still in mourning, sat quietly in her place. Other elements, distinctly middle class, tried to appear unconcerned. But there were plainly other worker elements in this interesting gathering.

All were attracted, however, by this Worker who scoffed at the necessity of filling out in detail a lengthy questionnaire, just because he wanted to see the deputy that represented his district in the chamber. It was clear that he never did much writing. Then the pens furnished in such public places are always bad. But the task was finally accomplished. His slip, like many others, were passed on to one of the many attendants, and a messenger took it on to the Chamber.

It was not long before it came back. The deputy was "Not In." I did not understand French. So I did not learn his mission. But it must have been very miportant to this Worker, who showed his dismay. But only for a moment. He was quickly surrounded by nearly everyone in the room as he opened an attack on the deputy he wanted to see. In elegant satire, it must have been, he told of how fat and puffy this deputy was. I could make this out from his telling gestures. He was a finished actor, in this respect, born to the class struggle. He was the breath of the rising populace that has so often swept Paris repeatedly in its many revolutions; in 1789, 1830, 1848 and 1871.

I have never seen workers in the lobbies of the American congress. There are no reception rooms at the house of representatives or the senate in Washington. At the lower house the doortender takes in your card. You wait in the corridor.

There is a little more splendor at the senate. More door tenders; more massengers; more gilt, and a small waiting room if you want to use it. If the senator is good natured, and if the weather is fair, he may take you on the balcony, with its view down Pennsylvania Avenue, as the best place to carry on the interview.

But the visitors that come to Washington and tap at the doors of the house of representatives and the senate are not workers. Washington is not a city with a great industrial working class. Perhaps its most conscious elements are to be found among the machinists, for instance, down in the government navy yard.

It is declared that Washington was established as a "made to order" capital city for the United States to avoid the restless proletarian elements of the great cities, like New York and Chicago.

Only the other day the militant needle workers had a demonstration before the city hall in New York City. Some years ago, in Chicago, during a big traction fight, ropes with nooses in them were dangled from the balconies of the Chicago city council chambers, as a warning to aldermen whose palms itched with the desire for graft. American senators and congressmen, safely isolated in Washington, do not wish to be disturbed in their dignified deliberations by any such disturbing incidents. They are not.

If the banking cliques in Wall Street wish to speak to their office boys in Washington, they can easily summon them to New York. Thus Washington and Capitol Hill become the destination merely of honeymooners and other sightseers.

It is said of the French architects who helped develope the plan for the city, that they purposely provided for the wide thorofares, like Pennsylvania Avenue, so that an aroused people could be easily met and overcome by a "loyal" soldiery. These architects remembered that the narrow streets of Paris had lent themselves, on many occasions, too easily to barricades hastily thrown up by workers.

In Europe the national parliaments sit in the chief cities of the nations: London, in England; Berlin, in Germany; Vienna, in Austria; Warsaw, in Poland; Rome, in Italy; Budapest, in Hungary, and Paris, in France.

So the throng that crowds the ante-room of the Chamber of Deputies is different from the class of visitors that drifts to Washington. Here are workers.

I wondered if this had anything to do with the fact that in this ante-room of the French chamber was a huge portrait of Jean Jaures, the foe of French militarism who was martyred on the eve of the world war. French Communists today claim Jaures as their own. Yet here is his picture, and as I passed on to an innar reception room, there I found a huge painting, in magnificent detail, showing Jaures making one of his impassioned speeches before the French chamber, with every member in his seat and the galleries thronged.

There is a Boulevard Jean Jaures, while the tomb of this champion of the French proletariat is to be found in the crypt of the Pantheon, fittingly inscribed with the declaration, "A Leader of the International Working Class."

Strange inconsistency here, you say. The Pantheon stands on the highest ground on the left bank of the Seine, being the site of the Tomb of St. Genevieve (420-512), the Patron Saint of Paris. The chapel originally erected over her tomb was succeeded by a church, which Louis XV vowed to rebuild when lying on a sick bed at Metz, in 1744. The present edifice was accordingly built in 1764-90 and was likewise dedicated to St. Genevieve. In 1791, however, it was converted by the Constituent Assembly into a "Pantheon," or Temple of Fame, "For the Burial of Great Men." Mirabeau was the first to be

(Speech by N. I. Bucharin.)

The main difference between the events now impending and the events of the year 1914 consists of the fact that this time it is not a question of conflicts among the imperialist powers themselves—although such conflicts are in themselves not unlikely—but above all of an attack made by the imperialist states against the Soviet Union on the one hand, and against the Chinese revolution on the other. The existence of a Union of proletarian republics, the existence—at the same time and under the great influence of this union—of the great Chinese national struggle for emancipation, which has already been able to adopt state forms to a certain extent, and which possesses its organized state center,—the existence of these two mighty historical facts has naturally caused certain questions to be raised by the Comintern, and has influenced its answers.

At the beginning of my report I stated that the existence of the Soviet Republics and of the Chinese revolution changes not only the objective situation, but the whole course of events, and with this the method dealing with the tasks of the proletariat. It need scarcely be said that in the case of a war between imperialist states, it is highly probable that the majority of the working people would take sides with their own government, would once more attempt to solve the question of which side had attacked first, and so forth. But the fact of the Chinese revolution, and of the existence of a Union of Socialist Republics, especially in view of the peace policy which has been pursued, and will continue to be pursued, by this Union of Socialist Republics, are likely to alter the probability of this prognosis a little. For it is easily comprehensible that the greater part of the workers would lend themselves with very heavy hearts to an attack on the Union of Socialist Republics—if they can be induced to take part in such an attack at all.

The bourgeois governments will find it increasingly difficult to throw their hirelings and their armed forces against the proletarian republics and their national revolutionary allies in China.

What are the decisions come to by the ECCI. in the question of fighting methods? The ECCI. has decided that the slogan of the general strike, the slogan of insurrection, and the slogan of the transformation of the imperialist war into civil war, are all slogans for the orientation of our Party, and that our main task lies in the preparation for the realization of these slogans. It is impossible to prophesy when these slogans will emerge from the agitative and propagandist stage into the stage leading immediately to an actual insurrection or civil strife, when we pass from the propaganda of the general strike or the insurrection to their actualization. It is perhaps possible to prophesy with a certain amount of certainty that this actualization will not be possible in the overwhelming majority of states immediately after the beginning of the war. But even today we must face the fact that it may be possible in isolated cases, even if these are exceptional; there can be no doubt that this possibility exists.

The exact moment at which the agitative and propagandist slogans merge into slogans of immediate action will be determined by the situation itself, by the arising of a revolutionary situation, by the strength of the Communist Party, by the degree of fermentation among the masses, by the trends of feeling among the leading strata,—in a word, by a number of objective and subjective premises. These slogans will merge into slogans of immediate action as soon as the proletariat is offered a glance of their realization.

1. Fighting Methods. General Strike and Insurrection.

I now pass on to the question of fighting methods. When this question is raised, two extremely important documents are generally referred to. Firstly, the resolution passed by the Basle Congress of the II. International, with the well-known amendment to that resolution, proposed by Comrades Lenin and Rosa Luxemburg at Stuttgart and incorporated in the Basle Resolution, and stating that in the case of war it will be necessary: "to make ful use of the economic and political crisis caused by the war for the purpose of arousing the people, and accelerating the overthrow of the rule of capital" (Lenin, Complete Works, vol. 13). Secondly, reference is made to one of the last documents dealing precisely with the question of the fight against war—the often quoted instructions issued by Comrade Lenin to our delegation to the congress of trade union, co-operative, pacifist, and other organizations, held at the Hague.

In these instructions Lenin first advances the thesis that we must combat with our utmost energies the foolish and senseless idea that it is possible to "reply" to war with a general strike or a revolution; that in reality the majority of the workers will take sides with their bourgeois government during the first days of a war; that it is of the utmost importance to expose the foolishness of the standpoint of those who imagine themselves in possession of a universal remedy against the "evil" of war; that we must unmask the opportunists, the semi-pacifists, the pacifists, etc., who fancy that they "know how to fight against war; that we must contend determinedly against the empty phrase of a "reply" to war by means of a general strike or a revolution. These theses are the main import of the instructions drawn up by Comrade Lenin.

Whilst our Commission was working various interpretations were brought forward with a reference to the connection between these instructions of Lenin's and the Basle Resolution (it must not be forgotten that the formula of the Basle Manifesto was taken from a document which had already been accepted at the Stuttgart Congress. The original wording of the amendment referred directly to revolutionary action, that is to strike and insurrection). The Basle Resolution makes mention of the Paris Commune and of the revolution of 1905, in which the general strike and insurrection formed the "highest forms" of the struggle. The slogan of the general strike and of the armed insurrection was here indirectly presented as a slogan determining our action during preparation for war, during the bourgeoisie, and further during the war itself. But on the other hand the Hague Instructions state that the phrases on "replying" to war by revolution are nonsensical; that we bavo to obey the dictates of common sense, and face the fact that at the beginning of a war the majority of the working people take sides with their bourgeois fatherland.

Various shades of opinion have arisen during the course of our work in the Commission, and we have come to various decisions upon them. One of these may be formulated as follows: The slogans of the general strike and of armed insurrection must stand, without reservation, as rules of action for the Communist Party, both during the period of preparation for war on the part of imperialist states, and during the war itself. On the other standpoint: The point of main importance is precisely the exposure of the absurdity of the standpoint that a war can be "replied" to by a general strike, revolution, or insurrection.

What is the right answer to this question? First of all, it is absurd to confront one document with another in this case; it is absurd to confront a document with the demands of the mass struggles of the communards and the revolutionists of 1905, with the "instructions" given by Lenin to the Hague Delegation, dealing with the necessity of forming a careful and attentive judgment of the position, free from all illusions, during the first days or a war.

TO ELLA REEVE BLOOR ON HER BIRTHDAY

By HENRY GEORGE WEISS.

The years are trampling horses
On the road of life.
We listen and hear the courses
Ring to hooved strife.

Madly the steeds go by us,
Foam-flecked and red.
We take a steed and we ride it
Until we're dead.

And it's, Ho for the horse and his rider
Who gallantly rides!
For the memory of horse and of rider
Forever abides.

And the ones who must mount on the morrow
Will whisper a prayer
That they make a great ride, and as bravely
Spur thru to the clear.

The Forward Blacklists a Poet

TO what lengths will The Jawish Daily Forward and some of its right wing contemporaries go in their fanatical opposition to anything and everything they think is even remotely related to Communism? The latest brilliant attempt in that direction just brought to light is the blacklisting by The Forward of a poet who has appeared in these columns, as well as in a score or more conservative and capitalist newspapers and magazines. The utter ridiculousness of the nititamtum handed the poet by The Forward, refusing even to examine any more of his work, rests on the fact that the poet is not a member of the Communist Party and his work has been unmarked by political partisanship. His sole offense seems to have been in writing for The DAILY WORKER.

Henry Reich, Jr.,.the poet in question, several months ago had contributed some verse to The Forward and had received the lavish sum of $2.50 in payment for a poem appearing "In the Best of Humor" column in the Sunday English Section of The Forward. Subsequently he submitted another batch of manuscripts which were rejected. Meanwhile, and even previously, he had been appearing with considerable regularity in the columns of The DAILY WORKER. Shortly after the return of his second lot of verse there came a single poem that had been kept in hand by The Forward for some time. It was accompanied by the following note:

"I don't think we would care to see any more of your stuff. You had better save your efforts and your postage for publications that appreciate them the Communist sheets, for example.

THE FORWARD."

The poem which this note accompanied was an altogether innocuous one, as were all of those submitted. It follows:

TO A WRITER OF MARGINALIA

Your notes along the pages of my book
Are like black pearls upon a golden string.
Or pebbles at the margin of a brook,
Worn round and smooth—and suited to a sling!

Just what dark and devious undercurrent of political significance exists in this quatrain, it is difficult to say. The poet, at any rate, is totally unconscious of any such significance.

Upon receipt of tho above rebuff from The Forward, the poet addressed the following letter to the paper:

"Mr. H. Rogoff, Managing Editor,
The Jewish Daily Forward,
New York City.
My Dear Mr. Rogoff:

I am in receipt of the following letter from The Jewish Daily Forward:

" 'I don't think we would care to see any more of your stuff. You had better save your efforts and your postage for publications that appreciate them the Communist sheets, for example.

THE FORWARD.' "

"I would say that my work has appeared recently and with some regularity in twenty-five papers, including such publication as The Jewish Tribune, The New Leader, The New York Herald Tribune, The Evening World, Free Verse, The Greenwich Village Quill, The Saturday Voice, The Prism, in such conservative magazines as The Jowish Forum, and in forthcoming issues of Voices, Contemporary Verse and Opportunity. Also The Jewish Daily Foward printed a poem of mine in the Sunday English Section on March 27, 1927.

"I have always sung of the class struggle and much of my poetry hoth in the conservative publications and the Communist paper has been concerned with tha theme of labor. I had been harboring the strange delusion that The Jewish Daily Forward was a champion of the working class and stood for working class principles.

"Never before has my poetry been discriminated against and I have been writing for publication for fifteen years. It amazed me that a newspaper of the supposedly high standing of The Jewish Daily Forward would engage in such tactics.

"Trusting that you may give me some explanation of your change in policy,

"I remain,

"Respectfully yours,

HENRY REICH, JR."

That The Forward was unable to face this issue was demonstrated by the fact that no reply has been received, a full two weeks having elapsed since tho above letter was sent.

The display of peevishness exhibited by the Forward editor in returning tho poem indicates a state of exasperation which is caused by tha growing disgust of an ever increasing circle of literary men over the Forward's criminal alliance with the employers, the courts, the police states, and during the war itself, its attitude on every other standpoint: The point of main importance is precisely the exposure of the absurdity of the standpoint that a war can be "replied" to by a general strike, revolution, or insurrection.

In its crusade against everything of a progressive character and against everybody who supports progressive views in general the Forward, like the lickspittles of capitalism in the American Federation of Labor (Woll, Frayne, McGrady, Green and Co.,) goes farther than even some of the capitalist papers, many of which have accepted poems from Henry Reich, Jr., because of their pure merit.

SACCO AND VANZETTI MUST NOT DIE!!!

CO-OPERATIVES

HOW THE "COOPERATIVE NEWS" FIGHTS AGAINST INTERVENTION IN CHINA

It is generally known that the last congresses of the Co-operative Society, (Belfast, May 1926) and of the Co-operative Women's Guild (Newcastle, June 1926) adopted peace resolutions declaring that in the event of belligerent actions a "policy of determined resistance" is to be adopted by co-operators. The manner in which co-operative bureaucrats carry out this "policy of determined resistance is clearly shown in the numbers of "Co-operatives News" published since the beginning of the year.

At the time when British warships and thanks were already on the way to China the periodical published on January 1st, extravagant praises, of the well-known hypocritical China manifesto of the Baldwin Government under the lying heading "Peace in China." Congratulations are offered to the government for this declaration, which reads as follows:

"The manifesto should help to establish the belief that Britain has no malicious intent with regard to China."

The same number announces that the Central Committee of the Co-operative Society has sent a circular to the affiliated consumers' co-operative with the invitation

"that societies should become associated with the League of Nations Union, and in that way help the League of Nations to carry on its good work."

At the same time the British Co-operative Women's Guild invites its local organizations to support the disarmament plans of the League of Nations. And this as fulfillment of the peace resolutions of last summer, in the face of the overt bellicose actions of the British government!

On January 22nd, the "Co-operative News" is no longer able to keep up the swindle about "peace in China". The article on China appears under the heading "The War-Clouds in China". The article is from the pen of a "special contributor" who certifies once more the examplary pacifism of the British government:

"Only extreme care on the part of the Canton government and of the British government will prevent a clash of arms in China, which might, indeed, have appalling results, notwithstanding the Pacific attitude of the British government to which reference was made recently."

The article tells its readers that the national-revolutionary government of Canton cannot pay its troops and that therefore there is:

"a spirit of revolt which may reverse the previous victories of the Nationalist movement."

Coop Patriotism.

While in this manner responsibility for any armed collision is placed beforehand at the door of the Nationalist government, the imperialist war-mongers are represented by the special contributor" as innocent lambs:

"The sending of warships to protect British interests is an inevitable measure so long as British subjects are there under conditions and for purposes sanctioned by agreements with previous Chinese governments".

And once more there is a "friendly" warning to the Canton government which is responsible for protection to British subjects and their property. On February 26, the "Co-operative News" in keeping with the official policy of the British government already about the method of covert attack on the Soviet Union which is, so to speak, represented as an accomplice:

"There is not the slightest doubt about the end of "Red" Russian advisers. Whether the Soviet government is a party to that or not is not certain, but on the other hand, the northern forces have the aid of "white" Russians. It would be well for China if these foreigners were thrown out of the fight on either side".

These crafty insinuntions and attacks on the Chinese people, which is fighting for its freedom, and against the Russian Workers' and Peasants' Republic — together with praises for the "pacifism" of the British government — are the accompaniment of the "Co-operative News", to the work of the guns of the British armored cruisers. One can judge of the feelings of the mass of rank and file co-operators in regard to this matter by the fact that many local co-operative organizations as already mentioned in No. 3 of the "Coop Informs" are supporting the anti-war campaign of the left wing. A number of local co-operative organizations and particularly Co-operative Women's Guild are affiliated to the "Hands off China" committees.

FARMERS

SENATOR NYE IN PESSIMISTIC SPEECH FAILS TO OFFER FARMER AUDIENCE MUCH REMEDY FOR ILLS

(By ANDREW OMHOLT.)

WILLISTON, N. D., July 24. — The Junior senator Gerald P. Nye, republican from North Dakota, spoke here last night to a small crowd in the court house. Part of his subject was the North Dakota-Missouri river diversion project, leading the Missouri river into Devils Lake for the purpose of flood control in the Mississippi Valley.

The Missouri river is the biggest tributary to the Mississippi, and if the waters of the Missouri can be led into and stored in Devils Lake it would not only help to control the flood but would also solve the water problem which is serious in parts of North Dakota, the senator said.

It would also create a playground, as the lake is now drying out, by raising the waterlevel and make a freshwater lake out of it, he said, the people of North Dakota spend 2-3 millions of dollars every summer when they go out to play in lake water, as there is no playground here; of course he did not say what part of the people had the time and money for pleasure trips. The farmers of North Dakota have neither the money or time, they have to stay home and milk the cows and slop the hogs in order to be able to pay interest and taxes and high prices for everything they buy, so the bankers and businessmen who are prospering and making money by robbing the farmer, can buy new cars and go out and have a good time.

The senator said, the North Dakota-Missouri river diversion project was not the most important problem before the people; that was the farm problem. He quoted a few statistics as proof, 44,000 farm owners in N. Dak. 16 years ago, and today 29,000 farmers in the state. Their property is valued at $200,000,000, but there are $82,000,000 mortgages against it.

If the farmers are satisfied with the kind of conditions there is something the matter with them, the senator said. He thought Coolidge would sign the McNary-Haugen Bill when it came up in congress next fall, and that would strengthen his chances, so he thought Coolidge would have a chance to carry the state in 1928.

The senator did not put forth any remedy for these terrible conditions among the farmers, only the McNary-Haugen Bill which he himself said is of little or no value.

It is not Coolidge, or Senator Nye interred in the Pantheon (April 4, 1791) and on July 12, of the same year, the remains of Voltaire were brought here. The building was again given over to religious purposes in 1806, but once more became a "Pantheon" after the July, 1830, revolution, when the words, "Aux grands hommes la patrie reconnaissante" were inscribed on the pediment. It was reopened as a church in 1851, but finally secularized for the obsequies of Victor Hugo, (1885). At the entrance to the crypt stands a huge urn, said to contain the heart of Leon Gambetta. There are also the tombs of Jean Jacques Rousseau and Emile Zola; of LaGrange, the mathematician, and Marcelin Berthelat, the Chemist, and his wife, who died on the same day; of Rouget del Lisle, the author of "The Marseillise," and Ernest Renan, with many others, including hosts of military dead, some from the last war.

IT is said that the changes being made by Henry Ford in his plant preparatory to building the new Ford model, the design of which is still a secret, are costing the auto magnate one million dollars a day. This is a front page story and it appear side by side with an announcement o another Ford settlement of one o those bothersome suits brought against Henry by members of the Jewish race who were libelled in Ford's paper. The luxury of carrying on an anti-Semitic war can't be a pretty penny, and his change o policy does not mean a change o heart, but a wise precaution on the eve of introducing a new Ford model. THE failure of the British government to put across its naval plan at the Geneva conference has brought the old fox Balfour again to the fore in British politics. In the absence of Stanley Baldwin, Balfour heads the cabinet. He is trying to patch up a modus vivendi in the three cornered fight against Churchill, Birkenhead, Lloyd-George and others. The only difference between Balfour and Churchill is a difference of opinion about the best way to serve the empire.

THE position of the Nanking government in China is said to be precarious. The northern feudalistarists have won important victories over the southern forces. In breaking with the left wing element in the Kuomintang, Chiang Kai-shek deliberately weakened the nationalist forces and played into the hands of the imperialists. Under the cloak of a war on Communism, he stabbed the revolution in the back and dealt a serious blow to the struggle of the workers and peasants. Here in America we witness a similar phenomenon in the trade union movement, where the reactionary labor leaders wage war on the Communists, under the guise of protecting unionism.

GOVERNOR Moore of New Jersey, in a speech delivered at the unveiling of a monument to Samuel Allen, leader of the New Jersey minute men in the Revolutionary War, declared that the United States should take the lead in outlawing war since our country leads in everything. A good way to start this worthy crusade would be for the United States to withdraw its troops from Nicaragua and China. The governor did not have a word to say in condemnation of the action of the United States marines and air-men who slaughtered 300 Nicaraguans last week because they defended their country against the Wall Street brigands. This anti-war talk is the sheerest hypocrisy.

Those Irish-American long distance fighters for Irish freedom have not a word to say against the oppression of the colonial peoples who are under the yoke of our own imperialists. HUNDREDS OF TRACTION MEN QUIT JOBS

Put the Whole Strength of the Labor Movement Into Organization of The Traction Workers

THE traction barons have thrown an open challenge to the traction workers, the labor movement and the millions who ride to and from their daily toil on the subways, the elevated and the surface lines.

Scouring the underworld of America's industrial centers for scabs, the Interborough Rapid Transit Company, the spearhead of the traction baron's offensive, has imported 5000 thugs and gunmen to man their trains.

The ghastly history of wrecks, the loss of life and the maiming of passengers, inevitably resulting from the recruiting of reckless and criminal elements to replace workers trained for their responsible tasks, need not be repeated here.

It is enough to say that the traction barons care nothing for lives—they think only of dividends and unrestrained control of a public utility to which millions contribute and for which thousands of underpaid workers slave.

What are the issues in the struggle for which the traction barons import mercenaries in much the same manner as their feudal predecessors hired men-at-arms?

The issues are so clear and simple that they can be understood by a ten-year-old child. They are:

(1) The right of the traction workers to organize—the right to have a union free from company control.

(2) The abolition of the serfdom in which the traction workers, especially on the five cent lines, which are held by the notorious Stillman "traction ring."

(3) The abolition of the spy and blacklist system—the nuisance of which the traction barons boastfully admit.

(4) The abolition of the "yellow dog" individual contract.

(5) The quashing of the injunction obtained against the union and the traction workers.

(6) The right to strike and picket without being treated as criminals.

(7) An increase in wages, a shortening of hours and improvements in working conditions.

(8) The traction barons must be forced to make their enormous profits pay the costs out of the tremendous profit diverted in the recent investigations without an increase in fare.

Around these issues can be organized a mass force able to cut the throats of the traction barons, free the traction workers and establish a union which will serve the interests of the traction workers and add immense strength to the labor movement.

Upon the whole labor movement is placed now a heavy responsibility. The traction workers must be shown by unswerving support against all enemies that the labor movement is behind them.

The issues of the struggle must be made clear to the millions who pay tribute to the traction barons. They must be won to the side of the traction workers—as a great majority of them can be.

Relief must be organized—the strike machinery set in motion.

The traction barons must be shown that New York labor knows how to organize, fight and win.

Preparations for legal defense for victims of police and gangster brutality must be made.

The Amalgamated Association of Street and Electric Railway Employes, the Central Labor Council and the Trade Federation of Labor, must show by deeds that the traction workers have their full backing in every action it may be necessary to take to smash the company union, bring the traction workers into the labor movement and obtain their demands.

THE WHOLE STRENGTH OF THE LABOR MOVEMENT BEHIND THE TRACTION WORKERS!

Big Anti-War Meeting, Bryant Hall Tomorrow

All workers who wish to protest against the attack on the Soviet Union and the danger of war should attend the huge mass meeting tomorrow at Bryant Hall, Sixth Ave., near 42d St., 7 p. m.

Republic in Soviet Russia means to the American workers, the significance of the attack upon it, why militant workers should demand the recognition of Soviet Russia, the relation of this workers' government to the struggle of the Chinese people—all will be discussed at this meeting.

SHOE WORKERS' UNION OFFICIALS WAGE WAR AGAINST MEMBERSHIP

Election Approaching So They Start Fight to Eliminate Opposition to Regime

Pursuing their union-wrecking campaign against the supporting locals of the District Council of the Shoe Workers Protective Union, the Fitzgerald-Nolan machine, is desperate to stifle every vestige of opposition to it. Their purpose is to destroy the organization in Greater New York because they know that the membership is opposed to their reactionary and dictatorial tactics. An election for general president is approaching and the machine is trying to fortify itself so it can remain in power.

The revoking of the charter of Local Fifty-five in New York last Thursday night was the latest of a series of punitive acts against the membership.

Bring Flock of Organizers.

Both President John D. Nolan and Secretary-Treasurer Daniel J. Fitzgerald of the general office in Boston were present at the meeting which included nearly all the membership because all th shops under its jurisdiction had been closed to get full attendance.

Trailing along with Nolan and Fitzgerald were a flock of organizers and the business agent of the cutters' local, Arthur Cunningham, who tried to speak but was hooted down because the executive board of his local encourage the members to scab upon the other locals on strike. The organizers were Jack Conley, appointed last winter and who has made a complete failure as an organizer and strike leader, but who is kept on the payroll because he supports the machine; Tom Kelly, a political apointee selected at the same time Conley was put on, who is utterly incompetent, but also holds on because he is part of the machine; DeLiberty, a member of Local 55, but who is utterly discredited by the rank and file and whom the general office does not dare send into the New York district; Quintilliano, a recent aboniteo who has not been able to achieve much even if he desired to do so because of the fact that the general office sabotages organization work because it doesn't want a powerful union in this district.

Finances Were Cut Off.

Louis Trufovitz, president of the District Council whose charter was lifted a couple of weeks ago, was the first speaker at the meeting and assailed the policy of Nolan, pointing out that the union had lost all its strikes because the general office shut off financial aid and because of the bad trade conditions. The general office sent in no funds all winter. Then in the spring it send funds for organizational purposes for a few weeks as a mere gesture. Right in the midst of two strikes in big shops the finances were cut off.

Two locals, 53 and 54, comprising the basic workers in the industry, demanded action against wage cuts and worsening of conditions. The district council acted against the tyranny of the bosses. But delegates on the council from locals 60 and 66, the cutters and operators, constantly assailed the majority for putting up a fight and calling strikes. Finally one of the biggest shops under union control, the B. W. S., demanded a reduction which would amount to 25 cents on a pair of shoes. A compromise was reached that a fifty per cent reduction be accepted. Then the cutters, who had always opposed strikes, refused to accept the reduction, not because they were opposed to it, but only in order to play dirty politics and assail the district council.

In another case where the Unity shoe concern discharged 22 men because of union activity and a strike was called by the council the cutters refused to go out and instructed their men to scab on the job. President Nolan, in a feeble reply to Trufovitts, evaded the issues and asserted that he was justified in urging the calling off of the Unity strike where the men struck because of discrimination against the union and striking the place where the union was still recognized.

Prevented Union Organization.

H. Levine, secretary of the district council then spoke in reply to Nolan and showed that the general office had done nothing to help strengthen the organization in New York, but had done everything to prevent organization, because they feared that they would be opposed by the membership and be voted out of office. It was a case of putting their jobs above the interests of the union. Levine went back over the history of the organization to show that the general office had sabotaged and double-crossed the district council consistently; that they had removed Manager P. Pascal Cosgrove, who had built the local organization, simply because he ran as a candidate against Fitzgerald, the general secretary-treasurer.

Cuningham Would Speak.

Arthur Cunningham, business agent of the cutters who had scabbed on the other locals, was put forward by Fitzgerald to speak, but the membership indignantly declared that they didn't want to hear from a scabherder. DeLiberty then tried to plead for Cunningham. The temper of the membership forced Fitzgerald to withdraw his request that Cunningham speak.

This army of organizers was amusing to the membership as they had many times asked for organizers but did not get even one.

Revokes Charter of Local.

Local 55 had instructed its delegates to continue to attend the meetings of the council whose charter had been revoked and Nolan declared that the local rescind its action, which was refused. At that point A. Mersehon, temporary manager of the district council office, asked Nolan and Nolan and the rest of the general officials walked out, because he knew that Mersehon would take the side of him the workers. As the officials left they announced that the charter of the local was revoked.

Assails General Officials.

Since Nolan and his gang refused to listen to the membership of the union, one of the members, Max Delman, wrote an open letter to [illegible]

[illegible] D. Nolan, Gen. Pres.
W. P. U.
[illegible] Atlantic Ave., Boston, Mass.

Dear Sir and Brother:

No doubt you will be surprised to receive this letter from me, but after what happened last night and you not having the courtesy to listen to what the members of Local 55 had to say I was forced to correspond so as to see that I, at least, see if the members of Local 55 shall be able to express my opinion and be heard, as this time not only by you but by a many members of the S. W. P. U. as possible as I intend to make this an open letter.

Now Brother Nolan, I charge you and with you the general officials violating the constitution as adopted by the conventions of 1924 and 1926

Article 12 section 1 of our constitution it says: "Any member who knowingly works on any job where a strike exists, or who knowingly aids or assists any employer or person against whom a labor union has a grievance, by working, by inducing others to work, or in any other way whatsoever, or who betrays any of the secrets of the organization, shall be expelled." Article 8, second paragraph of section 2 says: "The General Council shall have full executive power, but shall possess no legislative power, nor shall they have power to alter, amend, or suspend any part of the constitution."

Now according to Article 12, section 1, Local 55 could have been expelled from the organization, instead, the General Council of which you and another local are a [illegible] tion.

Article 8, second paragraph of section 2 is clear as to the [illegible] Article 12, Section 1. The General Council has [illegible] of itself themselves guilty of the same offence that Local 66 committed in [illegible] their action in order to [illegible] in order to crush a union where a strike exists by making them believe that it is all right to do so.

Also in the preamble of our constitution, paragraph 1 states that we affirm that the workers have a natural right to choose their own representatives and to deal with their employers collectively through these chosen representatives." The General Council also broke this by refusing the charter of the Joint Council with a method of a representation of three delegates from each local, and plus in a district [illegible] of organizers [illegible] Brother Nolan, as our [illegible] today [illegible] of the [illegible] of the [illegible] the General Council [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

PAN-AMERICAN CONFERENCE CLOSES WITH APOLOGIES FOR IMPERIALISM

Venezuelan Delegate Forces Red-Baiters to Defend Predatory Policy of Wall Street

By MANUEL GOMEZ.

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 23 (By Mail).—The convention of the Pan-American Federation of Labor closed today, with an expression of satisfaction voiced by President Green for the complete harmony which, he said, prevailed thruout the gathering.

Scarcely were the words out of his mouth when delegate Ricardo A. Martinez, the grim young Venezuelan who single handed and in one day had transformed the convention from a disgusting dumb-show into an arena of conflict around the issue of American liberalism, was handing out copies of a statement in reply to Green's vicious counter-attack of yesterday.

Martinez put up a great fight, although he was allowed more than half the proceedings to pass before he got started, probably due to inexperience. Although he experienced much difficulty in getting the floor during the closing sessions, and when he did get the floor the interpreter did not always translate what he said, he succeeded nevertheless in making Green and Woll expose themselves as hypocritical apologists for the policy of Wall Street and Washington in Latin America. His fight also brought to light the fact that most of the Latin-American delegations to the so-called labor conference were sent here by their respective governments and not by the American-based dictators who hold the particular governments concerned.

Conspiracy Against Workers.

It is almost unbelievable in a gathering claiming to represent the workers of the Americas, that in spite of the fact that he directed his fight against the imperialistic exploiters of these workers, he got practically no real support. The other Latin-Americans were the first ones to attack him when he pointed out that all was not well with the dictatorships operating in their Monroe Doctrine countries.

Martinez was the only out-and-out dissenter in a convention which amounted to a conspiracy against the workers of the Americas.

Would Disarm Labor.

President Green's closing remarks on harmony clearly betrayed the essential purpose of the thing as a sustained attempt to disarm Latin-American labor in the face of U. S. imperialism—instead of preparing them for concerted resistance to it.

Defends U. S. Imperialism.

"What is needed most of all," he said, "is confidence, trust and faith among the peoples of Latin America and the people of the United States. A large percentage of Latin-Americans have a suspicion and distrust of the United States. That distrust, that suspicion should be removed. If we are to develop commerce, trade, understanding and confidence among the peoples of the American continent, it must be removed. The Pan-American Federation of Labor can serve in a wonderful way in removing this suspicion, in creating a common understanding. The influence of the A. F. of L. in the United States will be directed toward influencing an administration of government so that the friendship and good will of the Latin-American peoples may be won. This can be accomplished thru a policy recognizing justice, fair dealing and friendship between nations. It is the desire of the working people of the United States, the membership of more than 5,000,000 of the A. F. of L. that such a policy should be pursued."

"May I suggest that on your return home you remember the sentiments expressed here and inspired by those sentiments, you become ambassadors to promote the spirit of co-operation to which I have referred in these remarks. Raise the standard of citizenship on all the borders on the American continent. For all this we are one, having aside our differences and our suspicions."

Attacks Argentine Labor.

The committee on officers, after concluded its conclusions in the closing session. In addition to endorsing the officers for the previous and coming efforts [illegible] the labor conscription law in Honduras, said some unkind things about the dictatorship in Nicaragua and Venezuelan dictator Gomez, and congratulates at this congress, and [illegible] him into a subtle attack against the organized labor movement of the Argentine Republic, the interested body conveyed that it is necessary to destroy the present relatively powerful Argentine unions because of their [illegible] and the people of the United States, [illegible] intimate federation affiliated to the Pan-American Federation of Labor? None of the Argentine federation

[illegible] Imagine a labor congress in which the delegates was that everything is fine and they have nothing to protest against!

[illegible] Mexican Police and U. S. [illegible] have been such as to prejudice the welfare of the [illegible] of both countries [illegible]

[illegible] Mexican delegates, led by Morones, departed for home last night, [illegible] of Pan American Federation of Labor officers being pushed forward as possible [illegible] to participate, [illegible] and the officers were reelected, [illegible] Martinez of Venezuela [illegible] for president in [illegible] Mexican leader Celia.

Support the Traction Workers and Build the Labor Movement!

Every indication points to a strike of traction workers in New York City.

How many workers will join the strike, how far it will take on an industrial character—affecting surface, elevated and subway lines—to what extent it will be supported by workers in other industries, how successful it will be, how firmly a union of traction workers will be established—all these developments will be determined by the sincerity and energy with which the labor movement puts its forces behind the traction workers.

That the traction workers are ready to strike to free themselves from industrial slavery, for the right to organize, recognition of the union, for better wages and working conditions there can be little doubt. Even in the face of the company spy system a substantial percentage of the traction workers have stated that they are ready to fight.

The Central Labor Council, the State Federation of Labor—all agencies of the organized labor movement must be put in readiness to mobilise the workers for militant support of the men who are willing to defy injunctions and the blacklist to smash the company controlled "brotherhood."

Mass meetings should be called in every workinglass section, relief machinery should be set in motion, the legal defense must be in working order.

It is no light task the labor movement faces. The traction barons are powerful. They are backed by Wall Street and the local, state and national machinery. They have been allowed to bring in strikebreakers unhindered.

But before the mighty power of the labor movement, unified in one purpose—to organize the traction workers and establish once and for all the right to organize and strike—the traction barons will meet defeat providing always that the leadership of this great struggle keeps in mind at all times and swerves not at all from the main line—allowing nothing to come before the interests of the traction workers and the labor movement.

All the traction workers need to know is that the organized labor movement is with them and they will put up a winning fight that will make labor history and give new strength to the labor movement.

All together behind the traction workers and against the traction barons!

This is no local struggle. Won by the might of organized labor it will give new hope and courage to the millions of American workers, will make them better able to meet and defeat the oncoming national offensive of the bosses whose full weight the coal miners are feeling now.

American Ambassadors Lying About Sacco and Vanzetti.

Whenever the workers of foreign countries make it unpleasant for American ambassadors because of the Sacco and Vanzetti case, these worthies always repeat the contemptible lie that the affair is no concern of the federal government and concerns the state of Massachusetts only. While it is a fact that the courts of the state of Massachusetts were chosen as instruments thru which to railroad to the electric chair these two workers the co-instigators of the affair have been proved to be agents of the department of justice of the federal government. Sacco and Vanzetti faced double persecution; the deep hatred of the mill owners of Massachusetts whose slaves they tried to organize and the fury of the government agents who wanted these two Italians framed because they knew too much about the murder in New York of the Italian worker, Salsedo, by agents of the department of justice.

Government agents testified against these two victims of capitalist class vengeance and thruout the whole affair the activity of these agents was second only to that of the lackeys of the mill owners.

Furthermore, any time the government steps in they ran free. Sacco and Vanzetti. The chairman of the national committee of the republican party is the defeated and discredited exploiter of women and child labor in his slave pens of New Bedford, Mr. William Morgan Butler. This man is also the political boss of Massachusetts, heir of the sceptre wielded by the notorious Murray Crane. He is one of the men chosen by Wall Street to keep Cal Coolidge on the right track, which is the path of puppet of the imperialists. A word from him to Fuller will liberate these two victims of capitalism.

The mass demonstrations in foreign countries before the American embassies not only should not be abandoned because of the spurious arguments of American ambassadors, but should be increased until no emissary of Wall Street can remain in any country where the workers are even partially class conscious. The mass pressure on the part of the international working class and the determined stand of the American working class can yet save these two men from instant death in the electric chair or the more grim and ghastly living death in the dungeons of the Charlestown penitentiary.

In an attack upon the Soviet Union, Frank Crane in Hearst's papers declares that the Bolshevik government should mind its business, regulate the internal affairs of its own country and let other nations alone. Why didn't the eminent scribbler place the United States in place of "Bolshevik," and be more correct as far as facts are concerned? Whoever heard of the Bolsheviks performing butcheries such as this country perpetrated in Nicaragua the other day?

DANGER AHEAD!

By T. LOAF.

WHEN we started these articles we thought of presenting in a rather brief space the dangerous plot hatched by Great Britain, with connivance of other capitalist powers, against the very existence of the Soviet Union. We centered our attention upon the recent session of the League Council because at that moment the British tories directed most of their efforts for an attack upon the Soviet Republic and also because there were focused there the many bitter antagonisms of the imperialist powers among themselves.

BUT in the course of writing this by now lengthy estimate two circumstances changed considerably the character as well as the length of this articles: One, the new facts and developments in connection with the danger of war upon the Workers' Republic that had to be drawn in and more or less adequately explained; two, the fact that our locking up of the attack upon the Soviet Union with antagonisms among the imperialist powers was likely to create some misunderstanding or even confusion in the minds of the readers of The DAILY WORKER. We decided therefore to clear some questions before presenting more fully the present international situation and the source of danger to the Soviet Union.

WHEREIN lies the difficulty for the clear understanding of the present situation and the possibility of confusion? Let us consider.

On the one hand we notice clearly how the imperialist powers are step by step uniting upon a program of isolating the Soviet Republic, of bringing an ever stronger pressure upon her in order to break through the present political and economic order of the U. S. S. R., which interferes with their plans of capitalist post-war restoration. Such program, even tho outwardly not hostile, means actually a method of "changing from within," aiming at changing the Workers' Republic into a peasant democracy dependent for its existence upon the industrial machinery of the capitalist world.

MOREOVER we see the capitalist powers, Great Britain in this case the most important, embarking upon a program of open hostilities and of a general war attack upon the Soviet Union. Great Britain preparing to collect [illegible] calls for such an attack and making all efforts to gather [illegible] to grant all the other [illegible].

ON the other hand we see [illegible] differences among the imperialist powers themselves [illegible] cause a distinctly the [illegible] against Jugo-Slavia, [illegible] Poland, Soviet [illegible] Britain and [illegible] the imperialist [illegible] aspect of the world, [illegible] of the capitalist [illegible] the Nobe of the world [illegible] speaks now [illegible] flags the [illegible] capitalist [illegible] chance might [illegible] of the time when [illegible] parts.

MOREOVER, the [illegible] situation of the [illegible] year of [illegible] world can account [illegible] speeches in the recent speech of Mr. [illegible] compared [illegible] the remarkable speeches of the world [illegible] and imperialists. Before the world war sound like pacific sermons. And [illegible] would be absolutely wrong to ascribe it to the [illegible] state of mind of the [illegible] change the speech and the [illegible] the belligerent imperialist powers of Italy which far better and [illegible] parading until the whole thing will explode.

THUS we see here the campaign against the Soviet Union, which is assuming now an absolutely determined and characteristic character and which, moreover, is coupled with an attack of the capitalists of the world upon the labor organizations and labor standards throughout the world. It is paralled by ever growing antagonisms among the imperialist powers themselves, the tension now a point of marked tension.

AND whatever may be the next developments in the struggle of the Chinese masses against the imperialist oppression and for their own social liberation, there can be no doubt that the course of the Chinese Revolution will present all the time a constant danger to the aims and plans of the imperialist powers and a point of dangerous struggle among these powers themselves.

FURTHERMORE, if the hostilities between the capitalist states themselves are now kept in check by the fear of internal class antagonisms assuming an absolutely "unpleasant" character for the bourgeois rulers, the open outbreaks of such class warfare lead to intensify the danger of war conflagrations, as is being clearly demonstrated by the internal situation in Italy and the present revolutionary outbreak in Austria.

THIS revolutionary outbreak touches at once the political situation of the fascist governments of Hungary and Italy, it rouses at the same time their imperialist ambitions, it embarrasses the program of a political union between Germany and Austria (so-called "Anschluss") and brings at once to the fore "fears" of the three states of the "Little Entente" (Czecho-Slovakia, Rumania and Jugo-Slavia) and surely also of Poland, all the slumbering animosities and feuds of the war and post-war date.

NAY, the international danger of the Austrian revolution is being particularly stressed by the Austrian social-democrats who once more, by hiding behind "international complications," are choking the revolt of the masses and betraying these once to their capitalist masters, repeating the unforgettable treachery of 1919 when they refused to come to the aid of Soviet Hungary and permitted the suppression of the revolutionary movements in Hungary and Bavaria.

THERE arises clearly in the mind of every conscious worker a question. Which is it? Are the imperialist powers preparing a concerted attack, a combined war campaign against the Soviet Republic that will call for the most decisive actions and the consolidation of class war [illegible] the part of the revolutionary proletariat, or, under an evidently [illegible] maneuver such attack, at the same time [illegible] a base for a final struggle [illegible] the proletariat against the capitalist system itself, or have the differences between the capitalist powers themselves [illegible] to such a point that [illegible] is immediately realized as [illegible] possibilities of a new world war, [illegible] a new period of revolutionary struggle [illegible] the world, and opening upon the [illegible] the absolute international working class [illegible] and logical means of transforming present [illegible] and post-war [illegible] between the imperialist powers [illegible] other.

We shall make it [illegible] the next article.

HUNDREDS OF TRACTION MEN WALK OUT AS STRIKE LOOMS

"We sincerely hope that no strike will be called, but if there is a strike we have no doubt about the outcome and our main desire is to see that none of our members are misled into following something which will cost them their jobs.

Want Scabs.

"We are therefore appealing to our members to pay no attention to any strike call of the Amalgamated and to pay no attention to false rumors spread by them.

"Every member who leaves the Brotherhood in answer to a strike call will not be taken back into the Brotherhood which means that he cannot come back into the service of the company."

Many of the traction workers have taken the matter in their own hands and have reported "sick" in preparation for the strike call tonight. More than 200 "sick" cases were reported. Company "welfare" workers were sent to investigate this unusual epidemic of illness.

Later in the day it was learned that the strikebreakers were imported from Chicago, Washington, Baltimore, Pittsburg and Philadelphia. The first batch of 150 were recruited in Pittsburg and 50 in Philadelphia. The strikebreakers continued to pour into the company barns and it is expected that by the time the strike vote is taken tonight at the Brooklyn Labor Lyceum, there will be over a thousand scabs on the job.

Portenar on Job.

Early yesterday A. J. Portenar, general arbitrator for the State Labor Board, called on the Amalgamated officials at the Continental Hotel and offered his services as a mediator. He was told by P. J. Shea, vice-president of the Association, that all matters of arbitration must be handled by Major Walker, and in view of the fact that Hedley had refused to discuss the matter, arbitration was out of the question.

S. O. S. calls have been sent out to William B. Fitzgerald, and P. J. O'Brien, vice-presidents of the Amalgamated who are in Detroit at the moment. W. G. Mahon, president of the Amalgamated, will not be able to be here due to sickness.

Leave Work.

Messrs. Coleman and Shea who are active in the Tammany negotiations with Walker, stated yesterday that scores of switchmen and motormen are coming down from work of their own accord and that union officials are having a hard job restraining them pending the end of the negotiations.

Albert Goldman, Commissioner of Plants and Structures, announced yesterday that 800 city-supervised buses will be ready to relieve the congested traffic conditions which will result from the strike. 300 buses are being called in from service in New Jersey and Westchester County if the strike goes through, Goldman said.

The I. R. T. barns at 145th Street and Lenox avenue are taking on the appearance of an armed camp.

Vast amounts of food supplies, army cots, and field kitchens are being brought in and installed. Sentries bar the approach to the strikebreakers' quarters. The scabs are being fed and housed and are being paid $10 per day.

Posted at convenient points is Hedley's notice to the strikebreakers and potential scabs. It reads "To the members of the Brotherhood:

"In view of the threats of a strike by the Amalgamated Association measures are under way to provide food, lodging and adequate protection for all employes who may desire to avail themselves of such facilities in connection with their work.

Frank Hedley."

Agents of the New York traction companies in Chicago and other large cities have been instructed by wire to rush strikebreakers to this city as soon as they can be rounded up. The regular rate will be .75 per day and food and lodging. This rate will be increased if the strike becomes bitter and protracted.

Ready To Go.

As a result, of the importation of strikebreakers men loyal to the Amalgamated are beginning to chafe under the yoke of having to remain on the job in face of this act of provocation on the part of the traction barons.

Some of the strikebreakers are young men, of the white collar class who seem to be looking for excitement during the summer vacation period. Of course the usual type of scrgg predominates. Inquiries made among them as to where they came from were met with vicious scowls.

The importation of strikebreakers at this point has intensified the feeling of the rank and file traction workers who are itching to lock horns with the traction companies.

Police Lose Vacations.

It was announced yesterday that all police vacations have been cancelled and the police force under the leadership of Police Commissioner Warren is marshalling its forces for one of the most bitter traction strikes in the history of New York. Traction heads estimate that more than 10,000 cops will be necessary to "protect" the traction properties in Manhattan alone.

Early in the afternoon yesterday traction workers quit work and gathered at Manhattan Casino at 155th street and 8th avenue. They were anxious to strike and were looking for leaders and instructions.

It appears that the traction companies working in close cooperation with Tammany Hall have bitten off more than they can chew in defying the labor movement. Hedley's arrogant statements have brought a load of strike bricks down on his head.

Shoe Workers Go On Strike In Brooklyn

Twenty-five shoe workers employed by the Majestic Overjater Co., 663 Broadway, Brooklyn, went on strike yesterday when the boss tried to take advantage of the revoking of the charter of the district council of the Shoe Workers' Protective Union by the general council.

Picketing of the shop will start this morning at 7 a. m.

Plumbers' Helpers Open Organization Campaign

The American Association of Plumbers' Helpers which recently completed a strike, resulting in a wage raise ranging from 50 cents to $2, is now starting an organizing drive for the complete control of the trade.

The organization is trying to enlist other building trades workers to support them in their campaign. An appeal is being sent to all building trades locals in Greater New York asking for support.

Britain Will Proclaim American Delegates At Geneva Lie to Coolidge

LONDON, July 25. Allegations that the British policy at the tripartite naval disarmament conference at Geneva has been misrepresented are understood to form the basis of a communication which the British imperial defense committee decided today to send to the United States.

It was reported in diplomatic circles that the British will charge not only that American newspapers have failed to state the British case completely but that the American delegates have not given full information to President Coolidge.

The British cabinet met for two hours today and discussed the situation in the tri-partite naval disarmament conference.

Another meeting of the cabinet will be held tonight in the House of Commons.

"Vive la Commune!" Is the Growing Cry of Increasing Ranks of World's Workers

By J. LOUIS ENGDAHL

"Workingmen's Paris," wrote Karl Marx in his brilliant "Civil War in France," "with its Commune, will be forever celebrated as the glorious harbinger of a new society. Its martyrs are enshrined in the great heart of the working class. History has already nailed its exterminators to that eternal pill ry from which all the prayers of their priests will not avail to redeem them."

THE E words of Karl Marx—in fact the whole history of the Paris Commune—flash across the mind as one stands before "The Red Wall," dedicated to the martyred dead of the revolutionary struggle of March 18-May 28, 1871, in the capital city of France.

"The Red Wall" . . . is to be found in the Cimetiere Pere Lachaise, "the largest and most interesting of Parisian burial grounds."

It was not mentioned in any of the "Guide Books to Paris" that I saw. The sightseeing auto buses do not go that way. Open confession that the revolutionary efforts of the French proletariat are not supposed to interest the American tourist.

"Pere Lachaise" or "The Cimetiere de l'Est," is named after Lachaise, the Jesuit confessor of Louis XIV, who had a country seat here. In 1804 the property was bought by the city and converted into a cemetery. It has since been greatly extended and now covers an area of 109 acres.

The attendant at the main gate shows me a map of the cemetery, with all of its lanes and pathways, between graves and tombs, all named. I follow his finger over the map until it comes to the far corner of the cemetery where "The Red Wall" is marked with the French words, "Mur Des Federes."

Never had I seen a cemetery quite like this one. The tombs were so close together that there was room for no blade of grass between. It was all one continuous mass of stone, marble, brick or granite, one vast tomb, completely dead and except for an occasional aged woman that I passed, from these it seemed to have wandered in, as if they had no other place to go.

I might have passed "The Red Wall" by if nearly a hundred grave stones had not been hanging there upon its face, attracting me. "The Red Wall" is part of the wall of the cemetery itself, but not high. It is small indeed when compared to the mighty "Red Wall" of the Kremlin, in Moscow. "The Red Wall" erected to the memory of Karl Liebknecht and Rosa Luxemburg and the hosts of other revolutionary dead in Berlin, Germany, is more monumental.

But as in Moscow and Berlin, one forgets about physical proportions, of bricks piled on bricks, in the memory of the mighty proletarian sacrifices that were made, 56,000 dead men, women and children, slaughtered by the peerless, in the final week of the Paris Commune, May 21-28, 1871. The huge tablet on the Wall merely says:

"Aux Morts De La Commune, 21-28 Mai 1871."

The scores of wreaths upon the Wall must have been there since the last anniversary commemoration of the Commune, March 18, a date blazoned red on the working class calendar in every country in the world.

There were wreaths of red flowers, of different nationalities, from Chinese workers, Jewish workers, Italian workers. The last of these include many exiles from fascist Italy who have settled in Fralce. There were wreaths with the "Hammer and Sickle" of the Soviet Revolution; wreaths carrying a message of solidarity with the Chinese Revolution; wreaths of many trade unions of Paris.

These wreaths are the passing tributes of labor's eternal solidarity with the Paris Commune's martyred dead. It is of these that Karl Marx, in writing, to Dr. Kugelmann, shortly after the Commune, said:

". . . What elasticity, what historical initiative, what capabilities of self-sacrifice there are in these Parisians! After six months of starvation and destruction by internal treason even more than by the external enemy, they rise, under Prussian bayonets as tho no war existed between France and Germany and the enemy did not stand before the doors of Paris! History has no similar example of such greatness!"

Over on the other side of the wall there thunder and rattle the modern implements of industry in the hands of metal workers in a huge machine shop. The proletariat grows in power in France, in the developing machine age, as the heirs of the Commune.

Some of the graves near the Wall are also of great interest. Here is the tomb of Gustave Lefrancais, member of the Commune of Paris; Henri Mortier, another member of the Commune (1843-91); also Pascal Falerot, Deputy de la Seine, 1833-1908.

There is the double grave of Paul and Laura Lafargue, who committed suicide in 1912.

After writing such works as "The Religion of Capitalism," "Social and Philosophical Studies," "The Origin and Idea of God" and "The Evolution of Property," which placed him in the forefront of the revolutionary writers of his day, LaFargue is said to have become discouraged in the struggle and decided on an escape thru suicide with his wife, Laura, one of the three daughters of Karl Marx. The grave is already neglected. It could only boast, as I viewed it, a small bouquet of artificial violets. Great contrast this, their surrender to death compared to the courageous will to struggle of the Communard, who lived defiantly to the last, until their lives were shot out of them by enemy class bullets as they stood against this wall only a few feet away.

Near the outer cemetery wall is the monument "Le Mur" by Myrna Voather (1909) dedicated to the memory of the victims of the revolutions.

One may also find some interest in the others who are buried here: historians and actors, artists and authors, princes and painters, generals and poets, for anyone may purchase here a plot for the dead. It includes the Jewish cemetery where the grave of Rachel (1821-58) is to be found. There are the graves of Rosa Bochcur (1822-50) the painter; Frederic Chopin (1810-49) the composer; Adolphe Thiers (1797-1877) president of the republic; Corot (1796-1875) the painter; Sarah Bernhardt (1844-1923) the actress; Honore de Balzac (1799-1850) and Emile Souvestre (1806-54), novelists, and Georges Bizet (1838-75) composer of "Carmen." It also includes a Mohammedan Cemetery that is quite a little city.

But all these names, more and more, mean little to the workers of France, and of the world, compared to the fact that this cemetery contains "The Red Wall," the memorial to the Communc dead.

This fact draws to this spot in Paris the growing tribute of the workers of the world, including growing numbers of the workers of the United States of America, who join with labor everywhere in proclaiming, even as the Communards proclaimed upon the gallows and before firing squads, "VIVE LA COMMUNE!"

Results of the Plenary Session of the Executive Committee of the Communist International

We must by no means interpret Comrade Lenin's instructions to the Hague Delegation to be a condemnation of the slogans of the general strike and of insurrection in fighting methods against war disregard of war. The sole correct interpretation of Comrade Lenin's instructions is to realize that they were directed against the empty phrase, the empty phrase of general strike, revolution, and armed insurrection, as "reply" to war, etc. Lenin said no word against those slogans themselves. All that Lenin did was to fight with the utmost political energy against mere phrases, against the empty phrases of revolution.

We know very well that a large number of Social Democratic Congresses, a large number of Trade Union Congresses, and a large number of the leaders of Social Democratic parties, have repeatedly declared their intention of "replying" to war with a general strike. In the same manner a considerable number of the heroes of the so-called "revolutionary" syndicalism have preached the general strike as the salvation from all evil. But all the same there is no sign to be observed, either in one camp or the other, of systematic preliminary preparation, carried on steadily from day to day, for the actuality of the fight against war.

It need not be emphasized that if anyone were to issue the slogan of revolution and insurrection as "reply" to a war, the single and isolated action of this so-called "revolutionary" syndicalism have preached the general strike as the salvation from all evil. But all the same there is no sign to be observed, either in one camp or the other, of systematic preliminary preparation, carried on steadily from day to day, for the actuality of the fight against war.

It need not be emphasized that if anyone were to issue the slogan of revolution and insurrection as "reply" to a war, the single and isolated action of this so-called "revolutionary" syndicalism of boasts, an utter deception of the masses, unless those issuing the slogan find previously carried through a systematic process of preparation for the organization of the general strike, the organization of insurrection, and the organization of revolution, in accordance with incontrovertible Marxian analysis of the objective situation.

The point decisive for Lenin and it must be decisive for the comintern adopted by the Communist Party was the organization of our Party and such manner that our forces should be located for Comrade Trotsky [illegible] advanced the slogan of peace. We answered the slogan of peace, the slogan of civil war. We regarded the slogan of civil war as the much better slogan to be fought against by the slogan of peace, including those who [illegible] the slogan "Hands off Russia!" UNION OFFICIALS BETRAY THE TRANSIT STRIKE

By T. J. O'FLAHERTY.

THE Interborough Rapid Transit Company cannot afford to pay its employes a living wage, but it can afford to pay strike-breakers ten dollars a day and expenses. Lots of people prate about public sympathy not being with the strikers, but if the officials of the Amalgamated association and the central labor council of New York do their duty the workers can win regardless of what the "public" may think. The so-called public may think as it pleases, but it does not care to walk too far.

ONE representative of the public told me in sorrowful tone that a policeman who had arranged to take his vacation with his family had to cancel the arrangement because of the strike. "They had a whole year to pull off this strike," remonstrates my informant, "and they had to wait until summer time when the policemen take time off." Perhaps most of you would have a hard time trying to excavate something to pay in a case like that, but nevertheless it is surprising how many people there are in this world who will make similar conversation.

"THERE exists in the minds of Latin-American peoples a distrust of the attitude of our people. That distrust must be removed if we are to develop commerce and understanding." This is William Green speaking. Of course Mr. Green did not say a word about the slaughter of 300 Nicaraguans by United States government marines and airmen. What he was concerned with was the proper technique to be employed by our imperialists in their depredations. This labor faker does not want to have Wall Street get too rough. The killing of hundreds of people in Latin-American countries might cause American trade unionists to get their dander up against Wall Street. Of course Mr. Green in the last analysis would support Wall Street, but if Morgan and Company took proper precautions it might be possible to fool the workers for a while longer.

HOW simple it would be to prevent strikebreakers from being shipped to New York City if only the labor leaders were on the job. Take Chicago for instance! There are 16,000 organized street and elevated workers in that city. They are good trade unionists. If the union officials gave the word those men would see to it that not one strikebreaker would leave the city for Chicago.

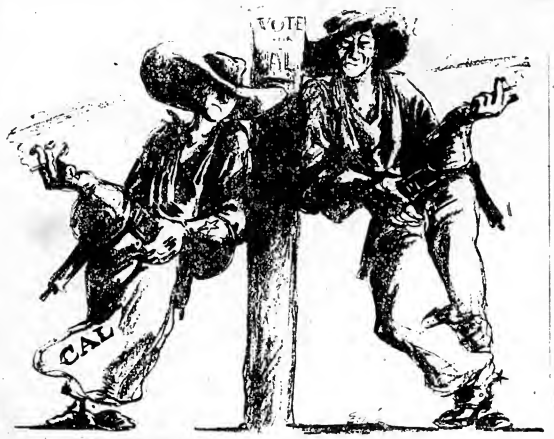
SEE ROCKEFELLER HAND IN FIGHT FOR SOVIET OIL

That the Rockefellers, themselves, have interested in the conflict between various branches of the Standard Oil over regarding the policy to be pursued in relation to Soviet oil is seen in the statement of Ivy L. Lee, publicity agent for big corporations, urging the United States chamber of commerce to establish a bureau in Moscow for the purpose of encouraging trade relations with the Soviet government. If properly approached the Soviet government would probably welcome such a bureau, according to Lee.

Lee Urged Trade.



It will be recalled that more than a year ago Ivy L. Lee urged trade with Russia in a series of "confidential" letters" to various financial and industrial magnates and also to politicians. This followed the completion of negotiations between the Standard Oil of New York and Vacuum Oil on one side and the Soviet government on the other regarding the purchase of large quantities of Russian oil.

That there will soon be unanimity of action on the part of all branches of Standard Oil is indicated by the

SACCO, VANZETTI TO ENTER DEATH HOUSE ON MONDAY

Plan Five New York Mass Meetings

BOSTON, July 26.—Sacco and Vanzetti are scheduled to enter the death house in state's prison on Monday, ten days before the date set for their electrocution.

While the two framed-up workers continued their hunger strike, the advisory committee of Governor Alvan T. Fuller speeded up deliberation of the case, having ended its formal investigation. The committee, composed of President A. Lawrence Lowell of Harvard; President Samuel H. Stratton of Massachusetts Institute of Technology and Judge Robert Grant, expected to have its findings ready before August 5d, the day the chief executive must decide whether he will grant another reprieve.

Fake Investigation.

Governor Fuller's personal investigation remains incomplete. He has 10 more defense witnesses to interview. He will conclude his interview with Vanzetti and will talk with Celestino Madeiros, who has confessed to the crime for which Sacco and Vanzetti were found guilty.

Unless workers throughout the country organize mass protests the execution of Sacco and Vanzetti is likely. Both of the framed-up radicals have been considerably weakened by their long hunger strike.

Five New York Meetings.

The Sacco-Vanzetti Emergency Committee has announced five open air meetings, to be held in various parts of the city on this same eve-

Paris Hears Poincare Trying to Break Down Relations With USSR

PARIS, July 26.—It rumored here, in connection with the government's prosecution of eight Communists just convicted of opposing French imperialism and therefor, charged with treason, that Premier Poincare of France in interview with Vatslav Vorovsky of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics threatened the break-off of all relations between the two countries.

Pressure from England, and wrath at the recent Communist gains in the French by-elections are ascribed a reason for the threat. Ambassador Rakovsky has left for Moscow for a conference and could not be reached to confirm or deny the rumor.

According to Rose Pastor Stone, secretary of the Sacco-Vanzetti Emergency Committee, reports from Boston concerning the probable action of Governor Fuller's investigation make it absolutely necessary that there should be continual protest from

LATINS APPLAUD MARTINEZ FRANK ANTI-IMPERIALISM

By MANUEL GOMEZ.

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 26. Ricardo A. Martinez, Latin-American [illegible] was given a truly hand [illegible] by the delegates of the so-called Latin-American Federation of Labor, has already become an international figure, according to correspondents of Latin-American newspapers here. Many papers in Central and South America have printed leading editorials commending him.

From a group of Latin-Americans in New York the Venezuelan delegate has received the following telegram, sent to him in care of the Pan-American Federation of Labor:

"Sincere congratulations on your courageous stand for the weak and oppressed. Following your efforts with the keenest interest."

Commenting upon the above telegram, Martinez said:

"This means more to me than all of the denunciations of Green, Woll and the others. No matter what the handful of renegades supposed to be representing Latin-American countries at the convention may say, Latin America is a unity in opposition to the Pan-American schemes of Wall Street and Washington. As for the working people in the United States, we have the utmost confidence in them, for they are our brothers.

Section 2, New York, Sends a Challenge

Section 2 of District 2, W. P. of A. knows the importance of The DAILY WORKER. In the past several months it has donated over $1,500 to The DAILY WORKER, as much as the entire Chicago District and almost as much as all the other sections of New York City together. When Section No. 2 wished to call the attention of the workers of New York City to the Danger of War arising from the Imperialist Attack on the Chinese Revolution, it knew of no better way than to arrange a mass meeting on the question and have a large collection taken so that The DAILY WORKER could continue its unsparing and unyielding fight on the American Danger of War, the importance of fighting for recognition of Soviet Russia—these messages can most effectively be brought to the attention of the workers of this city through The DAILY WORKER. Section No. 2 has therefore decided to distribute 10,000 DAILY WORKERS before the meeting and to give all the proceeds of The DAILY WORKER to the GUARD THE DAILY WORKER FUND. We challenge other sections of the city, other districts of the country to do as well or better.

CO-OPERATE WITH TAMMANY HALL AND TRACTION BARONS TO SEND MEN BACK TO WORK; PLAN TO BOOST FARE; LAVIN, WALSH FIGHT BETRAYAL

Six New York Rallies Arranged for Friday Evening at Seven p. m.

The Sacco-Vanzetti Emergency Committee will hold six open air meetings Friday evening 7 p. m. to demand the immediate release of the two framed-up workers. The meetings were originally arranged for Union Square, but a police permit was denied.

The meetings will be held at Rutgers Square, 130d St. and Prospect Ave.; 10th St. and Second Ave.; 110th St. and Fifth Ave.; Grand St. Extension, and Stone and Pitkin Aves. Well known labor people will speak.

STRIKE IS URGED BY EDWARD LAVIN IN PLEA TO MEN

Act At Once, Is Demand Of Popular Leader

Edward P. Lavin, who lead last year's subway strike distributed thousands of leaflets to the traction workers yesterday urging them to join in a city wide strike.

They were given to the men when they left the terminals at 2 p.m.

The leaflet read as follows:

TRACTION WORKERS OF GREATER NEW YORK

A Message from the Leader of the 1926 Strike.

"Brothers:

"I want to send out this personal message to every traction worker of Greater New York. The leaders of last year's traction strike are behind the present struggle to the fullest extent of their power. We are working earnestly and sincerely to win for you this time. A year ago on the I. R. T. over a thousand of us carried out a strike which paved the way for the present one. Now everyone can see that what we then said was true: A strike is never lost.

"Brothers: Through our sacrifices and persevering efforts against all obstacles during the past year we have prepared the way for victory this time. The issue is set in a hand! You have the power to free yourself at last. Everything is in your hands! Let us unite our ranks and stick together for victory. For our part we pledge ourselves to continue to fight and sacrifice for you and for our cause at all costs and under all conditions! You can trust us. We know the situation. Fall in line behind us. This time we will win.

What We Are Fighting For.

"We are fighting for the rights of free men!

"Smash the reptile Company Union.

"Fight for our own Union under our own control.

"Twenty-five per cent increases in pay—for all grades on all lines.

"The eight-hour day, time and one half for overtime.

"Fight for improved conditions in all departments.

Why We Will Win This Time.

"This time victory is certain! The powerful Amalgamated Association is behind us. The entire New York labor movement and the whole American Federation of Labor has guaranteed us support. The public of the whole city and country has learned to hate the traction barons and will be behind us. It is necessary only to act together. All for one and one for all. Unite for victory!

Stand By For the Call.

"Already the Traction Companies have imported strike-breakers to steal our jobs and to provoke us into action. The brothers on all lines are already walking out as a protest against this Traction Tyranny. Do not work with strike breakers! Respond in the mass protest, first [illegible] meeting to [illegible] Brooklyn meeting to [illegible] and after [illegible] Brooklyn [illegible] Wall

Quackenbush Declares That Men Who Join Union Will Lose Their Jobs

Walsh, Leading Militant Workers' Demands Written Agreements

The voice of the militant traction workers in the person of Jim Walsh, one of the leaders of last year's traction strike, cut straight across the flowery speeches of the official leadership of the "Amalgamated" and the New York Central Trades and Labor Council at last night's meeting at the Brooklyn Labor Lyceum with the demand that the alleged agreement for no discrimination and the renewal of the discharged men be placed in written form and signed by the Amalgamated officials, the I. R. T. officials and Mayor Walker as a witness.

Walsh's motion was made with the accompaniment of tremendous applause following the previous recommendation that the report of the Amalgamated officials be accepted.

Chairman Shea refused to entertain Walsh's motion and from then on every labor "leader" spoke in favor of the alleged settlement, denouncing the "hot-heads."

The traction strike will not take place. The officials of the Amalgamated working hand in hand with Tammany Hall and the traction barons have sold out the workers, called off the strike and laid the foundation for a ten cent fare in New York City.

The decision to call off the traction strike was made after P. J. Shea and J. H. Coleman, Amalgamated leaders, hamboozled workers meeting at the Brooklyn Labor Lyceum last night into accepting a so-called "peace plan" worked up earlier in the evening at a meeting called by Mayor Walker and attended by the union officials and James L. Quackenbush, Interborough counsel.

The "peace plan" calls for the reinstatement of men fired earlier in the day for attending meetings of the Amalgamated. It does not in any way, despite the statements of Shea and Coleman, union "leaders," recognize the right of New York traction workers to joint a bona fide union.

That the scheme hatched by Amalgamation officials cooperating with Tammany Hall and the traction barons includes plans for a ten cent fare was made clear by the agreement that there would be no "labor troubles" until the Tammany "unification program" for a ten cent fare goes thru.

Plan Fare Boost.

In a statement issued immediately after the conference with Mayor Walker, Patrick J. Shea, vice president of the Amalgamated said: "We have agreed not to discriminate with [illegible] union members, and with these things in sight there is every reason to believe that the subway situation here will become clear and free of labor troubles at least until the unification proceedings are completed."

The fake peace plan was jammed through the meeting, although a large proportion of the workers head ed by Lavin and Walsh, last year's strike leaders, objected to it.

Shout For Lavin.

Shouts of "We want Lavin," rang through the hall as Shea, Coleman Grover Moore, John J. Hylan, in a and Hugh Frayne, general organizer for the A. F. of L., pulled the wool over the workers' eyes and told them that the agreement reached at City Hall earlier in the evening permitted the Amalgamated to carry on an organization drive. When Walsh asked if the whole question were pulling for a ten cent fare, Shea replied that he would rather place his faith in Mayor Walker's word than in a traction official's writing.

Making No Bones About His Position

James L. Quackenbush declared that the City Hall meeting "We intend to stand by the Brotherhood 100 per cent as before. We will take back these men and forget them, and ask the Brotherhood to do the same.

I. R. T Will Smash Union.

"Our status with the Amalgamated remains no before. This I wish most emphatically to state. I do not open the door to the Amalgamated. We have not given up a thing. We have agreed to nothing beside this."

"If the non-existence membership in the Amalgamated" he continued, "and to break these contracts, we will face the same situation again."

Actually however, the traction workers assembled at the Brooklyn Labor Lyceum in the evening to help the I. R. T. policy to bigger profits and thereby injure the entire labor movement, including the Amalgamated workers to resign from Amalgamated offices. I. R. T. [illegible] and to the car.

Charges Fare Raise Is IRT-Walker Scheme

"In the underpaid thousands of traction workers in this entire metropolis I extend to [illegible] wishes," said Mayor John J. Hylan, in a statement issued late last night.

Hylan charged that the striking traction workers' demands as "just." The ex-Mayor charged that certain Tammany overlords, the I. R. T. and the B. M. T. deliberately provoked a strike situation [illegible] ten cent fare propaganda. Hylan's statement follows in part:

recent statement of Lee, because the Rockefellers can force the other units behind such a policy.

The trip of Walter C. Teagle, of the New Jersey branch of Standard Oil to London to confer with Sir Henri Deterding, head of the British Royal Dutch Shell, is interpreted as indicating that even the New Jersey branch will no longer follow the policy of waiting for the overthrow of the Soviet government in order to gain access to Russian oil. The workers' and peasants' government is so strong that Standard Oil knows it must deal with them. The change of front of the Rockefeller concern, a fact known for more than a year, is a purely business proposition with them but it certainly is evidence of the fact that the Soviet Union is now powerful enough to force the biggest capitalist concerns to come to time.

3rd Grand Jury for Indiana Corruption Found in Black Box

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind., July 26. — With Marion County prosecutors indicating that "pay dirt" has at last been struck in the D. C. Stephenson political scandal of Indiana, a third Marion County grand jury today was to hit the trail of the political probe.

Two local grand juries of the past have left a shady track in their investigations. The first jury failed to return indictments by a reported vote of three for and two against, but admitted that peculiar conditions existed in the jury itself and recommended that a second body continue the inquiry.

Jurors "Lined Up."

This second jury was absorbing the volume of "Stephensonie" at a high rate of speed when it was discovered an Indianapolis politician had attempted to bribe Claude A. Achey, a jurorman, saying he had previously "lined up" another member to refuse to return indictments. Criminal Court Judge James A. Collins dismissed immediately the second jury.

The mass of recorded testimony of the two juries plus the contents of the famous two black boxes and the five bundles of papers recently exhumed by the prosecutors, will give the third jury plenty of summer reading for some time.

Prosecutors today continued to pore over the vast mass of private papers of Stephenson, the man who fell from the political throne of Indiana to a convict's cell for the murder of an Indianapolis girl.

They expressed particular interest in two cancelled checks, one for $21,000 and the other for $24,000, but declined to say in whose favor the checks were drawn by the former klan head.

A document having the appearance of a contract aroused the most enthusiasm among the prosecutors who met at the home of prosecuting attorney William H. Remy, who is ill.

A Graft Bible.

"That will line up the whole business," Remy exclaimed.

Photographs of the politically great, many of them autographed were found among the papers of Stephenson. One of them was that of George V. Coffin, Republican chairman of both Marion County and the Indianapolis city committee, Coffin and Governor Ed Jackson have been political allies for a long time.

The famous Stephenson book, which he called his "bible" containing a record of political deals and contracts was included with the papers the prosecutors submitted.

HAVERSTRAW, N. Y., July 26. — Five persons were seriously injured, one of them fatally, when a large motorbus, board from Montpelier to New York City, crashed into the sedan in which they were riding.

The injured are Philip Basile, driver of the sedan, Benjamin Cherkins his mother, Mrs. Mollie Cherkins, and Dorothy and Beatrice Liebermann, all of New York. They were taken to the Nyack Hospital.

Cabinet Splits

A delicate situation has arisen in England, due to the departure of Prime Minister Baldwin to accompany the Prince of Wales on his Canadian trip. It was at first announced that the Earl of Balfour, lord president of the council, would be head of the government during the prime minister's absence. Then plans were changed and official announcements stated Sir Austen Chamberlain, foreign minister, was to be acting prime minister while Winston Churchill, chancellor of the exchequer, was delegated leader of the lower house. Since Churchill and Chamberlain both are desirous of succeeding him, Baldwin, eager to avoid trouble, chose Sir Austen, leader of the moderate wing of the conservatives while Churchill becomes idol of the die hards.

COMMUNISTS PROPAGANDIZE IDEA OF "SOVIETS!" IN CHINESE REVOLUTION

(Special Cable to The DAILY WORKER)

MOSCOW, U. S. S. R., July 26.—Pravda, the central organ of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union, declares today that the crisis in the Kuomintang in China puts the question of the organization of Soviets on the order of the day in the development of the Chinese Revolution.

At the same time it declares that the role of the Chinese bourgeoisie in the revolutionary movement is a thing of the past.

Pravda emphasizes that the change in the various phases of the development of the Chinese Revolution and in the Kuomintang imperatively demands new slogans and new tactical departures.

It calls for an ability, pursuing the true Leninist path, to find the actual link that can be taken hold of at a given moment in order to draw all revolutionary forces into a common chain of struggle.

The various efforts demanded of the Chinese Communist Party at the present moment are enumerated as follows:

1. The paramount task of the Chinese Communist Party at the present moment is to energetically resist the reactionaries within the Kuomintang.

2. The Kuomintang organizations in which Communists wield the dominant influence must be raised against the Central Committee.

Pravda points out that the Communists should immediately start a propaganda for the idea of the Soviets, so that if the struggle to win the Kuomintang fails, to call the masses to organize Soviets as a condition of the further development of the revolution; opposing the Soviets, as organs of the toilers, to the organizations of the bourgeoisie.

It is point out that while it is correct today to issue the slogan for the organization of Soviets, it was not correct to issue this slogan before, when the revolution was passing thru a different stage of its development.

For a long time the supporters of the idea of the immediate organization of Soviets wished, says Pravda, thru merely proclaiming the new slogan to substitute the struggle for winning the masses within the Kuomintang, for the demand that the Communists be immediately called upon to leave the Kuomintang.

The supporters of this idea (Trotzky-Zinoviev-Radek) were trying to force the masses to jump over such phases of the development of the revolution as they had not yet lived thru.

ALL CHINA FEDERATION OF LABOR CALLS UPON JAPANESE LABOR BODY TO CHECK IMPERIALISM

The All-China Labor Federation protests, in the name of 2,500,000 organized Chinese workers, against the sending of troops by the Japanese imperialists to Shantung. Under the pretext of protecting the lives and properties of Japanese residents in Shangtung, they in reality want to crush the Nationalist Revolutionary movement of China. They do not know that Japanese residents in China have never received any harm whatever.

The said Federation hopes that Nihon Rodokumiai Hyogikai heads the Japanese class-workers in a joint strike for the withdrawal of the Japanese troops from Shangtung. "Eradicate totally the Japanese imperialists and secure for both the Japnese and the Chinese proletariat a true liberation."

COMMONS HEARS BRITAIN FACING NEW MINE CRISIS

Unemployment, Lower Living Standard Seen

By TOM BARKER.

LONDON, July 26.—[illegible] conditions in the [illegible] industry were the [illegible] analysis [illegible] by Ernest Brown, member of Parliament for Leith, Scotland.

The [illegible] Labor Party [illegible] the effect of [illegible] hour [illegible] and [illegible] of wages [illegible] the [illegible] of [illegible] with [illegible] Lower Pay.

The conference, [illegible] the miners, [illegible] with February 1926, the miners in April of this year produced 2.50 hundred weight per shift more. In Northumberland the increase is 2.21 hundred weight, and the decrease in wages 8.87 pence. In Durham the increase is 3.14 hundred weight, with wages 7.83 pence less. South Wales shows an increase of 3.26 hundred weight and the men lost to the tune of wages 2.55 pence.

Never was there so much unemployment insurance paid out in Nottinghamshire. In Durham the 22,624 miners working in May, 1924, had fallen to 21,724 in May 1927—a reduction of 30,500. That figure of a single district," Mr. Varley hurled at the Government benches, "That figure gives some idea of the ghastly tragedy now overshadowing the mining industry of this country. Men are planning for work at any collier today."

Disease of Capitalism.

Mr. Varley thought some benefit might be gained by substituting co-operative selling agencies, but he added: "The disease at the heart of the British coal industry is competition between the coal owners themselves. Exports in January were 1,067,000 tons for which 17,200,000 tons received on February. Such was the effect of doubling the export quotients, that 70,000 more tons were exported, and the amount received was 2,000,000 less."

"The French colliery," continued the speaker, "was rarely an act of self-protection against the practices of British coal owners in undercutting the market at the cost of their miners. There was more intimidation and victimization than ever before. The union was treated like a leper. The mines belonged to the bosses.

French Imperialism Takes Another Step Toward War Upon the Soviet Union.

The heavy sentences imposed by French courts upon eight Communists yesterday, ranging from five years imprisonment and deprivation of civic rights for long periods, together with fines, follows on the heels of the raid upon the office of the Soviet Union staff of the Chinese Eastern railway, operated jointly by the Soviet Union and the Chinese, conducted by French concession police.

Paris dispatches contain more than a hint of a rupture of relations between France and the Soviet Union and the trials of the Communists have been utilized to the limit by the French imperialist press and the Poincaré government.

Practically all of the leaders of the French Communist party are under indictment or in jail, the legal preliminaries to the militarization of the French masses have been arranged by the Bourcour bill, a general offensive against the French working class is in progress—in other words, French imperialism is taking much the same measures against the masses and the Soviet Union that British imperialism has taken.

The French government is joining in the offensive against the Soviet Union. In France as in Great Britain every effort is being made to suppress the labor movement and deprive it of its militant leaders.

To the mass of evidence already accumulated we must add the recent developments in France as showing the growing threat of war against the Soviet Union.

In every imperialist country the same developments are to be noted. They are sharp and clear as in the European nations, or somewhat disguised and confused as in the United States, depending upon the intensity of the class struggle.

But in every country the Communist parties have the same task—that of informing and mobilizing the masses against the war danger and against their national imperialists.

Here in the United States there is, because of the dominant role of American imperialism, and the powerful propaganda agencies of the ruling class, an insistent necessity for the broadest possible united front against the war danger and ceaseless work among the American masses.

The Oil War Is an Old Story.

Rather belatedly the kept press of the United States has discovered the fact that a world-wide war rages between the American Standard Oil trust and the British Royal-Dutch Shell. This fact has been reiterated and elaborated in the columns of the Communist press so many times during the past decade that to most of our readers it is an old story. The important fact today is not the oil war itself, but the fact that it is openly recognized by the official newspapers of the ruling powers of the United States and Great Britain. It indicates the sharpening of the general conflict between these two powers as was clearly revealed at the naval conference at Geneva.

No one should think however, that Walter C. Teagle, head of the Standard Oil company of New Jersey is playing the game of the British concern headed by Sir Henri Deterding, because Teagle has long opposed the proposition of New York Standard oil to fight for trade relations with and even political recognition by this government of the Soviet Union. Sir Henri, head of the Royal Dutch Shell group has long held the idea of becoming master of the great oil lands in the Caucasus, and has continually speculated on the fall of the Soviets in order to have a free hand in that part of the world. He has on many occasions made himself ridiculous by predicting that on a certain date the Bolshevist government in Russia would collapse. He has been one of the prime instigators of anti-Soviet political fury and is influential in the present British conspiracy against the Soviet Union. The chief competitor of Deterding in the Caucasus has been the Teagle concern, the New Jersey Standard Oil company. Teagle also gambled on the fall of the workers' and peasants' government in Russia to such an extent that he bought an equal partnership with the Nobels in Russian oil fields, that had been nationalized by the Soviet government. Thus they gambled on the fall of the Soviets in order to make legal by force their spurious claim to lands they had "bonzhi" from the Nobels, who could not sell them for the simple reason that they did not own them. This is one of the motives behind the attacks upon the Soviet Union by such miserable sycophants of capitalism as the late secretary of state, Charles Evans Hughes, an oil trust lawyer, and the present occupant of that office, Secretary of State Kellogg. The British oil trust also competes with, or rather co-operates with, the Standard Oil of New Jersey in France, Italy, Germany, the Scandinavian and other countries. Deterding of Britain has frequently used the threat of ruinous competition against Teagle of New Jersey in order to force Teagle to follow his policy. So besides his own Russian interests, Teagle also hesitates at the contemplation of the cut-throat oil war in fields where the two big oil trusts "cooperate." Mr. Teagle, however, is after all a part of the Standard oil group and has gone to England in order to confer with Deterding and inform him that he will have to abandon his "co-operation" in case Deterding remains stubborn and refuses to recede from his position of trying to block an agreement whereby Standard gets Soviet oil concessions on the threat of a price war—or face a fight.

Spurred on by the threat of exhausted oil fields and because its world struggle with the Royal Dutch the Rockefeller oil trust is perfectly willing to abandon its olympian "moral objections" to dealing with the Soviets and is now striving to get the assurance that the Russian government has to offer in the way of concessions and Teagle of New Jersey will have to follow that policy even at the cost of "sacrificing" his investments with Noble & Co.

The attitude of the Standard of New York and its spokesman, Ivy Lee, is a tribute to the power of the workers' and peasants'

Essay on Propaganda

By A. HAMILTON.

Lenin wrote in "Left Wing Communism," "So long as the question was (and so long as the question still is) one of gaining the vanguard of the proletariat for Communism, just so long and so far will propaganda take the first place."

Certainly it cannot be correctly said that more than a small percentage of the "vanguard of the proletariat" has yet been gained for Communism in the United States; consequently propaganda must occupy a position of primary importance in Communist activity in this country.

It is perfectly true that a Communist Party is NOT MERELY a propaganda society; it must take an active part in the class struggle; as it proceeds from day to day. But this does not mean that propaganda is to be relegated to the poor or disregarded altogether. We believe that one of the most serious defects of the Workers' Party is just in regard to its propaganda work, consisting in correct ideas in reference to this question, and a failure to combine the work with the proper efforts.

What Is Propaganda?

In "What's to Be Done?" Lenin referred to Plekhanov's definition "The propagandist teaches a large number of ideas to a single person or a very small number of persons; the agitator teaches a single or a very small number of ideas, but to a mass of people." Lenin comments on this definition as follows:

"If the propagandist deals, for example, with unemployment, he must explain the nature of crises, show their inevitability in present-day society, prove the necessity for the transformation of this society into the socialist society, in a word to supply a great many ideas, to such a number of ideas that they could not be immediately assimilated except by a few people. Treating the same question, the agitator will, on the contrary, take the example the most striking, the best-known to his hearers, for example, a family without work, dying of hunger; the increase of cheapness, etc. And taking advantage of this fact known to all, he seeks to give the mass a SINGLE IDEA, that of the extreme misery and the contrast of riches and the increase of poverty; he attempts to STIR UP discontent and indignation against this crying injustice, and leaves to the propagandist the task of giving a complete explanation of this contrast. For this reason, the propagandist works chiefly by writing, the agitator chiefly by speeches. For a propagandist, one does not demand the same qualities as for an agitator. Kautsky and Lafargue, for example, were propagandists; Blanc and Guesde, agitators."

Propaganda and Agitation.

To fail to recognize the fundamental distinction between these two forms of work is a serious and common error. One variety of mistake is to confound all efforts to disseminate Communist ideas, either giving the whole range a strongly propagandistic character, in the sense of being of interest only by a few or a strongly agitational character intended to reach the masses indiscriminately, excessively simple; too much emphasis on general ideas and revolutionary conclusions.

Another variety of error is to set up an artificial division between propaganda and "activity," between which we try to teach the workers and what we try to get them to do. The watchword of the "Economists" (re-exposed by Lenin, who showed the destructive effects in all forms of revolutionary work is ACTION by the masses. Lenin wrote: "To set up in addition a third activity (i.e., besides agitation and propaganda), A. B. consisting in 'pulling the masses' certain concrete action, is an absurdity, for the 'pull,' as an act in itself, either completely naturally and inevitably the theoretical treatise, the propaganda pamphlet, the agitational discourse, or else represents a fanciful conception of future." But the "Economists" called "propaganda" the work of spreading ideas, and "agitation" the work of "pulling the masses to certain concrete actions."

This erroneous "Economist" view not only confused the relation between the dissemination of ideas and the work of rousing the masses into activity, (which are but parts of the same process) but also the distinction between agitation and propaganda. This distinction rests upon the fact that the masses are not of uniform composition, but are divided into the masses in general on the one hand, and the comparatively small minority of actual or potential leadership on the other; the response of these two general divisions to the effort to spread the ideas of Communism is different, and on the other hand, the specific methods and material properly to be used in reaching them are different.

The masses come to accept the revolutionary ideas only gradually, in consequence of the development of capitalism into a stage of stagnation and decay, with the economic and political crises connected therewith; thus the lessons of long experience in the class struggle.

The Objective of Propaganda Work.

But a certain minority of the workers are at all times, whatever the general situation is of a revolutionary character or not, capable of grasping more or less thoroly the ideology of Communism, even long before the masses come to that point, otherwise there would be no Communist movement at the present time in the United States. But we should not assume that the present membership of the Communist movement includes all those capable of understanding Communism and inclined to accept it; for it is by no means true that large numbers have never been made sufficiently acquainted with the ideas of the Communist movement.

The chief therefore is distinctly understood that the objective of PROPAGANDA work at present is not to secure a response from the broad masses, but rather from the small minority of more advanced and capable elements scattered thruout the masses constituting the actual or potential leadership of the masses in their struggles. But simply because the NUMBER of those responding to propaganda work is known to be small, we are not therefore to minimize the importance of the work; on the contrary it is just these comparatively small numbers who must be won or the Party itself is unable to grow.

Redshirt Battalion Anti-Fascisti Will Be at Press Picnic

CHICAGO, July 26.—The Red Shirt Battalion of the Chicago Anti-Fascisti Alliance which was already become quite popular amongst the workers is planning to invade the 5th Annual Party Press Picnic to be held at the Riverview Park Grove. The labor press, the English speaking as well as the press of the various language groups, representing the militant section of the labor movement are quite arranging this affair which is being held on Sunday, July 31st.

The Red Shirt Battalion reports that on that day other workers may join their ranks, for whom they have uniforms available. Those who decide to join for the day may meet with the leaders of the Battalion at 19 S. Lincoln on Friday, July 29th at 8 p.m.

Party in Special Cars.

A great contest is being planned for the said popular paper. Since it is already a fact that The DAILY WORKER is the most popular labor paper, it has been eliminated from participation. The So. Slavic paper, Radnik, the Lithuanian paper, Vilnis, the Jewish paper, Freiheit, and many more will compete.

Entertainment is provided for. There will be such national known speakers as Wm. Foster, and Jay Lovestone. Singing will be furnished, by the Lithuanian and Freiheit Singing Society. Efforts are being made to stage a real sports event. A soccer game has been arranged with the Red Team as one of the contenders. This together with all the other many attractions should make the Party Press Picnic at the River-view Park on Sunday, July 31st really a big affair.

Special cars will be chartered for the occasion. Tickets are now selling at 75 cents for the round trip.

Co-operative League Fights Against War.

Delegates to the Northern States Co-operative League convention, held at Minneapolis, representing co-operatives in Minnesota, Wisconsin, Michigan and South Dakota, besides laying plans for the further strengthening of the co-operative movement thru more intensive organization and a widespread campaign of education regarding the necessity for building of co-operatives, showed that it is keenly alive to the threat of war as it affects the populations of agricultural states by adopting a resolution against the new slaughters planned by imperialist Wall Street.

Also noteworthy is the fact that it recognizes the necessity of raising its voice in behalf of the labor movement generally, as was evidenced by its demand upon Governor Fuller for the release of Sacco and Vanzetti.

Co-operatives, such as are being undertaken in the northern states, can, with proper leadership, become powerful weapons in the hands of the farmers and also the workers and it is to the credit of the convention of the co-operators that they clearly perceived this fact and have laid their plans accordingly.

Neither is it to be assumed that it is unnecessary to conduct propaganda on a broad scale, in order to provide every worker with the papers, only of becoming acquainted with Communism. On the contrary, it is impossible to determine mechanically who or where are those who will respond to the Communist message; it is therefore necessary to conduct propaganda on the broadest scale possible; there is a "mass" characteristic to propaganda, existing not in the possible response, but in the latitude of the work.

Activity in the Class Struggle.

Another error at this point consists in the belief that efforts to get the workers to take progressive and militant steps are sufficient that specific Communist propaganda is unnecessary, if the workers can just be stirred up to fight the bosses, that is sufficient.

Such "practical" work of course is absolutely essential providing absolutely necessary experience for the masses and the mass leadership but of itself it will never build the Communist movement, or produce the proletarian revolution. Progress and efficiency in the class struggle are not necessarily REVOLUTIONARY. The Marxian ideology must be injected for all the militancy possible to be developed has only a temporary value and is bound to degenerate into opportunism and reaction. The masses must be continually "sold" on the IDEA LIMITATIONS of the most militant fight possible to make under the capitalist system, and their fight against specific and immediate evils must be given a more extended horizon in order to display as much as possible a case for more general and ultimate aims.

Is Successful Propaganda Work Possible?

Due to the special difficulties met with, some appear to incline to a negative answer. It is correct that under existing American conditions a high degree of response to propaganda work is not to be expected. But the conditions of American capitalism and the world situation provide a sufficient situation for winning a certain number of the more thoughtful and obscure elements for the revolutionary movement here more easy and certain, for instance, the general characteristics of the capitalist system set forth in our literature specifically described as displayed by American imperialism. Such terms as "relative surplus" are very important for an understanding of such a period as the present when the "efficiency of production" is being rapidly increased, were to be explained in the light of American capitalist practice.

Much better use should also be made of the modern developments in the art of journalism, illustration, typography, etc., the expense required for this would be compensated for by the increased saleability and effectiveness of the literature.

Propaganda and Building the Party.

In the Eleventh Congress of the German Communist Party recently held, Comrade Thalheim declared, "Our task is not to create new cadres, to train new functionaries, to fill our Party with fresh and vigorous blood so as to strengthen our vanguard, for we can in no ways carry out our task to keep with these sections of the workers which at present belong to us."

Such is the task of the to train Party, with a membership relatively very much higher, so much the more is the task of the W. P. to organize and develop. It is of course cannot accomplish this task without effective propaganda it is equally impossible. The Party cannot be built simply by devoting to the workers courage, wisdom, loyalty in the immediate struggles by attacking and exposing the reactionary leadership and the capitalists themselves. It is absolutely necessary to explain clearly just what Communism means in order to train the comrades made in this work into permanent and capable members of the Party.

One of the greatest difficulties in the United States is the almost complete lack of ideological foundation within the working class not only for developing the revolutionary movement, but even for the simplest form of fight for immediate demands. Even a militant struggle on questions of the day demands a certain comprehension of the capitalist system, and the special difficulties met with in the United States with its huge industries, etc., make a widespread acquaintance with at least some of the general conceptions of Marxism almost necessary.

To do this is absolutely necessary for much progress to be made in any phase of Party activity, and especially is the propaganda phase of the work important, in order to greatly increase the existing forces included in the Party and its sympathetic following, and to augment those by other forces of leadership more or less touched with the Marxian ideology and hence inspired and led to more energetic and correct action in stirring up and leading the masses into struggle.

DRAMA

Superb Acting from Tolstoy's "Power of Darkness"

A well-chosen cast from the Moscow Art theatre not merely acts Tolstoy's drama, "The Power of Darkness" at the Fifty-fifth Street Cinema, but lives the thing. Chosen for their ability to portray certain peasant types, they achieve a dramatic intensity that is certainly not seen in the performances of the Hollywood luminaries.

Tolstoy's story is a sordid one, running the gamut of murder and infanticide, that deals with the exploits of a wife who married a rich peasant for his money, fell in love with the village lout, a romantic young hero who played upon an accordion. The mother of the lout wanted her son to be happy so she bought poison to give to the wife of the old man in order that she might quickly dispatch him and marry the son. All of which was achieved to the accompaniment of sustained dramatic acting. But no sooner had the lout married the old man's widow than he grew weary of her and seduced a young lady of the house who was supposed to be the daughter of the old man by an earlier wife. A baby was born and buried beneath the house.

During the entire action the lout's father, a stupid, drunken old moujik, passed through the scenes as a secondary figure, devoutly religious. At the time a marriage was arranged for the mother of the murdered infant and at the wedding the lout wandered out of the house and decided to hang himself from a barn rafter. The other end of the rope was attached to the drunken body of the girl's grandfather and so the only laudable impulse the lout ever had was frustrated. Wandering back into the house he broke down and confessed his numerous crimes which, to say the least, was a rotten stunt, inasmuch as he did not confer with the other parties to his bloody performances.

When the police came in the religious father gazed at them with the vitrified expression of religious fanaticism and administered them not to interfere with one who was confessing his sins. The final scene showed the lout and his wife, reconciled and in chains, tramping toward Siberia with a band of convicts. Their expressions evince the idea that they are happy in having discovered Christ-unity and the captions on the screen do the rest.

It is a powerful portrayal of Tolstoy's slave religion, which resulted misery and exhorted the slaves under the czar to accept anything that came in this way. In this particular case the moral was that wealth made this deluded table pair sordid and unhappy and that poverty and chains softened with Christianity made them sublimely happy. Fortunately the religious clap-trap occurs at the very end of the picture.

The Fifty-fifth Street Cinema is a small place, but has within the few weeks of its existence, gained a notable reputation for the films it has shown.

Most amusing was an added feature showing the old epitaphs in American cemeteries.

The entertainment is worth two hours of anybody's time.

JULY RAISES BIG QUESTION FOR ALL FUR WORKERS NOW

Lefts Will Fight For Agreement Terms

The importance of July increases for fur workers is now coming to the fore and the scab workers are beginning to realize that this demand, which was one of those for which the Joint Board workers went out on strike, will not be granted unless the strike is won.

According to the agreement signed with the union at the end of the last strike the fur workers were to obtain a raise in wages on July 1. In most cases due to right wing pressure this did not materialize.

In view of the failure of the right wing and A. F. of L. leaders to help the workers in any way in this problem many right wing fur shops are now openly admitting the Joint Board representatives to deal with the bosses. Daily there is increasing evidence that the Joint Board was right in raising this issue, and there is repeated proof that the scab union is going to do nothing about it.

No Raises.

The Jewish Daily Forward has been talking loudly about July increases, but the workers are asking "Where are they?" They have not seen them, and in many instances where the workers have come to the A. F. of L. union asking for help in getting increases, they find the next day that the spokesman of the shop is discharged.

This happened at the shop of A. Spiegel where 18 workers were discharged on the day after they had gone to the right wing asking for the July increase. There are rumors that the bosses are now doing what they did in 1926 before the strike, discharging workers and then rehiring them at lower wages and longer hours if they can induce them.

Want Protection.

During the past few days, large groups of discharged registered workers have gathered in the office of the scab union demanding to know why they had been discharged, and also demanding the union's protection.

The answer of the A. F. of L. officials in several instances was to call on the police to disburse these workers; and several of them were beaten by the police and by the strong arm squad which fills the right wing headquarters.

No wonder there is a growing movement among the hundreds of registered workers, who now realize that they were misled by the right wing officials, to rejoin the Joint Board and ask for pardon.

Tomorrow's Meeting.

The subject of July raises is to be one of the important matters taken up tomorrow night at the membership meetings of the four Joint Board locals. Local 1 will meet in Royal Hall; Local 5 in Stuyvesant Casino; Local 10 in Stuyvesant Casino; and Local 15 in Astoria Hall. The meetings will begin at 8 p. m.

In addition to the question of July raises, the workers will again take up the suggestion of conviction of the 10 for cent strike assessment and will hear a report on the recent peace negotiations.

SHOE WORKERS' MEETING TONIGHT

The District Council of the Shoe Workers' Protective Union has called a membership meeting tonight at 8 o'clock at the Amalgamated Temple, 21 Avion Place, to place before the members the facts regarding the expulsions of Locals 13, 34, 35 and 68, and the revocation of the charter of the District Council by the Fitzgerald-Nolan machine. All members of the Shoe Workers' Protective Union are urged to attend and learn the facts.

WUHAN REACTION FIGHTS WORKERS AND PEASANTS

Communists Victims of Suppression

HANKOW, July 26. The campaign against the Communist is continuing here and assuming ever more malignant forms as the attack spreads to include the whole labor and peasant movement. Counter-revolution has set in to the accompaniment of frightfulness. The local papers, whose editorial staffs have been changed, print the most violent articles against the Communist Party.

Peasant Unions Still Fight

General Ho-Chen who effected a coup in Wuhan and now acts as dictator of the Kuomintang demands that Communists be removed from leadership of the workers and peasant organizations and important state offices and expelled from the territory controlled by the Wuhan government.

The peasant unions are still existing in environs of Wuhan and are fighting heroically against attempts to disperse them. The agents of the reaction in Wuhan are carrying on a vicious repressive policy designed to devastate the peasant unions everywhere in order to reduce the peasant masses to the condition of defenseless slaves.

The leaders of the revolutionary organizations are in a very oppressed state and take the attitude that they do not dare venture to resist the agents of reaction. The general council of the trade unions decided to protest against the occupation of the trade union premises by troops but fear that such a protest may result in dispersing of the general council itself. Two members of the right wing of the Kuomintang have been appointed to the posts of ministers.

Il Lavoratore Barred From Mails for Sacco-Vanzetti Freedom Plea

For publishing an article demanding the immediate unconditional release of Sacco and Vanzetti, Il Lavoratore, Italian Communist weekly newspaper, had its July 23rd issue barred from the mails. No other reason would be given by the postal authorities.

UNION LEADERS BETRAY STRIKE OF TRACTION WORKERS; TO BOOST FARE

While the Mayor has assured us that no man will be discharged for membership in the union, you may still be discharged for infraction of the rules."

Colemans' statement that men would not be discharged for membership in the Amalgamated was belied by Quackenbush's declaration that the I. R. T. policy toward the Amalgamated has not changed. It is also evident that the "infraction of the rules" clause will be invoked to dismiss men who are active in a genuine drive for the organization of the tractions men.

Fired For "Insubordination."

Preceding the City Hall meeting, twelve motormen were fired by officials of the I. R. T. Six were fired because they had refused to break in scab motormen; six others lost their jobs for joining the Amalgamated. The workers who refused to instruct the strikebreakers in the operation of the subway trains will not be reinstated, according to Frank Hedley, president and general manager of the Interborough.

Although Vice-President Shea of the Amalgamated repeatedly declared that a strike would immediately follow the dismissal of any man for attending a union meeting no action was taken by the union officials. J. H. Coleman, general organizer for the Amalgamated, declared that by learning about the dismissal of the men, "We want to prevent an immediate walk-out. But we'll vote to strike tonight."

The men who were fired for attending a union meeting are: George H. Williams, Felix Beggs, John Beggs, Christopher H. Rumph, William Stack, Earl E. Hoak, Hubert Williams, Ritter, Thompson, Meehan, Delacey and McEnerney were fired for refusing to instruct strikebreakers.

Twenty other men were called to the offices of the Interborough earlier in the day and were given a severe third degree, J. H. Coleman stated.

Ten thousand policemen were mustered by Police Commissioner Warren in preparation for the threatened strike.

[illegible] Mayor Hylan [illegible] the world [illegible] suggests that [illegible] workers on the city lines should work and [illegible] conditions and for wages which [illegible] more [illegible] [illegible] families. I extend my most heartfelt sympathy and hope that this struggle will end in a complete victory of right over might.

"Mr. Untermeyer's suggestion a few hours before the strike, was the best way out, was for the Amalgamated Association to withdraw its demand for the recognition of the men's union, is typical of this so-called special counsel who thinks only in terms which will benefit his Wall Street clients.

"Some of the more popular newspapers, I see, refer to Mr. Hedley as 'hard-boiled.' If called-shod autocrats, to the public welfare and callous disregard for the living conditions of his thousands of conscientious employees may be characterized as 'hard-boiled'—then the characterization is correct.

For Fare Raise.

"I ask the millions of people who are the cash customers of Messrs. Hedley and Menden and who in the last analysis are the tax-payers of this great city to exercise great care to see that [illegible] franchise corporations are not successful in using this strike as a scheme to dynamite a fare increase.

"I warn Mayor Walker and his appointee Police Commissioner Warren that the people of New York will not tolerate any police violence towards the striking subway workers. It is bad enough to be compelled to strike for a living wage, but to have the police, acting under orders from Warren, brutally clubbing peaceful strikers, is a condition that the people of New York will not tolerate.

"I ask the fair-minded public of this city to stand by and let the workers realize their just demands.

"All charges of inconvenience must be laid where it properly belongs at the door of the Smith-Walker administration.

Earlier Statement.

In a statement issued early yesterday afternoon, Hylan said:

"The investigation now being conducted by the Transit Commission through its counsel is window dressing to create the appearance of public service and thereby divert the minds of the public from the plan they are devising to increase carfares.

"The two groups of bankers, one behind the I. R. T. and the other behind the B. M. T. believe that this well-thought out scheme called 'unification' intended to increase carfares can be put through by their powerful public officials and their scarecrow counsel, Samuel Untermeyer.

Lift Up Buckets.

"The scheme will, through stock grabbing in Wall Street, put hundreds of millions of dollars into the pockets of those who control the transit system. While the I. R. T. and the B. M. T. and their banking interests are today fighting for transit control the people can depend upon it that they will unite as one man against them.

"The Knight-Adler bill under which Mr. Untermeyer is conducting these hearings provides that the title of any or all transit lines may be vested in the city in return for a lease.

Untermeyer For I. R. T.

"Which situation is clarified by the fact that under the guise of a suit to prevent the city entering into the dual subway contracts, Samuel Untermeyer as firm was actually acting in the interests of the I. R. T. and not paid $25,818.72 by this defendant, the public has a right to suspect that Samuel Untermeyer is again resorting to his old tricks and while talking seemingly in the public interests is actually working for the railroad corporations.

"This in addition to the fact that Governor Smith's Public Service Commission has just given increased carfares in several instances, gives public cause for the fear that this is an attempt to [illegible] the same [illegible] over [illegible]."

The meeting is arranged by Sections 2 and 3 of the Workers' Party. All workers are invited to attend.

HOCHMAN DRIVE IS BRANDED AS FAKE BY HYMAN

Dues Collecting More, Says N. Y. Manager

The organization drive in cloak and dress shops announced by Julius Hochman of the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union is branded as a fake by Louis Hymnn, manager of the Cloak and Dressmakers' Joint Board.

"This talk of an organization drive is buck," says Hymnn. "Hochman and the right wing cannot do any organizing for they have not the men or the morale. Actually they have no intention of organizing, but plan simply n dues-collecting drive.

"They are anxious to force the unregistered workers to pay them dues and taxes; and if they cannot do it any other way they will try to take them off their jobs. On the list of shops in which the rights have already called strikes are well-known union shops whose only offense is that they still cajoled workers who will not register with the International.

"Sigmnn is now bringing into New York the notorious conditions that have for a long time existed in outof-town shops under his control. Workers have complained that the union made agreements with them to continue piece work and the payment of wages far below the union scale. They simply handed a resignation slip a when label.

To Collect Dues

"Since no such non-union organization was merely a dues-collection agency, as is the present alleged cammoflaged organization. The right wing has no intention of trying to drive out the non-union shops; they could not do it even if they tried. Instead, they will have a big time collecting any dues rather, for even the workers whom they terrorized into registering do not regard them as "depot them."

STALIN BRANDS NEW YORK AMERICAN ARTICLE AS PRODUCT OF SWINDLERS AND BLACKMAILERS IN CABLEGRAM

On June 12 the special feature section of the New York American carried an article alleged to have been written by Joseph Stalin wherein it was made to appear that he assailed Borodin, the Russian adviser to the Hankow Nationalist Government. The article was so preposterous that The DAILY WORKER endeavored to obtain information from the editorial writers of the New York American as to where and how they obtained the article that they claim was written by Stalin and edited by a certain Cecil Winchester. None of the editors of the "American" could or would explain the source of this obviously fake article. We let the matter drop, considering it merely one more example of the base and unprincipled journalism of the sewer rags published by Hearst.

Yesterday we received a cablegram from Comrade Stalin as follows:

"The Argus Clipping Bureau sent me a clipping from a June 12 issue of the New York American, containing an interview which I am supposed to have given to a certain Cecil Winchester. I hereby declare that I have never seen Cecil Winchester and never gave him nor anyone else any interviews and I have absolutely nothing to do with the New York American. If the Argus Clipping Bureau is not a bureau of swindlers it may be surmised that it was misled by swindlers and blackmailers connected with the New York American. Signed: Stalin."

The utter unreliability of "news" carried in the capitalist press about affairs in the Soviet Union and for that matter in the rest of the world is again emphasized by the exposure of the Stalin interview forgery. It is even questionable if such a person as Cecil Winchester exists. The name itself is probably an invention of some hop headed pen prostitute connected with the Hearst sheets. This repudiation of the alleged intreview by Comrade Stalin is one more reason why workers who want to be informed on facts in the interest of the workers should rely solely upon the columns of The DAILY WORKER, which alone of all English dailies in America has means of obtaining correct information and the honesty to publish it.

BUSSES IMPORTED TO NEW YORK TO CARRY CROWDS DURING STRIKE

GETTING READY FOR THE NEXT WAR

71st Regiment, numbering about 1,160 officers and men, departing for a two-week stay at Peekskill. When the next war starts they will be ready to fight for American capitalism.

Letters From Our Readers

To The DAILY WORKER:

Just got through reading your paper of July 19th, about the subway workers going out on strike in a week or so. I hope you will print this, so other subway workers may see the light. A good many men I have spoken to are ready for a strike, and will fight like hell to win. This job is like being in jail, so hot and such little wages. I worked for the I. R. T. a few years ago I got black listed, now I am back again, and want to see a union, and I know your paper will back us up. There is a man by the name of Lensky. He is 100 per cent rat. He is with the rotten brotherhood. He got a good many men fired. I am putting many men wise as I can.

Yours for one Big Union.—Worker Correspondent.

To The DAILY WORKER:

Some time ago I heard a pro-election speech of the Socialist Party in South Brooklyn. A corpulent gentleman spoke on the Sacco and Vanzetti case for a full hour, telling the people what a frame-up it was and that the masses must act, by voting a full Socialist ticket. I believed him all along, until a few days ago.

I happen to work on Union Square, and was lucky enough to attend your meeting, from a distance, up at a window, and saw the actions of those yellow socialists in kicking a young leader of the working class off the speakers' platform and calling in the police to disperse the crowd.

I changed my mind about that yellow Socialist politician. I saw that the election speech was a lot of hot air,—the limit. Sec. I wish you would send one of your speakers down here in South Brooklyn on a Saturday night. I hope you will.

Ship's Crew Reveals That British Imperialism Rests On Quicksands of Discontent

By J. LOUIS ENGDAHL

DISCONTENT among the workers! There is plenty of it on an ocean liner. "The Mauretania," of the Cunard Line, the British steamship corporation, proved to my opinion.

In the early evening, several days at sea, with the first stormy weather we had had out of Cherbourg, France, the mood pushed to the social hour for passengers in the social hall. [illegible] In fact he [illegible]

"The union is no good!" says I. I had to come to sea, because I couldn't get a job on land," and "the $15.00 a day that we got was not enough to live on," echoed dozens of [illegible]

I had gone to sea in 1911, first joining the British navy. That was 15 years ago. He is still a sailor.

Most of his wrath was directed against Havelock Wilson, head of the [illegible] Union, who brought about the [illegible] last year by joining with the [illegible] in the betrayal of the British general strike. The sailor was quite proud of the fact that some members of the Sailors' Union had joined the general strike in spite of Havelock Wilson's efforts to keep them at work.

"Then it is Havelock Wilson that you are opposed to and not the union itself," I pointed out.

But it was difficult to persuade him that the union was getting much for him. The betrayal of the general strike and the surrender of the officialdom, had brought a big reduction in wages. Conditions were worse than ever. The men get no pay, for instance, for the few days they are in port between trips. This made it impossible for this sailor, when in port at Southampton, England, to go home to see his wife and children. The railroad fare was too high.

Under these conditions he was prone to feel that the money paid in dues to the union was a waste.

"But you can't get a job on a British ship without belonging to the union," he added.

Here was smouldering material, that could be set into flames against organized labor, when lured into the grip of fascism.

Out on the deck, among the many passengers watching the sunset, were a host of Rotarians, who were returning from the International Congress of Rotarians just held at Ostend, Belgium.

These Rotarians were puffed with the success of their gathering. Nearly 5,000 had come over from the United States. Five thousand more had assembled from the various countries of Europe, with several thousand from England. These middle class professional and little bourgeois men, many of them with their families, were quite proud of the strength they had shown. Business was good in the United States and "Silent Cal," their economic pride, was going to be re-elected president in spite of the anti-third term sentiment.

These Rotarians are suggestive for themselves and for American greed, with faith in their organization and their social system; quite the opposite from the lack of faith of the British sailor in his union and the enmity of his ship.

They came on the Special Train at Gare St. Lazare, the railroad station on Paris from which we departed for the coast, letting everyone know who they were. They couldn't have been more conspicuous if they were wearing the nightshirts of the Ku Klux Klan, the hooded orders of their ilk. They had their special "dinner" on board. And one of their number even had published, on the ship's press, a "Bulletin" on the wind-up of the Ostend gathering, that had been addressed by Albert, King of the Belgians, himself. They had not understood him. But that had made no difference. They gurgled over this king, just as much as American "high society" had fol gloriously on the visit to "The States" last year of Queen Marie, the bloody matriarch of Roumania.

The passengers generally are interesting. Here is an Italian from Worcester, Mass., who has just been back to Italy. But he cannot find words bitter enough to condemn the Mussolini regime. Everyone is against the fascist tyranny, he says.

There is a man that looks like a worker. He might be a lumber worker from the Pacific Northwest. But he turns out to be a Swiss, who has a farm in Southern California. He rented out the farm so that he could make his third trip back to Switzerland. He says this trip is his last. He discusses rather sympathetically the invasion of agriculture in California by Japanese farmers.

Two Salvation Army officials, also from California, give much of their time to reading "Inner Centre," the look by Sinclair Lewis. They say they read "Elmer Gantry," "Arrowsmith" and "Main Street." They like Sinclair and his book, but their religious beliefs prevent them from using bad language. [illegible] expressed the [illegible] saying out their lips, as people in Cal[illegible] who are acquainted with Aimee McPherson, and that the newspapers are not far wrong in what they have published about her. When they finish the book, they feel a little better. Lewis has mentioned "the army" only twice and quite favorably.

A student, who has spent three years in Paris, says he is going to teach French in Vanderbilt University, in his home state of Tennessee. He denies any sympathy, however, with the "monkey trial" at Dayton.

The mother with the young son, who cannot make the waiter understand a single word of what she is saying, comes from Turkey.

The waiter explains that he was a nurse during the world war, and that besides English, he also speaks, French, German and Italian. But the Turkish stumps him.

Incidentally, he adds, "When the next war starts the only army I am going to join is the Salvation Army," and he points over toward the table at which sit the two officials of this doughnut-peddling organization.

Between the disgruntled sailor, no doubt typical of the majority of British workers who follow the sea, and the opposition to army service harbored by the waiter, speaking for big sections of the British working class on land, the indications are that all is not rosy for British Imperialism.

There is a British military officer on board with half a dozen titles following his name. He keeps aloof from the rest of the passengers. On the last evening of the trip he is selected to preside over the "Concert" held to raise funds for various sailors' charities, in both Great Britain and the United States.

Down in the engine room the steam is kept at high pressure in the boilers by flames fed with oil. The Mauretania is an oil burner, converted from a coal burner. On a trip thru the engine room I was told that this change alone had cut down the working crew by nearly 100 men, many of them thrown out of work, being coal passers. One reason for the change, I was told, was the frequent occurrence of coal strikes in England and the United States. The chances of oil were more docile. There was no break in the supply. So with oil as fuel the four giant propellers continue unceasingly, voyage after voyage, to pound the waters of the ocean at the rate of 180 revolutions per minute, making the fastest trips of any ship afloat.

Thus the old order feels secure, at least temporarily. But there are many indications showing that its security is built on the quicksands of social unrest.

Not the least of these indications was the fact that up forward, travelling in the [illegible] passengers, were Montagu Norman, Governor of the Bank of England; Dr. Hjalmar Schacht, president of the German Reichsbank, and Charles Rist, deputy governor of the Bank of France. They were all on their way to Wall Street to get a hand-out from America's international bankers.

Results of the Plenary Session of the Executive Committee of the Communist International

The speech by Comrade Nikolai Bucharin, another installment of which appears below, is a complete estimation of the war danger facing the world today, and at the same time important for its restatement of the fundamental tactics of Bolshevism in fighting to utilize the crisis produced by war for preparation for revolutionary struggles against imperialism. This speech and the decisions of the plenum regarding the threat of war should become a part of the arsenal of every sincere revolutionist who wants to participate effectively in the mighty struggles that we must face in the fight against the war conspiracies of the imperialist nations.

These are some of the considerations which show how complicated the situation has become. On the surface it would appear to be simplest to solve the question as follows: Since there is no war at the present moment, since it is impossible to that the slogans of the proletarian state should contradict the slogans of the Communist Parties, since there is a doubt that enormous masses of the people would support the slogan of peace, and since it is just here that the connection lies between the line of the proletarian republics and the slogans of the broad masses, then the slogan of peace should be made the central slogan for all Communist Parties. It would appear as the method of dealing with the question would be most suitable at the given moment. And yet this is not.

How should we approach the question of the central slogan for all Communist Parties, for the whole Communist International? In order to give an adequate answer to this question, we must find out the hardest knot in the present situation. The knottiest problem of the moment is in the relations between Great Britain and the Soviet Union, and in the attitude taken by the imperialist front towards the Chinese revolution. The driving mechanism actuating all these international entanglements, the multifarious conflicts, blockades, raids, etc., is to be found at the present time in China. The development of the Chinese revolution is the dynamic force throwing out of balance everything upon which the Soviet Union was depending for its peace for breath. The accelerated advance of constructive socialism in the Soviet Union coincides with a rapid development of the Chinese revolution, a development threatening to overthrow capitalist stabilization. It is in China and the Soviet Union that the knot of international relations is drawn the tightest.

The Chinese Communist Party is exposed to the direct fire of its antagonists. Can we then put forward the slogan of peace as the leading slogan for the Chinese Communist Party? At the present moment the Chinese Communist Party is faced with an emergency demanding a powerful fighting spirit, an offensive spirit. It might almost say, the strongest possible military revolutionary spirit. Should the Chinese Communist Party, the left Kuomintang, the corresponding military organizations, etc., support the slogan of peace, this would be tantamount to a slogan of peace with the traitor Chiang Kai-shek, a slogan of peace with the imperialists, etc. And this at a moment when the military struggle against the feudal regime and the imperialists is a constituent of the revolution still in the initial process of its development.

Should we proclaim the slogan of peace as central slogan, we should thus find ourselves in the position of advancing a slogan supposed to be suitable for all Communist Parties and especially for the Chinese Communist Party in its present capacity as outpost, and yet having the actual effect of dispersing the forces of one of the most important parties of the Communist Parties, [illegible] whole "political situation demands that precisely this Party should not cry for: "Peace with the feudal lords!" "peace with Chiang Kai-shek!" "Peace with the imperialists!", but rather that it pursues precisely the opposite course, and exerts its utmost efforts to intensify its struggles against these counter-revolutionary forces.

The Chinese Communist Party, at the present historical juncture, is not merely one of the sections of the Comintern, but a section upon which a historical duty of the utmost importance has been placed, a sector which bears upon its shoulders an enormous burden of political responsibility. This party is under the fire of the enemy and holds at the present a place of honor in the field of international revolution.

[illegible] without saying that a large number of other arguments could be brought forward against the slogan of peace, in so far as it is necessary to contend against pacifism, etc. After somewhat comprehensive debates in the commission we held it to be necessary to accept, as central and general slogan, the slogan of the defense of the Russian and Chinese revolution. Everything is included in this slogan: war against war, the transformation of the imperialist war against us into a civil war, the struggle for peace, action taken by the Chinese Communist Party under the slogan of the formation of a front against the imperialists, [illegible] Chiang Kai-shek, against the feudal lords, etc. Every action of the multifarious conflicts, blockades, raids, etc., is to be found at the present time in China. Current Events

By T. J. O'FLAHERTY.

AFTER much crying of "strike" the officials of the Amalgamated Association of Street and Electric Railway Employes cradled into their holes and left the thousands of workers who man the local transportation system completely at the mercy of Frank Hedley and his aid. Those fakers now claim that the upshot of the strike talk is a union victory. The companies did not surrender one iota to the men. The company union is recognized by the union officials but the company has not recognized the Amalgamated.

LAST year this same set of union officials sabotaged the strike led by Walsh, Lovin and other militants. The workers, that gave no substantial support by the officials of the trade union movement put up a real battle and compelled the company to spend over a million dollars to break it. Tammany policemen assisted the efforts of hired gangsters in beating the strikers. But our Tammany labor leaders did not have a word of criticism to make.

IT was quite evident from the beginning that the Amalgamated officials did not mean business in organizing the transit employes of the city. It is a brave undertaking. To accomplish the task it would have been necessary to mobilize the entire labor movement behind the drive. But not a bit of preparation was made. The reactionary union officials were bluffing and the company knew it. Frank Hedley could ignore them with impunity. He even refused to confer with them at the request of mediators. They took everything Hedley felt like hurling at them and swallowed their humiliation, if they are capable of experiencing humiliation.

THIS does not mean to imply that the labor fakers are bashful boys, for shrinking violets. It means that they are in collusion with Tammany political machine and are more concerned with playing for personal ends than organizing the workers. It was quite evident from the moment strikebreaker Fagone entered the situation that a sell-out was in contemplation. This had now fresh from wrecking job on the Interborough. He offered and appeared to be in good form for another of a similar nature.

IT is not surprising that the workers should lose all confidence in the reactionary leaders of the A. F. of L. They are part and parcel of the capitalist system. They have a heavy stake in the system. Fat bank accounts and big flat of course. A change of system would bring them no much discomfort as it would to the capitalists. Let the workers look for forty or fifty cent an hour. The fakers should worry.

IF the A. F. of L. chieftains have put forward a serious effort to organize workers into trade unions within the past few years, they have kept it a dark secret. The only efforts made in that direction have been by radicals. Thousands of textile slaves fought for one whole year under the leadership of Communists while the A. F. of L. Gompers-Lewis-Woll clique busied itself fighting the strike instead of fighting for the strikers. The job of organizing the unorganized is the task of the militant. There should be thousands of active, capable trade unionists throughout the American Federation of Labor who are capable of doing this job.

THE papers tell of Nicaraguans being slaughtered by United States marines with "no little success," as they were reporting the carefully cut of a mosquito hunt. Of course the Nicaraguans are "bandits" and "outlaws." Our marines little marine would never hurt a good Nicaraguan. But bandits and outlaws! Certainly the bandits and outlaws that have invaded Nicaragua should belong to the Marines.

COMMENT made in the column recently on the action of the Irish Free State in praising Citizen Ford for upholding American traditions against British wiles in the verbal slugging match at Geneva, drew and reply from a member of that organization. I stated quite correctly that there was not a peep out of the Irish political leaders of the Free State and the parent body of the Friends of Irish Freedom during the period in which this country was engaged in war with Germany. As a matter of fact members of the organization were advised by their officers to fight for British and American imperialism. It is time that it take another course would mean imprisonment, but they were "revolutionists" and if safe savage attacks on John Bull a safe distance could be taken

28 CLOAKMAKERS ARE KIDNAPED BY THE RIGHT WING

Gangsters Take Local 9 By Storm

Kidnaping the 28 workers of the Max Lerner cloak shop, 40 West 22nd St., yesterday afternoon, 20 right wing gangsters forced the workers to go with them to the International offices and register.

Twenty-six of them were held prisoners all day in the International office while the gangsters compelled two of the workers to go back to the boss and make him give the right wingers $300 for back "dues."

The Max Lerner workers are supporters of the left wing, therefore the method used by the thugs is a testimonial of new tactics on their part to terrify the workers.

Another right wing assault upon the cloakmakers' union took place late yesterday afternoon when the supporters of Morris Sigman broke the lock and took possession of the office of Local 9 located at 67 Lexington Ave.

While the International Rank right wing institution, bought the building last week, they had no legal right to use that method to obtain possession.

FUR DYERS GO ON STRIKE; ASK AID OF JOINT BOARD

Right Wingers Throw Away July Raises

Spreading picketing of the Stein Fur Dyeing Co., 500 East 26th St., still be continued this morning. The workers went on strike Tuesday, unable any longer to work under the terrible conditions that confronted them.

A committee of 20 workers representing the shop, from the office and appeared to be in good form for another of a similar nature.

It is not surprising that the workers should lose all confidence in the reactionary leaders of the A. F. of L. They are part and parcel of the capitalist system. They have a heavy stake in the system. Fat bank accounts and big flat of course. A change of system would bring them no much discomfort as it would to the capitalists. Let the workers look for forty or fifty cent an hour. The fakers should worry.

IF the A. F. of L. chieftains have put forward a serious effort to organize workers into trade unions within the past few years, they have kept it a dark secret. The only efforts made in that direction have been by radicals. Thousands of textile slaves fought for one whole year under the leadership of Communists while the A. F. of L. Gompers-Lewis-Woll clique busied itself fighting the strike instead of fighting for the strikers. The job of organizing the unorganized is the task of the militant. There should be thousands of active, capable trade unionists throughout the American Federation of Labor who are capable of doing this job.

THE papers tell of Nicaraguans being slaughtered by United States marines with "no little success," as they were reporting the carefully cut of a mosquito hunt. Of course the Nicaraguans are "bandits" and "outlaws." Our marines little marine would never hurt a good Nicaraguan. But bandits and outlaws! Certainly the bandits and outlaws that have invaded Nicaragua should belong to the Marines.

COMMENT made in the column recently on the action of the Irish Free State in praising Citizen Ford for upholding American traditions against British wiles in the verbal slugging match at Geneva, drew and reply from a member of that organization. I stated quite correctly that there was not a peep out of the Irish political leaders of the Free State and the parent body of the Friends of Irish Freedom during the period in which this country was engaged in war with Germany. As a matter of fact members of the organization were advised by their officers to fight for British and American imperialism. It is time that it take another course would mean imprisonment, but they were "revolutionists" and if safe savage attacks on John Bull a safe distance could be taken

LOCAL LABOR LEADERS WORKED WITH TAMMANY TO BREAK TRANSIT ORGANIZATION DRIVE AND BOOST SUBWAY FARES, SAYS WORKERS (COMMUNIST) PARTY

The same policies and tactics employed to disrupt the needle trades unions have been used to a nauseating extent in the campaign for the organization of the traction workers. They have been used by the same official elements cooperating with certain Tammany Hall leaders and to some extent with which has smashed unionism in the garment and fur industries.

The so-called settlement of the traction workers' organization campaign is not a settlement at all. It is nothing more than a repudiation by the brotherhood leaders of the strike which was called off, as a result of betrayal by Frayne, representing the American Federation of Labor, and the Central Labor Council leaders, who have been guilty of demoralizing the traction organization campaign and disheartening the forces of the traction workers with the result that it was impossible to force any settlement at all. It is absolutely no settlement whatever, and is only a repudiation

Democrats Rival With Republicans for Honor Of Cutting Tax on Rich

WASHINGTON, July 27 (FP).—Put us in power, and we'll cut your taxes deeper than the Republicans ever did. Such is the assurance of John H. Garner, ranking Democratic member of the house ways and means committee, in a statement July 27 urging reduction of the corporation tax from 13 and one half to 10 per cent, or lower than the reactionary Republican chairman of the committee will approve.

One More Chicago Gang Murder Kills Hitchcock

CHICAGO, July 27.—Gangland's guns which have spelled death to sixteen victims of a bootleg feud within the last few weeks, roared again here today and the body of Frank Hitchcock was discovered on a lonely marsh.

Hitchcock was kidnaped from his roadhouse by four men with machine guns who intimidated his wife and a porter, a mysterious telephone call to police directed them to a swampy expanse. They found the body of Hitchcock lying in a pool of stagnant water, dead. A bullet had crashed thru his head.

Find Dead Man.

A mysterious explosion yesterday which wrecked the interior of the one-family frame dwelling at 40 East Fifty-first street, disclosed the body of a man who had been dead for a week, believed to be Ernest Christianson, 35 years old. The body was found in the kitchen by the police, and according to Dr. James Boylan of St. Mary's hospital, the man had been dead from one week to 10 days.

Traction Workers May Still Strike in New York

he was reported to have said that the matter stands just as it did on Tuesday night.

Union Not Recognized.

Although the threatened strike had for its objective the recognition of the union this important point still remains unsettled as far as the Amalgamated officials are concerned.

Yesterday another batch of strike-breakers pulled into town and joined the thousands of scabs already quartered at the barracks at 145th street and Lenox avenue. Some of them shouted a jingo war song: "We Don't Want To Go Home." The strike-breakers have not been paid off yet but it is expected that they will be sent away in a day or so.

Tammany Deal.

At Tammany Hall and at the City Hall it was stated that the "settlement" was a decided victory. It was not said for whom.

Former Mayor Hylan when interviewed said that the "truce" had all the earmarks of a deal between Tammony and the I. R. T. with the Amalgamated coming in as a close second in the "victory."

Later in the day the Amalgamated officials stated that they are intensifying their efforts to organize the traction workers. J. H. Coleman said, "The way we interpret the mayor's statement we have a perfect right to organize the I. R. T. employes and we shall continue to do so." He claimed that three hundred and eighteen men were signed up at the "victory" meeting and that his organization is now using the largest force of organizers the Amalgamated has ever used.

Thruout the day the discredited Amalgamated officials kept whistling in the dark by asserting that they had sent out a corps of men to keep olive the strike atmosphere which was so prevalent prior to the sell-out.

Men May Strike.

When Coleman was informed late in the day that the I. R. T. vigorously denied that the Amalgomated was to be allowed to organize the traction workers, he said, "If the agreement doesn't mean that, then we can call a strike any time we feel like it, and we'll probably feel like it."

Late on Tuesday when there appeared to be some confusion as to the interpretation of the terms of the "settlement" James Quackenbush barked, "This agreement does not open the door to the Amalgamated. If there is anything that partakes of a construction of that sort, I'll take care of that mighty quick. If the Amalgamated tries to continue to break contracts between the I. R. T. Brotherhood and the company then there will be a renewal of the situation."

The contract between the I. R. T. and the members of its brotherhood specifies that no traction worker shall join any labor organization other than the brotherhood. It bars the Amalgamated and mentions it by name.

Read the current issue!

Extremely interesting and original.

If you're a worker you must know something about health from your own experience. If a radical or revolutionist you can't postpone health matters after the social revolution. Your efficiency in the work for your ideals depends on it. Don't ignore it. Are you a health crank? You're liable to kill yourself if you don't look out. You must free yourself from health superstitions. You're a rational! Are you an intellectual and think you know it all? You have to adapt how scientists say you are to real health matters. Learn how to go through your lemonade and how your health herbal won't be tampered through horoscopes which a rational health viewpoint may prevent or correct.

GREEN, HEDLEY, AND WALKER

TRAIL OF STRIKE BREAKING LABOR LEADERS RUNS FROM NEEDLE TRADES TO TRACTION

years in the labor movement," "honest service," these were the phrases with which the traction workers were beguiled and the incompetency, cowardice and reaction of the "leaders" covered up.

Hugh Frayne—Strikebreaker.

Hugh Frayne, pot-bellied, gray-haired and a-boss, his very presence in the situation a challenge for the bosses that the traction workers would be swindled, the strike sabotaged and the organization campaign demoralized, played the chief role. He was the official apologist. Fresh from his task of smashing the Ladies' Garment Workers' union and the Furriers' union, Frayne Tuesday night performed another service for the bosses.

Frayne sounded run one single note of struggle. Instead, he urged the traction workers to trust the very persons who had betrayed them, "to give a dollar's worth of work for a dollar's worth of pay," and, above all, to have always the interests of the public at heart.

In effect, he argued that it was "the public" which had the grievances, and not the traction workers.

Plenty of Advice.

The method was the whole tone of the meeting. Other speakers came to capitalist party politicians, ghosts of reaction of conservatism, the duty of the worker to his employer, a whole stream of poison was poured out upon the audience of 3,000 traction workers who had to be made to believe that a victory had been won by an opportunistic retreat.

"Listen to our officials, consecutively and with no opposition, give service at all times, work, work and stand by," said one speaker. "If you do not say how that would defeat the company, no one but the officials will," he declared to applaud. Wildly.

The Men Might Strike

In the back of the mind of every labor leader who was a party to the surrender was the fear that the situation might have got out of hand, that the men might strike in spite of the inke settlement. This fear shown by the "frimpy" deportment of the conspirators.

The slightest unusual noise, a motor-man or conductor in the Labor Temple, the entry of late comers, the popping of the flashlights of the cameramen, would almost throw the officials into a panic.

As the time to take a vote on the recommendations to accept the "settlement" and call off the strike approached, the nervousness increased.

"Accepting" the "Settlement."

Shop put the question.

A Schulman in the front row moved to accept.

Jim Walsh, one of the leaders of the strike last year, arose and moved that the terms be not accepted and the strike be not called off until the I. R. T. officials and the Amalgamated Association officials had signed a document embodying the terms with the signature of the union as witness.

Walsh was greeted with tremendous applause when he arose and his motion got a similar reception.

There was panic on the platform. Frayne consulted with Shea.

Shea refused to entertain Walsh's motion. There was another motion before the meeting.

Someone offered Walsh's motion as an amendment.

Shea refused to accept it. "It is contrary to the spirit of the previous motion," he said.

The audience was by this time sufficiently confused, the question was put, 25 per cent of the audience voted "aye" and Shea declared the motion carried.

As if moved by one lever, the platform full of "labor leaders" wiped their perspiring foreheads and leaned back with a sigh of relief.

Breaking the Spirit.

The biggest part of the job had been done. It remained only to make sure that no traction worker would leave the hall with a spark of rebellion left in his breast.

For this purpose the secondary battery of speakers was cut into action. The appearance of Walsh and the reception given him, concrete evidence that the workers had not forgotten the bitter struggle of last year, stirred them to frenzy.

The tone of the speeches changed. They lost their apologetic tone and became attacks on the "bolshevik" Hotheads, of course, were workers like Walsh who wanted something more than a second-hand assurance of "justice" and "goodwill" from Mayor Walker. "Keep the hotheads in the background and the cool heads in the foreground," said a representative of the moving picture directors' union.

Skilled Strikebreaking

"The mayor's word is better than any agreement," said another speaker. "How! we trust our mayor!"

"It's easy to get men to strike but it's harder to get them back on the job," said another. "Look out for the man that's always talking strike. These are the kind of men that ruin organization."

A barrage had its effect. There was a sign that the audience wanted to annihilate Walsh, but these speeches convinced the workers that those who did not want to fight, as a class, confronted with the full weight of the city administration, must sit silent.

The Big Issue.

But one question, asked by a shrewd young worker, gave a clear insight into what was going on in their minds.

"How we have to keep on belonging to the company 'brotherhood'?" he cried.

This typical, brutally and crudely put, was hurried out to die. Walsh, who had agreed not to discuss against the company union

"I guess you men will have to keep on belonging to it."

Shea's statement, probably the only truthful one made by a platform Tuesday evening, shattered the whole fabric of treachery erected by surrender.

The meeting adjourned amid cheers whose lack of enthusiasm was painfully apparent, and the mopping of flashlights as the cameramen took final pictures of the proceedings that marked the end of one of the most disgraceful campaigns in which traction workers were pawns and the traction barons and Tammany Hall had sold the basis for a raise in fares.

The Role of "Labor-Leaders."

Once more the official labor leaders have shown that they will not lead a genuine struggle of the workers. Once more they have shown contempt for all factors in a given situation but the workers. Once more they have shown that even their denunciation of company unionism is a fake—that they are so much a part of the political machinery of the bosses that for workers to trust them is to assure defeat.

What Is to Be Done?

What is the answer?

Rank and file organization based on shop committees, organization responsible to the workers, strike committees elected by the workers who have to do the fighting, absolute removal of every labor official who will not subordinate his personal ambitions to the needs of the workers.

The traction industry can be organized but it will never be organized if the workers wait for the Fraynes, Greens and their kind to do the job.

They must be considered as enemies of the workers as their records show them to be and they must be exposed, fought and defeated.

With the traction organization campaign in their hands the traction bosses are safe.

A "THIRD HOUSE" OF GOVERNORS TO FIGHT CONGRESS

Proposal of Maryland's Chief Magistrate

MACKINAC ISLAND, Mich., July 27.—A proposal that the governors of the 48 states organize into a permanent, cohesive body to combat the increasing grasp of the federal government in the affairs of the ordinary citizen, was advanced today by Governor Albert C. Ritchie, of Maryland, as the nineteenth annual conference of state executives drew to a close here.

"We talk and talk of state's rights, but what do we do to preserve them?" asked the Maryland governor. "We do very little. We might as well admit it. Centralization of power in the hands of the few in Washington is one of the greatest issues before the American people today, and it is one that must come sooner or later be met.

New Governing Body.

"Why can't we meet this situation by organizing ourselves into a real house of governors—League of Nations, so to speak, which could function so as to become in effect almost a third house in the republic. Such an organization, to be sure, could act only in a voluntary cooperative manner, yet if organized properly it would be in a position to deal with many problems now seized upon by the federal government simply because no other agency of government appears ready to deal with them. Half the issues that now eventuate should be handled by the states."

Governor Influences.

Governor Ritchie, a strong advocate of the rights of states and a potential Democratic presidential candidate, pointed out that twice in the last five years the governors have been summoned to Washington from their annual conference, each time to discuss enforcement of the Volstead act.

"If the White House," said Governor Ritchie, "can summon us to Washington, why cannot we, acting more than a second-hand assurance of "justice" and goodwill from Mayor Walker, "Keep the hotheads in the background and the cool heads in the foreground," said a representative of the moving picture directors' union.

Skilled Strikebreaking

"The mayor's word is better than any agreement," said another speaker. "How! we trust our mayor!"

Aimee Takes Over Funds

Something is wrong in Angelus temple, the "Four Square Gospel" venture of Aimee Semple McPherson. The kidnapping story was too strong for part of the congregation, and they have seceeded and are calling on their old leader to "confess." Now another row, over business methods, has resulted in Aimee (below) coming home and firing out her own mother, Mrs. Kennedy, (above) in order to take over the treasury.

GENEVA NAVAL CONFERENCE IS NEAR WIND-UP

GENEVA, July 27. In spite of the announcement from London that W. C. Bridgeman, first lord of the admiralty, and Viscount Cecil, leaders of the British delegation, are returning today to Geneva to resume the parleys the prevailing opinion here is that the conference of naval armaments cannot succeed. The first session will probably reveal such a deepgoing division on this point as to preclude any agreement of importance. The conference is approaching its final crisis.

Tolson Pessimistic.

Hugh Tolson, chairman of the American republican delegation at the conference and chief spokesman of his delegation, is frankly skeptical of the outcome.

"It was said, when it was days after the return of the British delegates," said Tolson, "that there is little possibility of agreement. The return of these delegates to Geneva appears to confirm that statement."

Reed British Compromise.

Hope for success was built up in interest on the part of the leaders of the British delegation in the proposal of Senator Reed, republican, of Pennsylvania, in which he suggested that the British battleship tonnage be increased to 525,000 tons, with 16-inch guns. This situation arises since the cancellation of the dead-lock which was reached last 47 minutes after the conference was called to order.

American delegates point out that the proposition of British would enable her to increase her ships far above the number of United States war vessels, while enabling her tremendously increase her naval power by arming her merchant men with 16-inch guns so they could be quickly converted into war ships. At the same time the smaller craft would be utterly useless to the United States because of the long distance between her naval bases. Britain has a net of closely woven naval bases throughout the world and could readily find smaller cruiser and cruiser in all parts of the world.

Means Unlimited Competition.

The outcome of the conference called by Coolidge to "limit naval armaments" will result in just the opposite. It will be the signal for the most intensive campaign of naval competition the world has ever experienced, with the two great imperialist powers in a mad race for supremacy of the seas.

Already the naval race is on in colonial and semi-colonial people full swing; the war of nerves are through naval blockades and actual working against restricting navies armed intervention under various pretexts, death gases and liquid fires and flights of bomb-carrying planes, powered explosives to hurl at enemy can bank capital is supporting more armies and populations. The demand of the fascist nations declaring Russia is to be extended to naval equipment that are being mobilized against the workers and peasants' government and in spite of the presentation of the American delegation to fat reduction of naval armaments it the naval conference scheduled for 1931 recognized that this is mere grap than imperialist rivalry between the ganda for home consumption and the United States on one side and Britain both the tory government and t and Japan on the other. They see in Coolidge government know that Ge the impending competition in arms the war is a farce and must collapse. world-wide preparation on the part of the imperialist powers for an attack THINK OF THE SUSTAIN on the Soviet Union and the treacherous FUND AT EVERY MEE

Browder to Tell of Chinese Revolution In Chicago Lecture

CHICAGO, July 27 — Earl R. Browder, editor of Labor Unity, just returned after spending six months in China during which he travelled through the Nationalist territory, visiting 40 large and small cities, interviewing several hundred leaders of trade unions, peasants' unions, Kuomintang, Communist Party, student leagues, merchants' associations and every phase of the Chinese Nationalist revolution. He was at the headquarters of the Nationalist government during the split with Chiang Kai-shek and in close touch with the leaders of the left Kpomintang and Communist Party.

He consulted with such men as Borodin, adviser of the Nationalist government, Tan Ping Shen, minister of labor and head of the All-China Labor Federation, and others. In addition to all these personal contacts and the direct information he has gathered, Browder secured access to a vast quantity of English translations of reports of the trade union and peasant unions covering the past two years of their tremendous expansion from a few hundred thousand members to their present status of thirteen million.

Browder's lecture will deal not only with the large political factors of the Chinese situation but will also give an intimate picture of the mass organizations of the Chinese toilers in the midst of their struggles.

At the close of his six months trip in China, Browder was a representative of the T. U. E. L. at the Pan-Pacific Trade Union Conference in Hankow, China, where delegates from eight countries and fourteen million workers gathered in the first meeting of its kind in labor history. Browder was elected as secretary of the permanent organization formed there, the Pan-Pacific Union Secretariat. He will also report briefly on this historic conference.

Browder speaks on Chicago, Wednesday, August 3, in the Northwest Hall, corner of North and Western Aves., at 8 p. m.

MARINES KILL SIX NICARAGUANS IN RAID ON SANDINO

MANAGUA, Nicaragua. — Word received here that Major Floyd's marines were ambushed by General Sandino's nationalist army and killed six of the natives is received here with considerable skepticism. Sandino's army has always fought in the open field so far, and is believed to be considerably inland from San Fernando, the town at which the ambush is said to have taken place.

Not a Fight.

Local military experts think that probably a demonstration of the natives of San Fernando, known to be antagonistic to the invasion and subjugation of their country by the United States naval forces, provoked the marines into opening fire and killing some of them.

This view is strengthened by the fact that there is no report of any loss suffered by the marines, except that "one marine was wounded."

As it is known that a considerable number of marines were wounded at Ocotal, where a battle was fought recently, but that their names were not mentioned, it would be easy, say the nationalist sympathizers here, for Major Floyd to have saved up these casualties to report from time to time when it is necessary to "fake" a battle to hide some massacre of unarmed villagers.

Thomas E. Campbell, former governor of Arizona, has always been in favor of swinging the saber at Mexico, and is therefore a logical successor to James E. Campbell is prominently mentioned as next ambassador to Mexico, but has not yet been appointed.

French Cabinet Officer Takes "Free and Easy" Attitude Towards Debt

PARIS, July 27.—"Nations, like men, have to learn to distinguish between business arrangements and friendly assistance," said Andrew Tardieu, member of the Poincare cabinet, today, while discussing the Berenger-Mellon debt contract. Tardieu, like most Frenchmen in public life, regards the French debt owed to Wall Street now, as something not to be paid back, as "France gave blood and U. S. gave treasure" in the world war. There are indications that the House of Morgan contemplates using a very pretty scheme, if this attitude persists, but Tardieu won't see it.

PHILADELPHIA, July 27. — Charges of forgery and numerous other accusations against his erstwhile manager, Jack Kearns, are the highlights in an answer filed in the Federal Court here by Jack Dempsey in reply to Kearns' suit for $419,000 filed against the former heavyweight champion. The suit was filed just prior to the Dempsey-Tunney bout here last fall.

Try to Send Borghi To His Death Among Fascisti of Italy

Attorneys for Armando Borghi, who has been ordered deported from the United States to Italy where he faces death at the hands of the fascisti, have appealed to the United States Department of Labor to permit him to leave this country at his own expense for some other country of his own choosing.

Over Four Months.

Borghi is a citizen of Italy who entered the United States as a temporary visitor on November 9, 1926. He is held for deportation to Italy on the charges that he remained in the United States beyond the four months allowed him and that he is an alien anarchist and is here in violation of the Immigration Act.

In answer to the first charge, Borghi has stated that it was his impression, after obtaining legal advice, that his visa was good for one year. It read, "This visa is good for one year provided the passport continues in force." Borghi attempted to have his passport extended. The Italian consul at Boston took it away instead, stating that Borghi was "not qualified to be an Italian citizen" because of his anti-fascist sentiments.

Is Anarchist.

As to the second charge, Borghi admits that he is a philosophical anarchist. He stated specifically in his examinations that he does not believe in violence against constituted authority or government officials. He is a highly intellectual and well-educated man.

His deportation in the face of his professed anti-fascist views means death—either execution under the forms of the fascist courts instituted specially to punish offenders or at the hands of the fascist mob. Borghi's house in Italy has been burned by the fascisti. His wife and children are detained and not allowed to leave the country for is being held as hostage for Borghi's father's return.

Legal aid for Borghi's defense has been secured by the American Civil Liberties Union.

Australian Delegation To Expose Immigration Sharks in Great Britain

MELBOURNE, Eng., July. The callous manner in which immigrants are being lured over to Australia by conditions which await them in Australia has come in for strong criticism from the Miners' Union, and the All Australian Trade Union Congress, which met recently in Melbourne, considering the appointment of a Trade Union Delegation, to visit England for the purpose of warning British workers against unscrupulous propaganda carried on by steamship and employment agencies who are misleading them by falsely representing the prospects in Australia. In Melbourne, it is estimated, there are ten thousand unemployed, and all other capital cities have large numbers idle.

In New Zealand Too.

Not only is unemployment rife in Australia, but the New Zealand Government has been compelled to put into operation an unemployment relief scheme, under which jobless receive from nine shillings to twelve shillings per day. This appears to be high in comparison with the benefit paid in England, but the cost of living must be taken into account.

Immigration for years past has been a prolific farce in Australia. Thousands of pounds have been wasted by immigration administration. At present a commission is controlling immigration, but is improvement is noticed.

Land Scheme Opposed.

There is much talk about founding a soldier settlement scheme for creating farms for settlement, but even if this were done no hope could be held out for new comers as thousands of Australians are landless.

There are vast tracts of land on which thousands of farms could be built. This land, however, is held by wealthy companies and rich squatters who are opposed to any settlement scheme which would not benefit them.

Seeing that the tory party of Australia is mainly financed by these people, one cannot expect the present Bruce-Page government to do anything but talk.

The Labor state governments, it should be added, have no control over immigration.

"Insult" to Horthy Gets Hungarian Washwoman Three Month Jail Term

BUDAPEST, July 27. — A Budapest laundry woman has been given three months' imprisonment for an alleged insult to Horthy, the Hungarian Regent. At a public demonstration someone in the crowd reproached the woman for owning a small sum of money, whereupon she cried out: "There is no shame in having debts. Horthy is a greater person than I am, yet he obtains loans right and left without any sense of shame."

Another man, Bela Reich, at a parade where Horthy was received with great pomp and ceremony, exclaimed to the crowd: "Fancy all this fuss over one person." He was at once arrested for insulting Horthy.

GOVERNOR FULLER BASKS IN REFLECTED GLORY

While Sacco and Vanzetti are slowly starving to death, unless they burn in the electric chair first, Governor Fuller, supposed to be investigating their case, has his picture taken amidst a group of trans-Atlantic aviators. Industrial Freedom versus Industrial Serfdom for 26,000 Traction Workers—This Is Still the Main Issue!

The traction barons, with Messrs. Hedley and Quackenbush of the Interborough acting as spokesmen, declared that they would risk the life of every passenger rather than allow the traction workers to escape from the serfdom of the company union.

This is the meaning of the defiant statements which they gave to the press. That they meant to carry out their threats is shown by the fact that they recruited thousands of potential scabs from the underworlds of half a dozen cities to replace workers whose lives have been spent in the traction industry.

Upon the head of the traction barons we must place the responsibility for whatever loss of life and injury would have occurred in the operation of New York's transit lines when the traction workers refused any longer to sell themselves body and soul to the traction lords.

Mr. Samuel Untermyer, whose favorite pose has been that of a friend of labor, saw fit to come to the aid of the traction barons. He is against strikes on public utilities, he is against the demand for the right to organize "at this time," he is for delaying action by the labor movement, he accepts the "yellow dog" contracts as an expression of the sentiment of the traction workers—in other words, he takes just about the same position that the traction barons assume.

Untermyer is AGAINST the establishment of an effective union among traction workers and especially because he has from time to time pretended to favor the organized labor movement, and because he has access to all sections of the capitalist press, his real role must be made clear to the traction workers and to the labor movement.

The same applies to other so-called friends of labor. They must not be allowed to hide behind vague phrases relative to "public welfare." It is upon the traction workers first and the labor movement second that the main burden of this struggle falls.

Untermyer himself has shown in the recent investigation that the traction interests are making huge profits. That the unionization of the traction industry will cut into their profits goes without saying. That they are able to pay better wages and bear the increased cost of better working conditions is just as true. If they were not it would not alter the fact that the traction workers deserve and are determined to have higher living standards.

If Untermyer and others who are so exercised over the "welfare of the public"—of which the 26,000 traction workers and their families are a part—let them point out that no raise in fares is necessary to compensate for the loss of the traction barons' company union and that better wages and working conditions can be paid for by cutting down the dividends of the traction barons.

For the labor movement and the Amalgamated Association of Street and Electric Railway Employes, for the traction workers themselves, the main issue is the right to organize.

Serfdom in the clutches of the traction barons or the greatest possible measure of freedom as part of the American labor movement—this still remains the issue in the present struggle and it is upon this basis that all the forces of labor must be mobilized behind the traction workers—to win in spite of official cowardice and treachery.

How Socialists Defeat Fascists.

A new article should be incorporated in the "principles" of the second international, the international of the great betrayal at the outbreak of the world war in 1914, the international that slaughtered the flower of the working class after the war in order that capitalism might remain dominant in the world, the international strike-breaker, the yellow socialist international. This article should read: "The proper way to fight fascists is to be better exponents in action of fascismo than the hirelings of Mussolini."

Altho not formulated, this article was put to the test in the revolutionary mass uprising in Vienna. The socialists, under the leadership of those heroes of "left social-democracy," Otto Bauer and Frederich Adler, had created an army in Vienna for the purpose of fighting fascismo. During the strike and street fighting the world was treated to the spectacle of this army in action against the fascists. They did not conquer their alleged enemies by fighting AGAINST the fascists, but by proving to the capitalist government that they were ready, willing andanxious to sink ever lower than the fascisti in fighting FOR capitalism AGAINST the WORKERS, and using its army for that purpose. No wonder the Seipel government viewed with indifference the building of this army—they knew it would do no harm to their cause, the cause of the master-class.

Otto Bauer and Frederick Adler and the rest of the "Austro-Marxists," who defame the name and pollute the writings of Marx, only pretended to be more radical than the Scheidemanns, the Noskes, the Vandervelde's, the MacDonalds, because the workers were more radical. They had to pretend to endorse the demands of the workers in order to remain at their head so they could be in a position to betray them at the first opportunity. Their opportunity came and they fulfilled their duty as defenders of the master class and plain, every-day scabs upon the fascisti.

At least one thing is certain in the Austrian situation and that is that never again can these apostates, these socialists in words and accessories of the working class in action, pose as one whit different from the rest of the menagerie comprising the leadership of the second international.

In New York City the socialists are trying to ape their Austrian brethren by trying to organize fascist bands against the rank and file of the labor movement.

Generally the post-war philosophy of the second international can be summed up as follows: "We assassinate the working class in those countries where the capitalists are unable to fight their own battles and prepare for our historical role as murderers of the working class in all countries not yet facing objective revolutionary conditions."

The "Amalgamated" Economics of Mr. B. S. Hardman

By H. M. WICKS.

UNDER the guise of an attack upon the DAILY WORKER for properly depicting in a cartoon the frightful effect of piece work upon the workers in the garment workers' unions, Mr. J. B. S. Hardman, known for years as Salutsky, contributes to the general fund of the labor movement by airing his views upon the "real basis of wages." The cartoon that evoked the diatribe of Hardman showed a half-starved worker held in the grip of a bestial foreman who forced him to work at the most frightful speed. The title of the cartoon, drawn by Wm. Gropper, was "The Right Ideal—Beckerman Advocates Piece Work."

Since Beckerman, an official of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers, is guilty of advocating piece work for the slaves in the men's garment industry, it became the duty of Hardman, the editorial scullion for Beckerman, to write an apology for this latest example of class collaboration between the Amalgamated machine and the employers.

We can pass over without comment his low billingsgate and cheap sneers hurled at the DAILY WORKER, the Workers (Communist) Party and the Trade Union Educational League and proceed to an analysis of Mr. Hardman's economics.

"Fundamentally," affirms Hardman in his editorial in the "Advance" of July 22, 1927, "it is the quality and quantity of work, the output, that determines the pay for work." For a half a column the apologist for Beckerman argues that "earnings of people in an industry are related to the kind of work and the quantity of work that they turnout."

According to the "Advance" editorial writer, time-wages (week wages) are likely to prevail in industries producing high priced goods, while piece-work is more likely in branches engaged in cheap, mass production. Again he returns to his main theme and repeats that "The question of wages is a question of earnings. It does not matter what one's nominal wages are, it is the earnings that count."

NO capitalist apologist could put up a more contemptible and servile argument for slave drivers. Hardman signs the same song that is sung by all defenders of intensive exploitation of labor from Professor Gustav Carver to Matt Woll. The rebuttal to assertion that production must increase before wages increase is that amongst organized labor the workers are on a small margin of profit for the capitalistic exploiter of labor that he cannot, under present conditions, pay higher wages. The only answer that anyone professing to speak for labor can put forth such a suggestion in view of the well-established fact that industrial workers in the United States, on an average produce in from two and a half to three hours values equivalent to their wages, and that the balance of the day they expend in unpaid labor for the employers is beyond comprehension, except on plain grounds of perfidy.

Only an utter ignoramus or a knave who indulges in vicious apologies for the master class would claim that wages rise or fall in proportion as productivity varies. This assumption is not true on either a national scale, or on an industrial scale, say nothing of applying it, as does Hardman, to a certain section of a given industry (that is to say, the New York men's garment industry, or that part of it wherein the Beckerman machine plays a role).

WAGES are determined not by the productivity of labor but by the value of labor-power—the socially necessary labor time required to produce the food, clothing and shelter necessary to enable the worker to reproduce his labor-power—to live in a given social environment and raise a family. The productivity of the industry in which he works may increase or decrease without affecting in the slightest his wages.

The general movements of wages, according to Karl Marx are "EXCLUSIVELY REGULATED BY THE EXPANSION AND CONTRACTION OF THE INDUSTRIAL RESERVE ARMY, AND THESE AGAIN CORRESPOND TO THE PERIODIC CHANGES IN THE INDUSTRIAL CYCLE." (Capital, Vol. 1, chapter XXV, page 698—Charles H. Kerr edition.)

Now let us see, starting from this premises, where the disgusting sophistry and specious erudition of this creature, Hardman, the miserable apologist for Beckerman, leads us.

In many industries piece-wages are preferred by the capitalist to time-wages because it enables him to get more out of the workers, to sweat them more. Force from them a higher degree of a higher intensity. A number of evils attend piece-work that do not exists to such a pronounced degree in time-work. It is a well-known that wages by the piece are, generally, nothing but the converted form of wages by time. In theory at least piece-wages are so regulated that workers receive the value of their labor-power. "It is not a question of measuring the value of the pieces by the working time incorporated in it, but on the contrary, of measuring the working-time the laborer has expended by the number of pieces he has produced." (Capital, p. 604.)

But there are certain very definite characteristics, peculiar to piece-wages that cause all union leaders having the interest of the workers uppermost to strenuously fight to abolish them where they do exist and fight against all attempts of the employers to introduce them. For years the pompadours in the men's paper offices of this country suffered under the speed-up system of piece-wages, and only after a determined fight were they abolished. Even in that conservative union—the International Typographical Union—there is not a single official, even of the most openly reactionary character, who would dare propose piece-work. The wrath of the membership would drive him from office in disgrace.

Experience has proved that piece-work in any industry must, in the first place, be of onerous perfection, if wages are to be paid in full. One need not be a Marxinn to readily perceive that this is a most fruitful source of capitalist cheating and between the workers in a given shop, but it sets the pace so high that only the fastest workers can realize a living wage. The desire for still more wages is an incentive for workers to labor more than the established union hours, and even to fight against attempts by the union officials to enforce all of a game of union hour. When the speeding system has operated for a given time and it is discovered that all the poor workers, by a tremendous expenditure of energy, are able to realize higher wages than week workers, the employer readjusts the piece-rate, usually by a reduction, or a lowering of the piece-rate and further premiums for still greater speeding.

BUT this speeding up also has its effects on the industry inasmuch as fewer men do the work required, with the result that the reserve army of labor increases. This increase in the unemployed in the industry also tends to force down all wages, so the logic of piece-work is not only to increase production for the benefit of the employer but to reduce wages instead of increasing them. Hence, by organizing and securing joint action of both employed and unemployed workers.

Instead of trying to lessen the production of the individual worker, every increase in production should be the incentive for a reduction of hours, a slowing up of individual production in order to absorb in idleness the reserve army, the unemployed. Only in that way can workers resist the encroachments of capitalist organized disorganization of living.

A union leader who takes any other view of the struggle and who indulges in capitalistic tweaks about increased production to increase wages is an enemy of the working class and an agent of the employer.

In the face of unimpeachable scientifically demonstrable economic laws of Karl Marx, and his pupil Hardman, breaks down. Nothing else may use the columns of the "Advance" from now until April to revile the DAILY WORKER, because it exposes their game and fights for the elementary interests of the working class, without ever indulging by a hair's breadth the economic laws that govern the society and that found them as matters of the workers' lives are paid to serve.

EMPLOYMENT CONDITIONS IN CLEVELAND GRUESOME; WORKERS TRAMP STREETS

(By NAPOLY, Worker Correspondent)

CLEVELAND, July 27.—In Cleveland, as well as in all other large cities, there are many thousands unemployed. These men are of various grades, the unskilled up to skilled workers and the overall wage earners.

In the former, efficiency, per employment of any kind does workers mean, the speed of work to the piece-rate, with very little regard for quality. Hence, the employer has no interest in the welfare of the worker, other than to get the most out of him during the hours he is employed.

Detective Agencies.

In contrast with refusing the applicant's work at any wage he chooses through their lackeys—maintenance-of-work bureaus which are more of a detective agency than anything else.

For example, take any department store in general and the May Company of Cleveland in particular. Every morning between the hours of nine and eleven, applicants for the situations are privileged to enter the employment offices where they are given a large blank to fill out. Many quit indisgust before they are half finished with the blank. Some of the questions called for are: What nationality are you? What languages are spoken in your home? Will you join the company insurance club for workers? Will you keep secret amount of your salary? Dozens of other questions of a similar nature are asked and those who are able to fill out the entire blank are interviewed by the employment chief in charge, and are told that as soon as a place is open, they will be sent for.

Choose Lowest Paid.

In a situation of this sort, the employers can pick their choice of the lot at any wage the bosses want to pay and hold all over the workers' heads with the reserve group list always ready to take their places.

Those workers who pack a lunch and carry their overalls to work, face even harder conditions than their white-collared brethren. In going from place to place, they are told "nothing doing today." One of the best known factories where unemployed workers stampede to is the Fisher Body this Co., a subsidiary of General Motors. There every morning, day in and day out, only Sunday excepted, from [illegible] gregate, hoping to be taken on. Applicants are [illegible] men are in need of work, or for such [illegible] the morning [illegible] the office where the men are permitted to stand. The chilled feet hundreds are forced to wait outdoors. This is not so bad in the summer, but in the winter, when the mercury [illegible] zero, and below, it becomes a serious matter for those unfortunate enough not have the warm clothes necessary to withstand the rigors of the weather. The misery and hardship of unemployment are best realized when four and five hours [illegible] the door opens and the employment clerk appears and selects the men he has decided on for the day.

Workers Need Unions.

That such conditions exist are due to the fact that the employers' associations of the automobile industry, the workers organized in unions. Several sporadic strikes of individual automobile factories or body factory have taken place only to be lost. This was natural, for the workers must realize that only by the solidarity and entire organization of all departments with concerted action will successful strikes be conducted. The time is ripe for organization. Energetic and resourceful leaders are the cryying need of the moment.

Voikoff's Assassin Not To Have Life Sentence Changed to Short Term

WAASAW, July 27. President Pilsudski has revoked the granting of commutation to Boris Kowecko, and the latter will have to spend life in prison, as matters stand now. Kowecko was lately found guilty of having assassinated Voikoff, ambassador from the Union of Socialist Soviet Republics to Poland. At the trial Kowecko admitted he was ordered to do it by Voikoff. The president made no effort to find out who ordered him, but there is [illegible] drive that Kowecko was an agent of the Russian government and financially supported by England. Life imprisonment in a Polish prison prevents the [illegible] from telling more, should he [illegible] so.

The Daily Worker Acknowledges Help Given to Carnival

TO ALL ORGANIZATIONS AND COMRADES WHO HELPED IN THE DAILY WORKER CARNIVAL AND FAIR

"Dear Comrades: The DAILY WORKER wishes to acknowledge the splendid co-operation and support given to The DAILY WORKER Carnival and Fair, by the various party units, individual comrades and workers' organizations. It was directly due to this wonderful support that the affair was such an outstanding success. The success of the Carnival and Fair is a manifestation of the remarkable power of proletarian initiative, which can be developed among the workers of New York in their efforts to support The DAILY WORKER. The Management Committee calls upon the comrades who partiripated in the Carnival to continue their efforts to help The DAILY WORKER, so that the present attack upon the paper may be defeated and the establishmrnt of The DAILY WORKER as a mass paper may be quickly realized.

Civic Repertory Players To Continue at 14th St. Theatre

Eva Le Gallienne who returned from Europe yesterday informs us that the Civic Repertory theatre's performances had been further insured through the leasing of the Fourteenth Street theatre for a term of five years. Miss Le Gallienne will immediately begin on two productions. Rehearsals for her first play of next season, "The Good Hope" will begin next week, and also of the road company of "Cradle Song."

Hella Winn has been engaged by James La Penna to play the leading role in Paul Gerard Smith's latest play "White Lights." The musical comedy is scheduled to open in Stamford, Connecticut, August 12th.

Jed Harris has definitely announced two of his forthcoming productions. In association with Crosby Gaige, Harris will present Helen Hayes in "Coquette," a drama by George Abbott and Ann Preston Bridgers. "The Royal Family," a comedy by George S. Kaufman and Edna Ferber, will have its premiere some time in October. Other items in the Harris schedule are a comedy drama of newspaper life by George S. Brooks, as yet unnamed; a romantic comedy by John Erskine, also untitled, and "The Public," a comedy by Martha Madison and Eva K. Flint.

A new play by Daniel Rubin titled, "Women Go On Forever," in which Mary Boland will be starred, will be placed in rehearsal next week by Brady & Wiman in association with Sam Crothwell for Broadway showing.

Labor Problems and the Negro

Following Address by William Pickens, secretary Intercollegiate Association of New York, in summer session at Potter, N. J., July 24th, 1927.

"There is no 'Negro Labor' and 'White Labor.' There is just labor," and there are white and black people among the laborers. There is a greater proportion of the black than of the white population in the laboring class, and therefore anything that is important for laborers, is still more important for the colored laborers.

Organization, unionizing, the employment of organized power is very important for laborers. The relation of wages to the cost of living is very important for laborers. The legal rights of labor organizations; the rights of group bargaining for wages, the right of impartial treatment by the officers of the law in cases involving disputes between laborers and their employers,—these rights are vital to the interests of laborers, white, black, or other colors.

"Employers do not buy or exploit color; they trade in labor. The handicap of color, like the handicaps of age and sex, or ignorance, may give a selfish employer an extra advantage in robbing the laborer. But that would only mean that the Negro laborer will be more taken advantage of, and should, therefore, be more interested in the defense of labor.

"That means, logically, that there should be no Negro labor unions or white labor unions, but only labor unions, for laborers. A division in the ranks of laborers along the racial line is just as weakening as a division along any other lines whatsoever. When white workers force colored workers into separate unions by race prejudice or into the open shop by discrimination, these white workers are acting directly against the interests of themselves and of all other laborers.

"The Negro is not naturally an open-shop worker or strike-breaker. He is just willing as any other race on earth to get more wages and do less work. He is the same sort of animal as the rest of mankind."

Navy Boaster Fell But Broke No Records

WASHINGTON, July 27.—Lt. C. [illegible] Champion, Jr., navy flyer, failed by more than 2,000 feet to break the world's altitude record in his flight last Monday when he made a forced descent of seven miles after his motor had disintegrated and caught fire, the National Aeronautic Association announced today.

The calibration of Champion's barograph by the Bureau of Standards showed that the instrument registered 38,850 feet. The record is 40,820 feet, held by a Frenchman. Champion claimed a record.

National Guard Is Getting Ready for The Next Struggle

PEEKSKILL, N. Y., July 27.—Extensive military training is being carried out here by the 87th Infantry Brigade under command of Brigadier General George R. Dyer.

According to Major General William N. Haskell, commander and Colonel Edward McLeer, chief of staff of the New York National Guard, who left here today after reviewing the 2,000 men, they are learning the modern military technique that is necessary for warfare today. They left for two up-state camps to learn how the artillery is getting along.

Colonel J. S. Mundy, of Brooklyn, adjutant of the division staff, announced that the two staff commanders would go first to Pine Camp, near Watertown, and look over the 156th Field Artillery. From Pine Camp the inspecting officers will go to Fort Ontario, near Oswego, and inspect the 244th Coast Artillery of New York City, training under command of Colonel John J. Byrne.

Negro Paper Calls Ocotal, "Massacre By U. S. Marines

BALTIMORE, July 27.—[illegible]-membering the American invasion of Negro Haiti, with the loss of hundreds of native lives, the Afro-American declares in an editorial that "United States troops have no more business in Nicaragua than in Haiti. Like the average bully, the government backs up the policy of exploitation and robbery behind its alleged role of peacemaker.

"If the 29 marines killed and wounded [illegible] Nicaraguans, as does Afro-American, 'it wasn't a battle. It was a massacre in which well-trained marines using airplanes, machine guns, rifles and modern artillery fought against brave Central Americans armed with little more than a clear conscience.'

The Negro paper points Kellogg that nine Negroes have been lynched this year, that Georgia and Alabama report three times the usual killings and suggests that the marines be brought home from Nicaragua for duty in Dixieland.

Long Island Railroad Fights to Boost Fares

In an effort to force a 20 per cent boost in commutation rates, the Long Island Railroad has considerably overestimated the value of its properties. In order to secure a higher return it has valued its property at $265,000,000. The railroad's properties have been valued at $127,000,000 by a financial expert.

The figures were given before the transit commission on a hearing of the road to consider a raise in the commutation rates.

FURRIER DYE WORKERS ON STRIKE; ASK THE JOINT BOARD TO AID THEM

is seen in a statement made by a manufacturer and printed in Women's Wear yesterday.

The manufacturer paints a picture of present conditions in the shops of members of the Associated Fur Manufacturers where there is no union to fight the workers' battles.

"We manufacturers can dicker with workers on wage questions much more easily than we could when they were united," says the manufacturer. "I myself have been able to handle the wage increase question this year more to my own advantage than for some time past, chiefly because I can deal with the worker individually.

Throw Away List.

"Formerly—(meaning for the past two years, since the present Joint Board was in office)—the workers in the shop drew up a list containing each man's name, his present wage, and the increase demanded. Then the shop chairman presented it to the boss, who had to deal with the whole list at once.

"With conditions as they are now, I simply throw away the list and say that I'll deal with each worker individually on the wage question. And they're afraid to insist because they aren't united."

These are indeed the conditions reported by workers in Associated shops. "When they make complaints to the International about the situation," says the Joint Board, "they are thrown out of the right wing office and in some instances lose their jobs. We have many workers come to us asking forgiveness and telling how they have been taken off the job for insisting on the July increase. The workers of many Associated shops are asking our representatives to come to their shops and try to help them get the increase which we got for them in 1925 and 1926.

Forward Spreads Lies.

"The right wing, through the columns of the Forward, has been announcing that the fur workers of Associated shops have been receiving 812 and 815 increases. This is absolutely untrue, and this manufacturer's statement shows why. Because the Joint Board is not recognized there, and cannot help the workers to get them. In fur trimming and independent shops July increases have been given the workers as usual. Many manufacturers have given them without the intervention of the union, in other cases cases the workers have appealed to the Joint Board, and the increases have been granted after a conference.

When the Associated Fur Manufacturers came out in support of the right wing dual union, the Joint Board at the time declared that there was a secret understanding between the two groups in which one of the FAUR Wednesday shops, the Forwarding Company, owned by the International and A. F. of L. officials was to be favored. This has been proved by the fact that there should be no insistence on July increases.

An Eloquent Proof.

"Today's statement in Women's Wear is more eloquent proof of this claim than any words we can utter. In contrast to this employer's account of what is happening Associated shops today, we can show figures concerning July increases who the left wing plant Board was recognized in Associated shops.

"In 1925, in the month of July there took place 165 shop stoppages for increases, affecting 1706 workers for whom $11,942 was obtained in increases. In addition to this, the Joint Board succeeded in getting increase for 1684 workers of 168 shops without any stoppages.

"In 1926, in the month of July there took place 165 shop stoppages for increases, affecting 1706 workers for whom $11,942 was obtained in increases. In addition to this, the Joint Board succeeded in getting increase for 1684 workers of 168 shops without any stoppages. [illegible] increase of $13,789.50. Altogether, the Joint Board succeeded in getting, during the month of July 1926, for 3390 workers from 222 shops, the amount of $25,731.50 weekly. This does not include the increases that were obtained by fur workers of other shops as a result of this campaign initiated by the Joint Board. The records of the Joint Board taken from shop meetings indicate that July increases to the amounts mentioned above were gotten by almost every fur worker in the trade that year.

Wages Increases.

"In 1926, in the month of July, although the workers at that time were getting higher wages than in 1925 because of the increases that followed the general strike, the left wing Joint Board, nevertheless initiated a campaign for increases which resulted in 41 shop stoppages involving 695 workers. These secured increases, and in addition increases were obtained for 320 workers of 82 shops without any stoppages. Altogether the July increase campaign in 1926, as carried on by the Joint Board, secured $11,450.70 weekly increases for 1115 workers of 26 shops, in addition to the increases that were secured by the workers themselves as a result of this campaign. All these figures can be verified by Joint Board records.

"The importance of this campaign for increased wages when the season begins in July, can be judged from the results shown in the following table:

In 1925—cutters received 7% higher wages than 1924.

In 1926—cutters received 24% higher wages than in 1925.

Making the total for 1926 32% higher than 1924 before the Joint Board came into office.

Operators: In 1925 had 10% higher wages than 1924.

In 1926 had 19% higher wages than 1925.

Making 1926 [illegible] higher than 1924.

22% Higher.

Nailers: In 1925 received 22% higher wages than 1924.

In 1926 received 11% higher wages than 1925.

Making 1926 33% higher than 1924.

Finishers: In 1926 received 25% higher wages than 1924.

In 1926 received 18% higher wages than 1925.

Making 1926 48% higher than 1924.

"The manufacturer quoted in Women's Wear is right. Under the left wing Joint Board the workers were united. Under the Joint Board the bosses would not have dared to tear up a shop list. Under the Joint Board the workers gained they July increases, and other demands; and when the Joint Board is once again recognized in Associated shops the workers will control of their jobs and conditions will be restored."

The question of July increases will be discussed at a local membership meeting to be held this evening, 8 p. m. Local 1 will meet in Royal Hall; Local 5 in Stuyvesant Casino; Local 15 in Stuyvesant Casino; and Local 15 in Astoria Hall.

Successful Meeting.

After breaking up two open air meetings of the Joint Defense Committee at 110th St. and Fifth Ave., during the last few weeks, the right wing gangsters were foiled in their third attempt Tuesday evening.

More than 2,000 workers were present to hear of the needle trades struggle. The things seeing the determined spirit of the workers shrunk away without even attempting to attack the meeting.

Traction Workers Eager to Receive The Daily Worker

By H. RAPPO
(Worker Correspondent)

I went with another comrade to distribute today's (Tuesday, July 26) issue of the DAILY WORKER to the traction workers.

We arrived at the East 180th street station to give out paper to the trainmen and shopmen who usually stop work at 4:30 p. m. At the terminal we found out that the shopmen were working overtime because of the strike, and that they would probably work until late at night.

Send Up Bundles.

Workers were hoisting bundles to the top of the building. Many were standing downstairs handling the heavy lumber for the workers on the roof who were hoisting it up with ropes. All these workers standing at below rushed over to me to get their copies of the WORKER.

The workers who were on the roof were anxious to get papers also. So we tied bundles of papers to the ropes which pulled up the lumber. Many said, "This is the paper we want!"

When these workers went into the shop they took along bundles to distribute to their shop mates. Everyone accepted the paper enthusiastically. Only one old subway guard left cool. "Keep it, brother," he said, "this paper is not American."

Thug Gets Busy.

A company thug came over to me and threatened me. "Better quit or I'll call you in," he said. And you know I could get you.

But he was too late. We distributed nearly all the papers.

About half past four the workers had been supper on the roof of the shop, and you could see everyone reading a copy of the DAILY WORKER.

Operate on Herrick; Find Auto-Intoxication

CLEVELAND, July 26. Following a minor operation, which today followed the preliminary operation of a week ago, Myron T. Herrick, American ambassador to France, reacted from the experience, according to attending physician.

Taken suddenly ill at his Chagrin Falls mansion estate on July 17, the 71-year old envoy was rushed to the Cleveland Clinic Hospital.

Electrocuted at Work.

EASTHAMPTON, L. I., July 27.—Ira Sanveen, of Bay Shore, was electrocuted in the plant of the Easthampton Light Company when his shoulder came into contact with a large power switch at the same time that his head touched an overhead iron pipe. Several physicians worked over Sanveen for two hours in vain.

Berlin Police Arrest 700 Communists; Plan Drive to Smash Party

BERLIN, July 27. Preliminary to a campaign to smash the German Communist Party, the Government has ordered the arrest of seven hundred Communists returning to Berlin in motor trucks from a demonstration near Hamburg.

The Communist leaders who were arrested after leaving Berlin police, are being held on trumped-up charges of "destroying property."

Although the Berlin police shiked great pains to protect the parade of the Steel Helmets, a Fascist organization, they have repeatedly broken up demonstrations of Communists.

Eight Communists have been sentenced to prison for terms ranging from two to eight years, for "instigating riots" resulting in the death of a police sergeant.

Aimee McPherson And 'Ma' Quarrel Over Lord's Dough

LOS ANGELES, Calif., July 27.—Aimee Semple McPherson fainted today when told that her mother had caused her of cruelty and grabbing like holdup.

Mrs. McPherson was in her room, [illegible] preparing a statement, in her home. She swooned when she was told of Mrs. Minnie Kennedy's charges that Mrs. Minnie thanked a million dollars "at war."

"I had hoped to keep it all and let this thing settle itself," said Mrs. Kennedy.

"And I still love her because she is my daughter, but now she has told me to get an attorney. And she would get here, so that we could settle this in court."

Mrs. McPherson arranged the [illegible] result against me while she was away in the East and she has already hired an attorney. There is nothing left for me to do but tell my side of the story that I have tried to keep out of the papers."

"As long as there was work to be done, getting things organized, Mrs. McPherson wanted me but, I had as much right as she did.

"She wants me to resign, but why am I going to resign? I organized the tabernacle, took her to Europe. There she died. She and I are both dead.

"She sent me to Taft, Calif., and while I was in attendance to her business, she grabbed the real estate, the funds and the assets of the Temple.

"She made statements in the pulpit about checks for [illegible] wages that she said I had failed to collect, since I went away.

Results of the Plenary Session of the Executive Committee of the Communist International

The speech by Comrade Nikolai Bucharin, another installment of which appears below, is a complete estimation of the war danger facing the world today, and at the same time important for its restatement of the fundamental tactics of Bolshevism in fighting to utilize the crisis produced by war for preparation for revolutionary struggles against imperialism. This speech and the decisions of the plenum regarding the threat of war should become a part of the arsenal of every sincere revolutionist who wants to participate effectively in the mighty struggles that we must face in the fight against the war conspiracies of the imperialist nations.

In our conflict with Great Britain we cannot but maintain the fact that Great Britain has attacked us. We cannot define the situation otherwise, for the truth is that the attack has been made upon us by Great Britain. The policy pursued by the Soviet Union is a true peace policy. Our "attack", if we may thus express ourselves, has consisted mainly of our economic uplift. But this falls under quite another category.

The standpoint to be adopted in the question of defence of fatherland is even more altered by the latest events. We could not countenance a defence of fatherland among the "great powers" of the first imperialist war since these powers were imperialist, but in the proletarian republics the situation is entirely reversed, and the defence of the fatherland is the first duty of the proletarian parties. Where in the capitalist countries the Communists have been right in adopting the defeatist standpoint in the Soviet Union our proletarian fatherland must find the fullest support from all sides. There we must reject all "defense of fatherland," here it must be our first thought. This train of thought is rightly applied to the proletarian republics. But it is equally right when applied to such a government, to such a state organization, as that represented by the national revolutionary state in China, fighting against imperialism.

Lenin differed from many in dealing with perfect clearness with this question of the defence of fatherland. Whilst condemning with the utmost severity the social patriotic defenders of imperialist fatherlands, he never dealt with the question in such a manner as to assert that if a fatherland is not a proletarian one, there is no reason to defend it. Such was very far from such a simplification of the question. He designated the formula of "defence of fatherland" as vulgar and Philistine, as a justification of war, and considered that it had no other name whatever.

When we hear of the British defence of the mother country, for instance, this is nothing more than the current expression used to justify a war carried on by the British imperialist government. When we speak of the defence of our fatherland, the question is the justification of a war carried on by us. Lenin did not state that every war is an evil solely because it is a war. War is an evil, and it must be committed when it is carried on by imperialist states; but we can and must support a war, not only when we are working class in power and is defending its states, a war may be supported as I justified when it is a national and progressive national emancipation war against imperialists, even when the proletariat is not yet its leader. We Communists must therefore stand unconditionally for the support of such a war as that being waged in China for the defence of the Chinese fatherland, for the Chinese revolution.

Alliances with Bourgeois States. The Slogan of Fraternisation and of Joining Revolutionary Armies.

The question of the possibility of forming alliances with bourgeois states must be discussed. This question has already been raised at one of the Comintern congresses, during the debate on the program. Although such combination really came to pass, it some bourgeois states, under some looked for circumstances, and during might be applicable. Should really take sides with the Soviet Union against the imperialists, then it would be the duty of the Communist Parties to aid the anti-imperialist war being waged by such a state. Should for instance one of the eastern states, not belonging to the imperialist coalition, be desirous of entering into an alliance with the Soviet Union during a great conflict between Great Britain and the Soviet Union, a conflict into which the whole of Europe would be involved, and the proletarian state had the right, from the Communist standpoint, to enter into this alliance, then the Communists would be bound to aid this alliance.

Here we should not be dealing with an imperialist state, but with a state fighting against the imperialists and on the side of the Soviet Union; this would not signify that a bourgeois state as such, but a bourgeois state directing its fire against the imperialist regime. Such a state would not be a constituent of the imperialist coalition, but would inevitably, apart from its own volition, as consequence of the objective condition, play the role of a part of ammunition of an anti-imperialist coalition headed by the proletarian republic. One passage from Lenin's writing contains a direct reference to a revolutionary alliance of India, China and Persia, without any assumption of the existence of a proletarian dictatorship in these countries. You will therefore realise that this question too has its place on our agenda.

I must pass over a number of other questions of lesser significance and shall turn to a slogan which appears at the first glance to require no alterations conditioned by the development of present events. The elementary and specifically Bolshevist slogan of fraternization. This slogan was of far-reaching significance for us for our fight against war during the years of the first great international massacre.

Whilst the Executive Committee was working, we asked ourselves whether it would be necessary to undertake any alterations in this slogan as result of the present situation. Can we proclaim this slogan under all and every circumstances as we could in the years between 1915 and 1918? We came to the conclusion that the present situation demands certain corrections in this slogan. We applied the experience gained in our own civil war. The slogan of "fraternization in the trenches" played a role of enormous importance when the armies of the imperialists, the Czarist army, or Kerensky's army, fought against the imperialist coalition headed by Germany. Even when the Red Army was fighting against Yudenitsch, against Kolchak, etc., we then proclaim the slogan of "determination". Now, we did not proclaim it. This is a plain fact which you all remember.

How did it happen that the slogan of "fraternization" played so great a part during the imperialist war, to vanished as soon as the Red Army was formed, and this Red Army fought against our antagonists? We came to the conclusion that the slogan of fraternization is a slogan applying the disorganization of both parties thus fraternizing, also when two imperialist armies confront one another, the slogan of fraternization, in so far as it is actually realized, shakes both sides. This [illegible] case, it is [illegible] to [illegible] we did not proclaim the Hague affair we had our own revolutionary affair fighting against the [illegible] slogan [illegible] Palace of the Hohenzollern family [illegible] and public families of Russia [illegible] kingdom of the city of Moscow.

Bakunin, the father of the proletarian effort for after that was made toward the close of the period [illegible] revolution in France. Greater grew this [illegible] the revolutions of 1848 and 1871. Bakunin was [illegible] first to herald the coming of Socialism. Of him [illegible] Karl Engels wrote, in his "Socialism, Utopian and Scientific," as follows:

"And alike, upon the whole, the bourgeoisie, in their struggle with the feudality, could claim to represent at the same time the interests of the different working-classes of that period. In the French Revolution, yet in every great bourgeois movement there were independent cries of [illegible] that class which was the forerunner, more or less developed, of the modern proletariat. For example, at the time of the German Reformation and the Peasants' War, the Anabaptists and Thomas Munzer; in the great English Revolution, the Levellers; IN THE GREAT FRENCH REVOLUTION, BABEUF."

Thus, Babeuf, whose song, "Dying of Hunger, Dying of Love" was sung in 1796, to have brought regiments on the camp of Grenelle to the verge of mutiny, inspires the exhibition of the French Revolution at the Marx-Engels Institute in Moscow, 1927.

The exhibition was arranged in six large rooms. Research workers had gathered the material. Artists had arranged it in perfect and attractive order. Here was a thousand years in the times of the French Revolutionary Period awaiting the earnest student.

The first room, by way of introduction, showed pictures of many of those prominent in this period, with rare editions of the histories of these times, in French, German and Russian, written more than 100 years ago.

To give the names of them all would be to call the roll of those who rose and fell with the ebb and flow of the revolutionary tide. There was Mirabeau, Charlotte, Carnot, LaFayette, Bailly, Barnave, Malesherbes, and many more, but interest is turned to the original of a letter written by Charlotte Corday, to her father, four days before she murdered Marat. There is also the original of a book written by Albert Mathiez, professor at the University of Paris, on "The High Cost of Living and the Social Movement, Under the Terror."

The second room gives a picture of "the old regime" that was upheld by it in relation. Here are the works of Jacques Necker, the Swiss banker, who tried to solve the financial problem of Louis XVI. There is a copy of the order of arrest of Louis XVI, entered in no less large pictures of the royal family. Extremely interesting is the display showing the state of industry during the time, [illegible] industry, pottery and coach making, the [illegible] farmers with special attention to be [illegible]

In "Room No. 3" there [illegible] the working of those who took [illegible] class for the revolution. Here [illegible] Jean Jacques, the philosopher, had a big place, with the materialists, Baron Paul Henri [illegible] Denis Diderot, the Encyclopedist; Voltaire, [illegible] the Encyclopedia, and those holding [illegible] during this period.

In "Room No. 4" [illegible] the revolution in a [illegible] Here was [illegible] May 5, 1789. "Room No. 5" had an interesting display of the newspapers of the revolution. Here were the publications of the Girondists, Brissot, of Des Moulins, as well as their left leaders, Marat and Robespierre. There were original copies of the Journal Du Soir and the Journal du Matin, for August 26, 1792, of L'Ami du Roi (The King's Friend) for Oct. 1, 1791. This room also contained pictures of the military leaders of the revolution, with illustrations displaying the military technique of the times, especially the guns and cannon used.

"Room No. 6" was given over to an interpretation of "The Struggle Between the Fractions," or the different tendencies during the revolution. Brissot was shown as the leader of the right; Danton and Desmoulins, of the center, and Robespierre and Babeuf of the left. This room contained a list of "The Citizens of the Revolution" with their pictures, sympathizers in other lands, including such foreigners as the German poet, Schiller; the Americans, Washington, Madison, Paine; Wilberforce, of England, and Kosciusko, of Poland. Here were decrees, in the original, of the national convention, with original lists issued at the time of those condemned to die at the guillotine. The fall of the Girondists, May 31, 1793, is shown, as is the execution of the king and the queen, the struggle between Robespierre and Danton, and even the fact that Jean Paul Marat had a scientific bend of mind, being interested in electricity. There were original manuscripts of letters written by Babeuf, to his four-year-old son; also code letters by Babeuf, from jail, to his friends, who were trying to bring about his release.

There was also a special section devoted to British newspapers and illustrated engravings of the times, revealing the contempt that aristocratic and royal England had for revolutionary France, ragged and hungry. Many of these reproduce in spirit the attitude that the capitalist world has toward the Russian revolution achieved by the workers and peasants of the Soviet Union in our own time.

There is much that the Russian workers have learned and intend to learn about the French Revolution. The Marx-Engels Institute intends to help in the teaching.

"Room No. 5" had an interesting display of the newspapers of the revolution. Here were the publications of the Girondists, Brissot, of Des Moulins, as well as their left leaders, Marat and Robespierre. There were original copies of the Journal Du Soir and the Journal du Matin, for August 26, 1792, of L'Ami du Roi (The King's Friend) for Oct. 1, 1791. This room also contained pictures of the military leaders of the revolution, with illustrations displaying the military technique of the times, especially the guns and cannon used.

"Room No. 6" was given over to an interpretation of "The Struggle Between the Fractions," or the different tendencies during the revolution. Brissot was shown as the leader of the right; Danton and Desmoulins, of the center, and Robespierre and Babeuf of the left. This room contained a list of "The Citizens of the Revolution" with their pictures, sympathizers in other lands, including such foreigners as the German poet, Schiller; the Americans, Washington, Madison, Paine; Wilberforce, of England, and Kosciusko, of Poland. Here were decrees, in the original, of the national convention, with original lists issued at the time of those condemned to die at the guillotine. The fall of the Girondists, May 31, 1793, is shown, as is the execution of the king and the queen, the struggle between Robespierre and Danton, and even the fact that Jean Paul Marat had a scientific bend of mind, being interested in electricity. There were original manuscripts of letters written by Babeuf, to his four-year-old son; also code letters by Babeuf, from jail, to his friends, who were trying to bring about his release.

There was also a special section devoted to British newspapers and illustrated engravings of the times, revealing the contempt that aristocratic and royal England had for revolutionary France, ragged and hungry. Many of these reproduce in spirit the attitude that the capitalist world has toward the Russian revolution achieved by the workers and peasants of the Soviet Union in our own time.

There is much that the Russian workers have learned and intend to learn about the French Revolution. The Marx-Engels Institute intends to help in the teaching.

WITH THE Young Worker

School at Winchendon, Mass. Progress of the YWL Training

We have been very active in the last two weeks of our training course, in fact we have been so busy that we have had no time for mischief.

Our training program consists of five four-hour days of school and five hours of study each week. For text books we are using the Elements of Political Education and the ABC of Communism and in addition to these we have from twelve to fifteen books and pamphlets per student. Our library also has an interesting stock of books and reading matter.

We have a half hour of current events each day which has proved to be very interesting and at the same time keeps us in touch with the events of the world. We have already studied about the Chinese revolution, the Sacco and Vanzetti case and the attack on Soviet Russia.

Our evening are all planned out for us. Every Monday we have public speaking and on Saturday nights we have entertainment consisting of singing, story-telling, games, reading, etc.

The country surrounding the school is very beautiful, having numerous woods, fields and lakes everywhere about us. We are far away from the noisy city life in which most of the poor workers' children live such as in the big industrial cities of Chicago, New York and Boston. The reason because of our encouragement of study is thankful to those who have sent us here. Current Events

By T. J. O'FLAHERTY.

THE conflict between the Royal Dutch Shell Company and the Standard Oil of New York and its subsidiary, the Vacuum Oil Company is closely related to the Anglo-Russian diplomatic crisis, created by the the anti-Soviet campaign conducted by the British government. Here we have capitalist hypocrisy in its most brazen form. Sir Henry Deterding, head of the Shell interests upbraids the Standard Oil of New York for purchasing "confiscated oil." Of course Sir Henry lifts the whole question from the oily depths of bargain and barter to the high plane of bourgeois morality.

SIR Henry might have more success in this attempt if the government of the Soviet Union had not told the world that the discriminating oil magnate had tried to secure a monopoly on Russian oil for his own company a few years ago. He did not bother at that time about the oil's history, or what Czarist or other imperialist lost it to the Revolution. If Sir Henry could make an honest pound out of Russian oil he would not give a hang if it were stolen from the sacred sepulchre.

FURTHER proof that Soviet industry is advancing rapidly can be seen from the report sent out by the Soviet Union Information Bureau. The monthly oil output is 20 per cent above the average monthly output for 1913 and the export average is almost two and a half times the figure for 1913. Recent contracts with the American oil companies already mentioned call for the delivery of 100,000 tons of Russian oil for the Turkish and Indian markets. This is an awful wallop for the British. Our saintly John D. Rockefeller, is willing to do business with the Soviet union, even tho he hates the new economic system as vigorously as any Briton.

POLITICAL differences are creating new alignments in China with kaleidoscopic rapidity. Following Chiang Kai-shek's treachery the Kuomintang Party was split between extreme right represented by Chiang and the rest of the organization, from the wavering centre to the Communists. Now there is another split with the Communists and the left wing basing themselves on the workers, peasants and radical petty bourgeoisie, while the so-called moderates are making war on the Communists while at the same time pretending to fight the imperialists.

THIS policy is like that of the bureaucracy of the American Federation of Labor. They express hostility to both the Communists and the open shop employers. But in practice they fight the Communists only. The Chinese politicians who pretend to be opposed to foreign imperialism and native exploitation of the workers and peasants are showing their hypocrisy by arresting and executing militant leaders of the exploited masses. Well, Fergus and McGrady fight the so-called "open-shop employers" with dignified phrases and fight the militant trade unionists and Communists with the gats and clubs of uniformed and plain clothes thugs.

BECAUSE Jack Dempsey worked in a ship yard during the war, while more patriotic Americans were hunting cooties and dodging trench rats in addition to guessing, where the next bomb would fall or bayonet thrust was going to park, several survivors of the great carnage, and very likely survivors who served in U. S. Government, rather than where the bullets were flying, have served notice that Dempsey will not be allowed to desecrate Soldiers' Field in Chicago by staging a fight there with Gene Tunney next September.

DEMPSEY was banned a slacker and "yellow" because he did not don Morgan's uniform when the billions of Wall Street invested on the side of the allies seemed destined for the junkman in the form of waste paper. This young lad, by his performance on the backs of divers persons proved that he had plenty of guts and his war record proved that he had oodles of common sense. He can now afford to be as patriotic as the most eloquent four-minute speaker that ever worked for a dollar a year or led the contributors of the patriotic into his bank, and should another nice little war, not a cheap little butchering job such as we are now pulling off down in Nicaragua —hove in sight in the near future, Jack can invest heavily in Liberty bonds and perhaps stage a few boxing exhibitions behind the front for the entertainment of the heroes between target practise with the enemy.

RENEW RAIDS ON SHOP; FORCE 28 TO JOIN SIGMAN

Chicago Right Wing In War On Progressives

The right wing reign of terror in the cloak and dress industry was renewed yesterday when the gangsters who kidnaped 28 workers from the Max Lerner cloak shop, 40 West 22nd St., Wednesday, made another raid on the shop yesterday and forced the workers to go with them to the International offices. That four of the workers refused to accompany the other 28 on Wednesday and register with the Joint Board was the excuse given for the raid.

The four militant workers continued to work the rest of the day

TRACTION STRIKE "LEADERS" PACK; ALL READY TO GO

Coleman and Shea All Set to Desert Ship

The traction exodus is on. The fifteen hundred imported scabs are being paid off and shipped back to the cities they came from, Coleman and Shea, the "czars" of the high-salaried Amalgamated officials, are packing up ready to skip. They have done their dash. Tammany is satisfied according to Mayor Walker. Of course High Frayne is satisfied. The I. R. T. is satisfied. In the meantime, however, the traction workers will be forced to work twelve hours a day, seven days a week for a low average thirty-two cents an hour.

There was every indication at the Continental Hotel yesterday that the so-called labor leaders will "blow the lurg" before very long. Efforts by newspapermen to reach the "leaders" was impossible. Harry Calkins, the high powered and high salaried press agent for the Amalgamated Association took care of the reporters and issued guarded and empty statements. When asked if Coleman and Shea were leaving town he refused to answer. It is rumored in newspaper circles that the "labor" leaders will Walker Grants Fat Contract.

Franchises were awarded to the Equitable Coach Company to run cross-town buses in Manhattan and borough-wide bus routes in Brooklyn and Queens by the Board of Estimate yesterday. The franchises were sponsored by Mayor Walker.

To Fight Labor Injunctions.

ROCHESTER, July 28.—Legislation to restrict the issuance of injunctions in labor disputes will be introduced at the next session of the State Legislature, John J. Sullivan, president of the New York State Federation of Labor, announced today.

To Enforce R. R. Evaluations.

WASHINGTON, July 28.—The Department of Justice today moved anew to enforce the valuations fixed by the Interstate Commerce Commission for railroad properties, estimated to be many billions lower in the aggregate than the values claimed by the carriers.

To Complete N. J. Bridges.

The two bridges, with costs estimated at $15,000,000, which will connect Staten Island with New Jersey, will be completed with savings and on time, according to the engineer's report to the Port Authority.

Courtney Delays.

SOUTHAMPTON, Eng., July 28.—Captain Frank T. Courtney does not expect to start on his trainsatlantic flight for a number of days because of bad weather, according to reports here.

REIGN OF TERROR AGAINST WORKERS RAGES IN HANKOW

HANKOW, July 28.—During the past three days the armed forces of Wuehang (Hankow) have occupied the premises of 26 trade unions, expelled the officials therefrom, seized documents and everything they could lay their vandal hands upon.

Against these dastardly raids and suppressions of the labor movement the Hueph provincial trade council protested to the Central Committee of the Kumonintang and the Wuhan government demanding that the declarations wherein workers' and peasants' organizations were promised protection and their rights be recognized by strictly observed.

This demand will be ignored, but it serves to expose to the masses the new stage to which the Wuhan government has sunk.

Worse Than Chiang Kai-shek.

Throughout Hunan the most ruthless suppression is practiced against the revolution. The Communist Party and the workers' and peasants' organizations have been raided, their headquarters closed and, thousands upon thousands murdered by the agents of the Wuhan (Hankow) government. Expose Crooked Bargain Of McGrady and Forward To Hit USSR Delegation

McGrady broke off negotiations with the left wing needle trades in order to fulfill a bargain with the Jewish Daily Forward which promised to aid the A. F. of L. in its attacks on the trade union delegation which is going to visit the Soviet Union, charged I. Shapiro, Joint Board leader, at a meeting of Local 1 at Royal Hall last night.

The question of assessments was postponed and will be taken up at next week's meeting.

2,000 Barbers Win Union Recognition

Having won the recognition of their union, two thousand barbers, working in west side shops above 59th street, returned to work yesterday morning.

More than 250 shops were affected by the six weeks strike. As a result of the strike the Master Barbers' Association of New York was forced to sign an agreement recognizing the Journeymen Barbers' International.

The agreement was made after a long conference in Leslie Hall, 260 West 52nd street.

ENGINEERS WILL LIQUIDATE THEIR BANKS AND MINES

CLEVELAND, July 28 (FP).—The history-making 46-day convention of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers in Cleveland has ended and the abysmal depths into which the late Warren S. Stone plunged the aristocrat of American labor unions have been calsomined and scaffolded to make possible the long mid-pan'al way out again. The brotherhood has turned from the paths of capitulism determined to sin no more.

"I hope to see the time when we can forget all about these investment and speculative enterprises," grand chief engineer Al Johnston, the only big official to survive the convention hurricane, told the delegates on the closing day. "For the last 6 years the advisory board had forgotten the brotherhood. It was financial stuff all the time. I hope hereafter we can make the labor end of our brotherhood 90 per cent and the financial side only 10 per cent instead of the other way, as it has been heretofore."

To Liquidate Banks.

This abdication from the $100,000,000 throne of labor banking and investment was put on record by the convention in a moderately worded

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE AGENTS REFUSE TO TURN OVER EVIDENCE

2,800,000 French Workers Sign Petition for Liberation of Framed-up Victims

BOSTON, July 28.—The advisory board appointed by Governor Alvan T. Fuller to investigate the Sacco-Vanzetti case has filed its report. The report, it is believed, will furnish Governor Fuller with an excuse for railroading the framed-up radicals to the electric chair or to life imprisonment—unless he is prevented from doing so by the mass protest of American labor.

It was against the secret hearings of the advisory board that Sacco and Vanzetti declared their hunger-strike. Prison officials admit that Sacco and Vanzetti have grown considerably weaker as a result and are already making plans to feed them forcibly.

This is Sacco's twelfth day without food. Vanzetti has gone without food for the same length of time, except for one meal and one cup of coffee.

Governor Fuller held a conference with members of the board this afternoon at the State House presumably to discuss the board's report. The conference was held behind closed doors.

Witness Declares Sacco Innocent.

Further evidence that Sacco and Vanzetti are free of the crime for which they have been sentenced to death was offered when Antonio Dentamaro, editor of the United America, a New York publication, in an hour's conference with Gov. Fuller today told the chief executive that he was with Sacco at a pastry shop at 3 North Square, Boston, at 2:30 on the afternoon of the murder in Braintree. Dentamaro had been attending a banquet in Boston.

He remembered Sacco, who did not attend the banquet, he said, because he came from Puglie, Italy, the region in which Dantamaro was born. He was with Sacco for about an hour, he said.

Dentamaro, who testified at the Dedham trial, had been asked by the governor to come from New York and tell him his story. The editor declared he was not a radical.

Death House Clever.

Warden William Hendry of state's prison, where Sacco and Vanzetti are confined and are on a hunger strike, was a caller at the attorney general's office.

The warden, it was learned, was given an opinion that under the law it is within his discretion to place Sacco and Vanzetti in the death house any time before the electrocution date, August 10th.

Final pleas in behalf of Nicola Sacco and Bartolomeo Vanzetti will be made before Governor Alvan T. Fuller beginning at 9 a. m. tomorrow by Attorney William G. Thompson.

Attorney Thompson made this announcement at the state house this afternoon when he called to secure several papers.

Governor Fuller left for Camp Devens to review the National Guard troops, refusing before he departed

JOINT BOARD AND FUR TRIM BOSSES TO FORM BUREAU

Formation of a Labor Bureau for fur workers was decided upon last night at a meeting of the Conference Committee of the New York Joint Board, Furriers' Union and the Fur Trimming Manufacturers.

According to Ben Gold, manager of the Furriers' Joint Board, both the manufacturers and the union will cooperate in organizing this new bureau and it is believed that it will operate to the best interests of both groups.

Won't Crowd Market.

The Labor Bureau will inaugurate a thorough classification of the craft and skill of the fur workers, and this will do away with the haphazard system of employment that has existed in the trade heretofore. The establishment of such a bureau will also do away, to a great extent, with the crowding of the fur market by those who are seeking employment, and who endeavor to meet prospective employers or their representatives in the streets of the market. This system has for a long time been considered an evil and both the Joint Board and the manufacturers will be glad to see it replaced by the services of the bureau, which was formed by the unanimous vote of both parties.

Compls With 35h Increase.

The Fur Conference Committee of the Fur Trimming Association agreed at the Wednesday meeting to forward a letter to all its members requesting that they comply with the traditional July increases in the workers' wages, and not to take advantage of the present unsettled conditions in the trade. This was urged as a proof by the Joint Board of the Association's good faith. Both this proposed letter, and the formation of the Labor Bureau were considered by both sides to be important steps in the relations between the Joint Board and the manufacturers.

Fur Dyers Continue Drive.

Three hundred fur dyers employed by the Stein Fur Dyeing Company, 509 East 75th street, who went on strike Tuesday, decided to continue their drive for the organization of a union among fur dye workers at a meeting held last night at 347 East 52nd street.

SEVEN SACCO-VANZETTI MASS MEETINGS WILL BE HELD IN NEW YORK TONIGHT

Thousands of New York workers are expected to attend the seven Sacco-Vanzetti protest demonstrations that will be held this evening, 12 days before the date set for their execution in the state of Massachusetts.

The meetings are arranged by the Sacco-Vanzetti Emergency Committee, a body representing more than 500,000 organized workers of this city.

They will be held at the following points: Bronx, 183rd St and Prospect Ave.; Harlem: 110th St. and Fifth Ave.; Downtown, Second Ave. and 10th St.; East Side, Rutgers Square, Williamsburg, Grand Street Extension; Brownsville, Hopkinson and Pitkin Ave. and Stone and Pacific St.

The speakers will include Ben Gold, Jim Walsh, M. J. Olgin, Carlo Tresca, J. Louis Engdahl, Leonard Abbot, John J. Ballam, Pascal Cosgrove, Pat Devine, Rebecca Grecht, Louis Hyman, Charles Krumbein, Richard B. Moore, Luis Quintiliano, Rose Baron, Jack Stachel, Morris E. Taft, W. W. Weinstone, Juliet Stuart Poyntz, William F. Dunne, Ludwig Lore and Samuel Liebowitz.

Other Meetings.

CHICAGO, Saturday afternoon, July 30. P. M. at Union Park, Washington Boulevard and Ogden Avenue.

BUFFALO, Saturday evening, July 30 at McKinley Monument. Speakers: Commissioner Frank G. Pork, representatives of the Central Labor Council.

LAKE PLACID, New York, Saturday evening, July 30, at the Baptist Church.

SARANAC, New York, Friday evening July 29. Speakers Rev. Dr. Sidney Goldstein and Rev. Cheney.

Plenum of Communist Party of the Soviet Union Meets July 30

MOSCOW, U. S. S. R., July 28.—The plenum of the Central Executive and the Central Control Committees of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union has been called to meet Saturday, July 30. It will take up the question of removing Leon Trotzky and Gregory Zinoviev from their position as members of the Central Executive Committe. The Central Control Committee recently issued a declaration pointing out that Trotzky and Zinoviev, the leaders of the opposition, had failed to discontinue their factional activities against the party and the Comintern.

Every effort is being made to develop the unity of the party in the struggle against the war danger that threatens the Soviet Union.

Edison Backs Firestone Rubber Monopoly

WASHINGTON, July 28.—Thomas A. Edison, noted inventor, today declared his belief that the United States can raise enough rubber to make it entirely independent of any foreign crude rubber monopoly in time of war.

Edison voiced the opinion that while "rubber is the product of the tropics we should buy from those regions." Experiments now being conducted in the south by himself, Henry Ford and Harvey Firestone, conclusively demonstrate that this nation can be independent as to this great essential commodity in times of national or international stress.

Engineers to Liquidate Capitalist Ventures

resolution adopted that reads:

"Whereas our endeavors in the banking, investment and realty development since 1915 have not been what might with propriety be termed as entirely successful,

"Resolved that it be the policy of the B. of L. E. to liquidate our banking, investments and realty interests at the earliest possible moment and in such a manner as to occasion the least possible loss;

"Resolved that there be no further expansion of any character whatsoever in the banking, investment or realty interests and further that there be no further expenditure in the development of our present holdings except such as may be necessary to the end of liquidating same."

The most remarkable aspect of the convention was the iron determination to profit from the costly lesson and not leave the rail again. The brotherhood's resources were placed at the disposal of 3 financial trustees, in addition to an assessment on the membership that will yield over $7,000,000. The bank was ordered to be run by Cleveland business men and deposits guaranteed by the brotherhood until it sells its controlling interest in the bank. An alternative method of raising money, that may make the assessment partly or wholly unnecessary, was provided in the sale of interest-bearing certificates of indebtedness of the brotherhood to the members and sympathizers. Over $16,000 was paid by delegates in cash and $80,000 pledged by them for such certificates before adjournment.

Grand chief Johnston's salary was fixed at $15,000 a year in place of the $25,000 for ex-Pres. W. B. Prenter, who with V. Pres. L. G. Griffing, V. Pres. Harry Baumberg and Secy. C. E. Lindquist was removed from office and disqualified for reelection.

The delegates parted full of confidence in the strength and vitality of the brotherhood.

"We have had a bitter, bitter experience," the grand chief said. "But I am convinced that we shall get out stronger than ever."

TRACTION "STRIKE LEADERS" PACK UP TO GO; WORKERS WONDER WHAT THEY HAVE WON

be on their way before tha week is out.

Lay Down on the Job.

I. R. T. officials deny that the Amalgamated is active in organizing the traction workers. They claim that since the Amalgamated's entry into New York they have not carried on any active organization work.

The traction corporations are carrying on business as usual. It is definitely understood that the Amalgamated will not make any effort to organize the workers. Statements made by Coleman and Shea as to a corps of organizers at work have been denied by the I. R. T. officials although it has been admitted that voluntary enrollments have been made.

James Coleman, through his $1,000 a week press-agent said yesterday, "We shall make no overt move toward bringing on a strike, unless the I. R. T. oversteps itself. I don't think they will do that since Mayor Walker's intervention."

The cost of hiring strikebreakers and other incidentals of the strike threat cost the I. R. T. about $100,000.

"No Further Action."

Patrick J. Shea, one of the Amalgamated vice-presidents said through his publicity director that "they (the officials) contemplated no further action but would protest to the mayor" if they were molested by the traction companies.

Unofficially, the mayor is reported to have said that he will be pleased to mediate in any future traction disputes.

With the fizzle of the strike threat the "bomb" story is fizzling also. It has served its purpose. It can now be dusted off and put away until the next traction strike.

Militant traction workers, however, are active organizing and preparing for further struggles.

Department of Justice Agents Won't Aid Sacco to comment on his meeting today with his advisory board which has handed in its report.

Won't Show Files.

WASHINGTON, July 28 (FP).—Nicola Sacco and Bartolomeo Vanzetti can die in the electric chair before the department of justice will raise a finger to reveal information in its files which would show that the two Italian workers were victims of a federal-engineered frame-up.

The two officials of the department who might intervene to show that their agents in 1920-21 participated in the fabrication of evidence which doomed Sacco and Vanzetti to the electric chair have told Federated Press that they are totally "disinterested" in the case and will not make one move to help prevent a gross miscarriage of justice. They are—Oscar Luhring, assistant attorney general in charge of criminal prosecutions and J. Edgar Hoover, chief of the bureau of investigation.

While both Hoover and Luhring insist the justice department is not interested in the Sacco-Vanzetti case, neither denied that in the palmy days of Flynn, agents had been assigned to cooperate with the Massachusetts authorities. But that is a closed book, they say, and if Governor Fuller wishes to look into it, he will have to get the attorney general's permission. The department "got its men," indeed, brought them within the shadow of the death chair, and could can afford to be "disinterested" while Massachusetts completes the travesty by turning on the "juice" or condoning the two workers to life imprisonment.

Dreyfus Visit.

PARIS, July 28.—The ghost of the famous Dreyfus case was called up today in the midst of the appeal in behalf of Nicola Sacco and Bartolomeo Vanzetti printed in the newspaper L'Oeuvre Quotidien, which was signed by Lieut. Col. Alfred Dreyfus, and a number of other prominent Frenchmen identified with the case. Dreyfus has accepted an invitation to join a French Sacco-Vanzetti committee which will visit the United States.

Dreyfus served several years in the French penal colony on Devil's Island, French Guiana, after being found guilty of treason. Later he was exonerated when his case was reviewed and it was proved that a clique of French militarists had conspired against him.

This "martyr of France" emphasized today that his only interest in the Sacco-Vanzetti case lies in the fact that the men may have been convicted and doomed through prejudice.

Millions Sign Paris Petition.

PARIS, July 28.—A petition signed by 2,000,000 persons, calling on Governor Fuller to liberate Sacco and Vanzetti in the name of right and humanity was sent from France today by the Paris Sacco and Vanzetti committee. Sacco and Vanzetti are not guilty, says the petition, and the conscience of the world demands their release.

Swiss Union Sends Protest.

BERNE, Switzerland, July 28. — In a message to Governor Fuller the delegates to the congress of Swiss Postal and Telegraph Employes today demanded the unconditional release of Sacco and Vanzetti.

Coolidge Gets Australian Protest.

SYDNEY, Australia, July 28. — Messages from trade unions, workers' congresses and conferences, and sympathetic bodies demanding the liberation of Sacco and Vanzetti were sent to President Coolidge from here today. Feeling for the prisoners is strong in Australia and hundreds of meetings have been held and thousands of hand bills calling on Governor Fuller to release the men have been distributed.

more ruthless and frightful than that carried out by Chiang Kai-shek. Each set of traitors outdoes the previous ones in wholesale murder and torture against the revolution.

United Counter-Revolutionaries.

SHANGHAI, July 28.—In spite of press reports to the effect that a drive is contemplated by the treacherous Wuhan government against Nanking, the workers and peasants are preparing to carry on a fight against Wuhan as well as Nanking, knowing that the published statements of Tang Shen-shi are absolutely contrary to the actions and policy of the Wuhan government. Undoubtedly there is much underhand blood between Chiang Kai-shek and Wuhan because Chiang is heartily distrusted and is known to be self-seeking, adventurous and unreliable. But then so are the Wuhan gang who have gone over to the big capitalists and are now playing the game of the imperialists.

Assail Reactionary Front.

The Central Committee of the Young Communist League of China has issued an appeal, in the course of which is declared that the Chinese revolution is entering a new phase with Wuhan and Nanking as rallying points for the united counter-revolutionary front. "The Chinese revolutionary masses," says the appeal, "will now countenance the bloody regime of the reactionaries and traitors." Concluding the document, issued to all workers and peasants states that "the militarists united front must be opposed the united revolutionary front of the toiling masses of the cities and villages, headed by the Communist Party, which alone remained true to the revolution and to the Kuomintang revolutionary banner. Masses have learned to rely wholly upon themselves and with arms in their hands must overthrow the power of the generals and landowners, seize the lands, abolish the gentry and establish their own dictatorship. In this struggle the youth must fight in the front ranks of the revolutionary forces.

GOVERNORS WILL MAKE APPEAL TO COOLIDGE'S BOSS

Want Farm Relief Meet To Convince Bankers

MACKINAC ISLAND, Mich., July 28.—A conference of the country's reputed experts—economic, financial, industrial and agricultural—to consider the existing farm situation and to try to evolve a workable plan of relief, was being considered seriously here today by several middle West governors who have been most vocal on the annual Governor's Conference idea demanding that something be done by winter.

The governors discussed quite frankly the prospects of passage through the MacNary-Haugen bill again, or something like it, but decided that though such a bill could be passed, probably Coolidge would veto it. It is recognized that Coolidge responds directly to the orders of the big financial interests of the East, and there hope to educate these rather than the president.

They believe if the industrialists and bankers could be got around the same table they could possibly be convinced of the seriousness of the situation and the need for immediate action.

The Governor's Conference stood adjourned today, and the remaining executives embarked from this historic spot this morning for a trip through the inland lake region and to inspect the locks of the Soo. They will scatter to their homes tonight following the day's outing.

WASHINGTON, July 28 (FP).—Cloth headgear workers, steel workers, building laborers, molders, silver polishers and gypsum workers are disputing with employers over wages, hours and union rights. The department of labor is attempting to effect settlements.

Needle Trade Defense

A group of workers gathered at the home of Brother L. Frellich last Saturday night. They were under the impression that the concert would not take place due to the rain. Later they learned that it would take place but as they were far from the Stadium they decided not to attend.

They knew, however, that the affair in the Coney Island Stadium was not a capitalist enterprise that every penny would be used for the arrested clothworkers and their wives. So they paid for their tickets. But they also made a collection of $30 which they forwarded to the Defense Committee.

Would that when other workers follow this example will the financial result of the Coney Island Stadium be a success. A most urgent reason for the success of the affair is the fact that the Stadium tickets that were bought but not used will be returned to us and we will carry on as usual.

Buenos Aires Workers With Defense.

A striking force of workers among the workers of the Dall-Mayo Refrigerator Plant in Buenos Aires, Argentina, was received by the Defense Office. The striking class consciousness in Argentina is very weak and the economic conditions of the workers there is not very favorable. Yet in spite of that they raised $10 to help the New York workers in their struggle against the Right Clique and the bosses.

Jurisdictional Strike Ends in Baltimore

BALTIMORE, July 28 (FP).—Although technically correct in its support of the plasterers in a jurisdictional row, the Baltimore building trades council has been asked to end its general citywide strike in their behalf by President Mesorley of the building trades department of the A. F. of L. Accordingly, the strike of 6,000 workers on since July 11, was terminated July 25. Strikes will be limited in the future to jobs where marble setters, affiliated with the bricklayers' union, attempt to set artificial marble awarded to the plasterers' union by the national board for jurisdictional awards.

ALUMINUM TRUST WORKERS STRIKE AGAINST SPEEDUP

Cheer Communist Plea For Organization

NIAGARA FALLS, N. Y., July 28. —When the management of the local plant of the American Aluminum Co., a Mellon corporation, announced that it would require the pot-men to work nine instead of five pots per shift in the future, all three shifts walked out on strike and assembled at a nearby hall where plans for a determined struggle against the speed-up system were drawn up and enthusiastically approved.

Urged To Organize.

The principal unorganized workers cheered lustily the remarks of Herbert Benjamin, district organizer of the Workers' Party, who was called in from Buffalo, when he urged them to form permanent organization that would not only defeat the present attack of the company but redress the many wrongs that had been imposed upon them during the past several years. An executive committee of nine members was elected to conduct the strike and arrangements made for daily meetings of the strikers, for effective picketing and to call out the 700 workers who are employed in other departments.

In a statement issued by the strike committee, the workers effectively urged them to form a permanent organization, U. S. Thayer, superintendent of the local plant and expose the horrible conditions under which they have been forced to work. This statement shows that the rich Mellon corporation has been following consistently a policy of reducing the working force and adding to the labors of the remaining workers, while the earnings of these workers were constant had been imposed upon them new equipment was introduced that made for substantial savings for the company and added misery for the workers.

Terrible Heat.

The work of the pot-men consists of attending the big metal. The heat around the pots is so terrific that the workers are forced to run to a neutral area where the temperature is "only" 120 degrees for a gasp of breath. Recently the company under the direction of a couple of college graduated "efficiency experts" reduced the lining in the pots, thus forcing the worker of what little protection they had from the heat.

Then they discharged the sweeping gang and compelled the pot-men to sweep in the periods when they proceeded to the pots. Due to leave the immediate proximity of the red-hot pots for the comparative cool temperature of the "neutral area."

After contract with this, the "efficiency experts" responsible for the elimination of a gang of men that previously prepared the carbon for use and introduced a new type of carbon twice as heavy as that previously used and of a state more difficult to handle, and compelled the pot-men to do the additional work also. Moreover, a new process was introduced which resulted in bringing the same pots out on the line twice the previous number of times which in effect meant a doubling of the number of pots handled.

Wages Same

While the labors of the workers were thus increased their wages continued at the rate of $4 in the day, a figure which they had been receiving when a some unexplained way constantly reduced. The workers declare that it would be humanly impossible under these conditions to work nine pots instead of five per shift. They have decided to strike to refuse the five pot basis for a dollar per day increase for elimination of extra work and for recognition of their elected representatives. The workers in the other departments have suffered in a similar manner from the inhuman policy of the company and many of them have declared that they, too, will join the call of the strike committee to join in the struggle. It is expected that these will be be called out in the next few days.

Jeered By Miners' Wives, Infuriated Scab Kills A Boy

WASHINGTON, Pa., July 28.—Elsie Burns, 26, a scab and alleged murderer of Tony Sels, 14, who was killed when Burns fired into a crowd of miners more than a week ago, was captured in Coulterg, Pa., today. Previous to his firing, Burns had been scabbing in the Tyler Mine of the Washington Iras and Coal Co. On his way home from work, enraged miners' wives taunted him. Burns later returned and fired three shots into a crowd of miners, hitting the Sels boy in the head. Sels died in the hospital two hours later. Burns will be held for the grand jury on a charge of murder.

Polish Miners Die In Mine Disaster Due to Bad Underground Timber

WARSAW, July 28.—At least three miners were killed and a number of others are believed to have lost their lives today when the timbering in a coal mine at Somnovice gave way, burying a hundred carloads of coal down on the miners below.

Only three bodies have so far been recovered, and all were badly mutilated.

The platform which collapsed was located on the 1,200 foot level.

IMPERIALISM

The Final Stage of Capitalism

By LENIN

This book, a classic of Communist literature, was written, as Lenin explains in his introduction, to help the reader to understand the fundamental economic questions, without the study of which modern war and politics are misintelligible.

With a growing danger of an imperialist war, at this time particularly it should be read by every worker.

Passaic TEXTILE STRIKE

by the noted novelist and writer

MARY HEATON VORSE.

"This book is the background of the Passaic strike. Enormous profits, low wages, the accompanying poor living conditions, night work in the mills, the denial of civil rights, in advent of workers demonstration, espionage, blacklisting, the fierce fight against the workers' organization, all these form the soil from which springs the historic struggle in Passaic. A struggle which lasted from January 25, 1926, to February 18, 1927, during which time the self-control of the workers never lapsed to violence, during which time their morale mounted as they grew to know each other and as they became ever more resolved to come out of the struggle with a Union. This pamphlet aims only to show the workers passing through the main phases of the strike and overcoming the successive difficulties and disciplinements standing between them and a final victory."

U. S. Manufacturers Compete in Soviet Union Tractor Test

Products of over a score of American manufacturers of tractors and tractor implements will participate in the International Tractor Tests to be held in the Soviet Union during August and September, according to announcement by the Amtorg Trading Corporation, 165 Broadway, New York.

The tests will be held in the Northern Caucasus. Both field and laboratory tests will be made to determine the types of machine best suited to conditions in the Soviet Union. Tractors will also be tested for highway construction. The American equipment will compete with machines sent from Germany, Czechoslovakia, Sweden and other countries. The American tractors and tractor implements have been shipped by the Amtorg.

American machines to be shown come from the following: Yuba Manufacturing Co., Caterpillar Tractor Co., Monarch Tractor Co., Emerson-Brantingham Co., Allis-Chalmers Mfg. Co., International Harvester, Cleveland Tractor Co., Ford Motor Co., Advance-Rumely Co., Moline Plow Co., Galion Iron Works, Case Threshing Machine Co., Roderick Lean Co., Killefer Mfg. Co., Western Wheeled Scraper Co., Pickering Governor Co., Kingston Governor Co., Detroit Harvester Co., La Crosse Plow Co., Cleaner Combing Harvester Company.

Last summer six American firms exhibited tractors at the Tiflis Exposition. Up to three years ago the tractor was a novelty in the Soviet Union, but now about 30,000 are in use, mostly of American manufacture.

This year's tests are held under official auspices and as a result standard tractors and tractor implements such as plows, drills, threshers, harrows, etc., will be chosen for import.

"There Is No Peace"; Old War Shell Blasts Monument at San Juan

HAVANA, July 28.—The bronze tablet, containing the names of the American dead at San Juan Hill, has been almost entirely destroyed by a bomb which exploded under the "peace tree" on that historic spot.

The Diario Marino, a Spanish newspaper, suggests that the explosion was caused by a dud shell which had been left in the ground after the battle of San Juan.

Australian Customs Ban Workers Party Organ To Subdue the Workers

SYDNEY, Australia, July 28. British imperialism's fear of the "Red peril" may be gauged from the act of the Sydney customs in confiscating the entire April shipment of the "Communist," the monthly organ of the American Workers' Party. 28 copies in all. Early in April, Comrade Wheelock of the Literature Department of the Australian Party was informed that customs was holding the March issue pending official decision. When the April copies came through the customs authorities seized and seized the issues. Although the "Communist" is now contraband in Australia, and there is a fine of 100 pounds for selling one in the commonwealth, Australian comrades are planning to receive individual copies in an effort to outwit the customs officials.

ALL-UNION CENTRAL COUNCIL OF TRADE UNIONS URGES SUPPORT OF REVOLUTIONARY FORCES IN CHINA

MOSCOW, July 28. In an appeal to the toiling masses of all countries the delegation from the All-Union Central Council of Trades Unions which just returned from the Pacific conference and all China Congress of Trade Unions calls upon the toilers to raise energetic protests against the bloody terror of the Chinese counter-revolution which is suppressing the revolutionary movement.

"The Chinese counter-revolution," declares the appeal, "with the assistance of the imperialists, has resolved to destroy the Communist Party and all revolutionary unions. During the last three months within the territories occupied by the Nanking and Wuhan governments over ten thousand workers and peasants have been brutally murdered by the reaction. The brutal acts of the Chinese bourgeoisie and its militarist agents are unbounded, not one single day passes without scores of people being tortured and executed. It is necessary for the toilers of the world to support the vanguard of the Chinese proletariat and peasantry."

Sacco and Vanzetti's Court of Last Resort—the Workingclass

With the flippancy and cynical indifference that has characterized its deliberations Governor Fuller's "advisory commission" reported its "findings" in the case in less than forty eight hours after hearing the closing arguments of attorneys for the defense and prosecution. Two of that committee are known to be utterly hostile to the two workers who are victims of this monstrous frame-up. They are former Judge Grant and President Stratton of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology. The third member, Lowell, president of Harvard, could hardly be sympathetic to workers whose activities challenge the profits of the parasites who support Harvard university. Forty-eight hours' time is entirely inadequate to review the evidence submitted to that committee in the course of its hearings, which were closed to the public because they themselves were merely part of the conspiracy to railroad the condemned men.

Each of the committee members held in his hand a brown envelope when he entered the governor's chamber, which he left with the governor. Just what these envelopes may contain is speculative. One thing is certain, however, and that is that if the decision had been for the victims of the attempted judicial murder it would have required more than forty-eight hours to perfect it, for the simple reason that it would necessitate not only a criticism of the flagrant conduct of the trial by the extremely prejudiced Judge Thayer, but a criticism as well of the Massachusetts judicial procedure, which prevented any person other than Thayer passing upon his own actions in the case.

As heretofore, the fate of Sacco and Vanzetti rests, not with the Massachusetts governor and his various committees, but with the working class. In four days the decision will probably be made public, because it is on Wednesday that the governor's council meets for the last time before August 10, the day set for the execution of Sacco and Vanzetti. This council must pass upon any recommendations for clemency. World-wide agitation must shake the complacency of the state house at Massachusetts and the federal administration at Washington, which is equally guilty with the Massachusetts mill owners and slave drivers in this case.

Tonight the workers of New York will demonstrate by the thousands and demand the immediate liberation of these two workers. The police department of New York has barred the demonstration scheduled for Union Square under the fake pretense that the traction situation is still critical, but meetings will take place in various parts of the city under the auspices of the Sacco and Vanzetti Emergency Committee. All workers should attend these meetings tonight, the locations of which are published elsewhere in this issue.

What Did the Traction Workers Get?

As we stated the moment the details of the so called traction settlement became known, the only provision it contains that means anything is the proposal, carried out instantly by supine labor officials, that the strike should be called off.

The traction workers got no guarantees and the officials of the Amalgamated Association and Hugh Frayne, A. F. of L. organizer did not insist on any other guarantee except the word of the mayor, that some dozen workers, discharged for refusing to train scabs, be reinstated.

The mayor will not and cannot protect these workers. Nor has he said one word that encourages any intelligent person to believe that the I. R. T. and other traction companies have agreed not to discharge and blacklist men for joining or showing sympathy with the Amalgamated Association.

When the traction workers are told otherwise by union officials, they were deceived. The workers were cajoled into throwing away their only weapon—the strike—and were left defenseless.

What we have witnessed in this struggle is the open use of the power of a government agency—in this instance a city government—against the labor movement and a big section of the working class.

The traction companies made no concessions. They keep their company unions, they keep their yellow dog contracts, they retain complete control of the transit systems, they announce openly that they will permit no union to organize the traction workers.

The union officials made peace on this basis and they are still talking idiotically of "appealing to the mayor."

A labor official who does not know that Mayor Walker is part of a political machine which serves the interest of traction magnates is so mentally deficient that he should be in a home for the feeble minded, or knowing this and still prating to workers of the "fairness" of the mayor is so crooked that he could not be trusted with the proceeds of a W. I. T. U. collection at a brewers' picnic.

There are only three conclusions to be drawn from the disgraceful debacle which has taken place in the traction workers' organization campaign. They are first, that the Amalgamated Association officials, the officials of the Central Labor Council and President Green of the A. F. of L. had no serious intention of leading a real struggle for organizing the New York traction industry.

Second, that having been at all times in close relations with the Tammany Hall machine, they agreed to call off preparations for a strike which they were afraid would take place in spite of their sabotage and cowardice.

Third, calling off the strike without any guarantees for the masses of traction workers has given a damaging blow to the whole organization campaign and has intensified the distrust and suspicion of the labor movement which is carefully capitalized by the stoolpigeons of the traction companies.

Organization work is made immensely more difficult. The sole asset of the Amalgamated Association was the confidence of the men. This its officials have forfeited by actions for which no adequate explanation, except that of reaction and cowardice, can be given.

The organization of the traction workers must go on but it will have to be carried on by workers whose record in the struggle against company unionism is not marred by surrender to it without a fight.

American Labor and the Chinese Revolution

By J. LOUIS ENGDAHL.

THE problem of the Communist International, in facing "The War Danger" growing out of the developing imperialist attack against the Soviet Union and the intervention against the Chinese Revolution, is to rally all its sections, in more than 50 countries for the growing struggle.

This becomes very apparent in the study of the declarations adopted on these two questions at the Plenum of the Executive Committee of the Communist International.

The immediate problem of our Workers (Communist) Party becomes the application of the resolutions adopted on these two problems to the actual situation in the United States.

THE Comintern resolution on the Chinese question says:

"The executive committee of the Comintern imposes upon all sections the obligation actively to support the Chinese revolution and to put up an active fight against intervention in China by mobilizing the masses, organizing the resistance of the masses to the despatch of troops, arms, etc., etc.

"The executive committee of the Comintern imposes upon all the sections the obligation to explain to the broad masses of the proletariat and the toilers generally the importance, meaning and significance of the Chinese Revolution, the connection between counter-revolutionary intervention in China and the preparations being made for new wars and with the domestic crusade against the working class."

WHILE this "domestic crusade" takes the form of the anti-trade union bill in Great Britain; the Mussolinization Laws in France, and the Fascist terror in Italy, we have in the United States the declaration of the Supreme Court that the Vickus anti-criminal syndicalism laws are "constitutional," the attack launched against The DAILY WORKER, central organ of the Workers (Communist) Party and other Communist publications, the very evident intention to bring Sacco and Vanzetti in the electric chair, support by the courts of anti-picketing decrees and other assaults against trade union activities, especially during strikes.

THE statement of the Comintern then continues to analyze the forces that make up the counter-revolutionary bloc. It points out that the Chinese bourgeoisie is not the greatest danger to the revolution but rather the forces of international imperialism. In this army American imperialism appears in the foreground. Thus the Comintern declares:

"The Executive Committee of the Communist International places on record that the series of bourgeois counter-revolutionary coups Shanghai, Nanking, Canton, etc., represent partial defeats of the Chinese Revolution and a real acquisition of strength by the counter-revolutionary bloc.

"The Executive Committee of the Communist International, however, regards the view as incorrect that these defeats menace the fate of the revolution as a whole.

"This view is wrong for the reason that it considers the Chinese bourgeoisie as the greatest force of Chiang Kai-shek would have been crushed by the victorious revolutionary armies, however, but American imperialism, which employs all methods and has its own agency among the vacillating elements of the national revolutionary front.

"The Executive Committee of the Communist International imposes upon all its sections the imperative duty of explaining to the working class and the peasantry the fundamental fact that the imperialist troops, which have practically occupied all the important industrial centers of China, are the main counter-revolutionary forces in China.

"The relatively weak Chinese bourgeoisie would not represent a serious menace to the Chinese revolution, if it were not directly and indirectly supported by the foreign interventionists.

"The latter are concentrating their armed forces, liberating ports, isolating the revolutionary centers, financing the counter-revolutionary armies, exerting continuous diplomatic pressure, supporting bourgeois conspiracies in the territory of the revolutionary government, organizing the espionage of reports, trade and other goods, by the foreign and native bourgeoisie, etc.

"It is particularly important to point out the frantic effort of the imperialists to break up the trade unions and Communist organizations, to suppress the peasant movement and to isolate the Soviet Union."

IT is of first importance at this time to wage a struggle against the incorrect, liquidatory view that the victories of the Chinese Revolution is prolonged defeat and creates a new situational situation.

"The View," declared the Plenum of the Executive Committee of the Communist International, "is just as wrong as the pessimistic estimation of the construction of Socialism in the Soviet Union. Since it is wrong in substance it cannot but serve as an instrument for the disruption of the proletarian ranks, which would be particularly harmful at the present time, when unity of will and action of the Communist International and of the revolutionary proletariat is particularly necessary."

BECAUSE of the extremely poisonous nature of the American capitalist press propaganda against the Chinese Revolution, the masses of workers in this country easily succumb to the view that the partial defeat of the revolution in China is instead a complete disaster.

AS against the partial defeat of the revolution, we have the fact that it has passed instead to a higher stage of development and that a more intensive mobilization of the masses has commenced. The growth of the peasant movement, organization of armed forces of insurgents, the series of victories achieved by the spontaneously organized forces over the armies of the treacherous generals, the organization of the bourgeoisie, etc.

"It is particularly important to point out the frantic effort of the imperialists to break up the trade unions and Communist organizations, to suppress the peasant movement and to isolate the Soviet Union."

THE swiftness with which the Chinese Revolution moves is very aptly shown by the fact that in the Sixth Plenum of the Comintern, the declaration was adopted that, "The Executive Committee of the Communist International considers it incumbent at the present time to advance the slogan of Soviets, which in the Hankow territory can mean nothing less than a slogan proclaiming Soviet rule."

Two months later, in July, with the betrayal of the Revolution by the bourgeois elements of the Hankow government, the election of the organization of Soviets, in the words of the Pravda, the central organ of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union, "is put upon the outer of the day." Thus the Chinese Communists develop a propaganda for the Soviet idea.

NEVERTHELESS, in May, the Plenum of the Comintern had, predicted the changed policy that would have to be put into effect in July when it said:

"With the further development of the Revolution which will mark the beginning of the process of development of the democratic revolution into a Socialist revolution, it will be necessary to organize Soviets of Workers', Peasants' and Soldiers' Deputies, and the slogan for the formation of Soviets will become the principal slogan of the party."

This development coincides with the period of the going over of the petty bourgeois elements in the Hankow government from the revolution to the camp of the counter-revolution.

FROM the standpoint of the general estimation, therefore, of the significance of the role of the Chinese revolution, the Executive Committee of the Communist International places on record that:

1. "Most of the sections of the Comintern have not sufficiently realized its significance and have displayed insufficient activity in the matter of supporting the Chinese Revolution.

2. "That the same inadequate activity is revealed by the Communists belonging to the Anti-Imperialist League.

"The Executive Committee of the Communist International considers it absolutely necessary that these defects shall be speedily rectified, and to this end enlls upon all the sections to take resolute measures in this direction along the following lines:

(a) "Agitation and propaganda in the press.

(b) "Work in the trade unions and other mass labor organizations.

(c) "Work in the colonies and dependencies of the respective imperialist countries.

(d) "Work among the forces which are being sent to China.

"The Executive Committee of the Communist International draws attention to the necessity for serious preparations to be made effectively to really top the despatch of troops and arms to China.

"The Executive Committee of the Communist International imposes upon all its sections the duty to conduct most energetic work among the imperialist troops and urge upon them to go over to the revolutionary troops of the Chinese people.

"The Executive Committee of the Communist International instructs the central committee of the various sections to draw up concrete measures in the direction indicated.

"The Executive Committee of the Communist International sends fraternal greetings to its Chinese section and promises it the warmest support in the great revolutionary struggle."

THE strength of the Communist International, however, is the sum total of the strength of its mass national sections.

The Workers (Communist) Party as the American section of the Communist International must add every possible particle of strength to the growing effort demanding, "Hands Off China! Hands Off the Soviet Union!"

PRESIDENT COOLIDGE IS GUNNING FOR THESPIAN VOTE

CUSTER, South Dakota, July 28.—Calvin Coolidge, our cowboy president is getting ready for the next act in the great political farce staged here among the hills of South Dakota.

Having been photographed catching fish with worms and again with flies, in cowboy costume and in his Sunday best while listening to a youthful evangelist throw light on the inner recesses of the divine brain, the president is now ready to go into costume for the "Gold Rush."

This is not a revival of the Chaplin comedy for the benefit of the natives of South Dakota but the kind of a thing that is usually pulled off in a country village on the anniversary of the building of the local jail, when the old fire engines are dragged out and the oldest inhabitant tells how he first left his mommy and pa.

In this town there is an annual production of "Gold Discovery Day" and this year as soon as a person than Calvin Coolidge will take part in the drama. Which should at least win him the amateur thespian vote.

Herbert Hoover was here a few days ago and talked with the president on many matters including the Mississippi flood. Hoover has not yet declared himself in favor of a third term for the president.

"The president is keeping in close touch with the Geneva naval conference and there are rumors that he received a long confidential report on the Pan American Federation of Labor conference recently held in Washington, from an officer of the Federation. It is believed here that the policy followed by Green and Woll at the conference was dictated directly by the Coolidge cabinet. Secretary of Labor Davis is a close friend of William Green and John L. Lewis and he is reported to be the liason officer between the cabinet and the executive of the A. F. of L.

"As against the partial defeat of the revolution, we have the fact that it has passed instead to a higher stage of development and that a more intensive mobilization of the masses has commenced. The growth of the peasant movement, organization of armed forces of insurgents, the series of victories achieved by the spontaneously organized forces over the armies of the treacherous generals, the organization of the bourgeoisie, etc.

"It is particularly important to point out the frantic effort of the imperialists to break up the trade unions and Communist organizations, to suppress the peasant movement and to isolate the Soviet Union."

IT is of first importance at this time to wage a struggle against the incorrect, liquidatory view that the victories of the Chinese Revolution is a prolonged defeat and creates a new situational situation.

"The View," declared the Plenum of the Executive Committee of the Communist International, "is just as wrong as the pessimistic estimation of the construction of Socialism in the Soviet Union. Since it is wrong in substance it cannot but serve as an instrument for the disruption of the proletarian ranks, which would be particularly harmful at the present time, when unity of will and action of the Communist International and of the revolutionary proletariat is particularly necessary."

BECAUSE of the extremely poisonous nature of the American capitalist press propaganda against the Chinese Revolution, the masses of workers in this country easily succumb to the view that the partial defeat of the revolution in China is instead a complete disaster.

AS against the partial defeat of the revolution, we have the fact that it has passed instead to a higher stage of development and that a more intensive mobilization of the masses has commenced. Not Diplomatic Denials but Deeds Are What Count.

> "There may be people, particularly in America, who believe that we are actuated by imperialist notions, but they are quite mistaken, whatever government is in power now in England, and for a long time to come, seeks the peace of the world and will always try to avert war.
> —Marquis of Reading, former British ambassador to Washington in the course of a speech delivered to the English-Speaking Union in London, July 27, in honor of visiting American editors.

Seeking the peace of the world and trying always to "avert war" the British government raided the Soviet Union Trade Mission and broke off relations with the workers' and peasants' republic, it finances organizations of monarchist murderers, organizes bomb outrages in the territory of the Soviet Union, backs the fascist governments of Italy, Poland, Finland, Lithuania and Latvia and Rumania and tries to establish an economic blockade of the Soviet Union as a preliminary to war against it.

Such statements as those quoted, in the face of the facts cited and the open imperialist rivalry evident at Geneva are to be taken as the smoke screen with which imperialist diplomats, including America's, attempt to cover up the ever-increasing danger of imperialist war.

Not words but deeds are what determine the approach of war—the denials of diplomats mean nothing in the face of new alignments of the imperialist powers, the militarization measures, the attacks on the labor movements of all capitalist and colonial countries and the ceaseless building of war vessels which continues in spite of all pious wishes for disarmament.

Now is the time to resist all imperialist war preparations. Every working class must fight first of all the imperialists of its own country or be drawn into the war machinery.

SOVIET OUTPUT OF OIL GAINS AS TRUSTS QUARREL

Pratt to Join Teagle In London

Herbert L. Pratt, president of the Standard Oil Company of New York, and next to the Rockefellers, the most powerful figure in the corporation, sails early Sunday for England on the Aquitania. In spite of his claim that he is on a vacation his departure at this time is taken to indicate that he will join the conferences being held between Walter C. Teagle, of the New Jersey Standard Oil and Sir Henri Deterding, head of the British Royal Dutch Shell trust, the great competitor of the American trust, regarding the war over the question of Russian oil. Also significant is the fact that the ex-secretary of state in the Harding-Coolidge administration, Charles Evans Hughes, will be in London as attorney for the New York concern.

May Fight Royal Dutch.

The world wide economic struggle that has raged for years between the two giants of the oil world may break into open hostilities, with the whole world as witness to the recriminations the heads of the competing trusts hurl at one another. Already Sir Henri Deterding has unloosed a barrage against the Standard of New York-Vacuum combination for entering into trade relations with the Soviet government oil trust.

It is probable that the Standard of New York will grant certain assurances of unlimited support to the Standard of New Jersey, the most direct competing branch of the American trust against the British-Dutch trust.

Russian Oil Output Gains.

While the war rages between the capitalist trusts, the Russian fields go on constantly increasing their production. The stock exchange quotes President Sokolnikoff of the Soviet Naptha Syndicate as declaring that campaign of the Royal-Dutch against Russian oil will be ineffective and that by October Russia's oil exports will amount to 2,000,000 tons, or twice the amount of pre-war shipments.

Try Giant Bomber.

PETERBORO, N. J., July 28.—The new giant air bomber recently constructed here by the Atlantic Aircraft Corporation, was given its first tests yesterday.

Boston Billy Gets 50 Years.

James F. Hoogan, alias "Boston Billy," urbane jewel thief, who was sentenced to half a century of hard labor in Sing Sing prison by County Judge Smith yesterday.

Charge Municipal Graft.

TRENTON, N. J., July 28.—Charges of graft in the conduct of the Camden municipal government were levelled in a report filed by Walter R. Darby here today.

Stalin Declares Murder Of Voikoff British Plot To Incite European War

MOSCOW, July 28. — Joseph Stalin, general secretary of the executive committee of the All-Union Communist Party, charged today that the British government instigated the assassination in Warsaw of the Soviet minister, Voikoff, in order to precipitate a European war.

"The first open attack by the conservative government of England against the Soviet was delivered through the raid on the Soviet embassy at Peking," wrote Stalin in Isvestia, organ of the government.

"That failed. The second public stroke against the Soviet was delivered in London by the raid on Arcos House and the breach of Anglo-Soviet relations. It also failed.

"The third open blow was delivered in Warsaw by an organization of murder. Voikoff's murder was organized by agents of the conservative party and was intended for the same role as the murder at Serajevo in 1914. This also seems to have failed."

Telegraphers Win Small Raise From Arbitrators

Judge Edward Owings Towne, sitting as arbitrator in the negotiations between International News Service, Universal Service and United Press on the one hand, and the Commercial Telegraphers' Union on the other hand, presented yesterday his decision as to a new wages scale.

Judge Towne recommended that the wages of Morse telegraphers remain at their present level without change in any particular. He recommended the following scale for printer machine operators:

	present proposed
Bureau points day	$37.25 $40.00
ditto, night	$39.75 $42.50
bureau relay points, day	$37.25 $42.50
night	$39.75 $45.00

New York and Chicago $2.50 differential in addition to above.

overtime, day	$ .875	$ .95
overtime, night	$ .975	$1.05
Saturday night	$7.25	$8.00

FARCE AT GENEVA SIGNAL FOR BIG NAVAL PROGRAM

London and Washington Admit Failure

LONDON, July 28. — As the tripartite naval conference today resumes in Geneva, the feeling here is that it will not last long. This attitude is based upon statements of Sir Austen Chamberlain, foreign minister, whose utterances yesterday revealed that the tory outfit has abandoned all hope of any agreement. Chamberlain tried to soften the effect of the collapse by asserting that the British government would not object to the United States building as many cruisers as it can between now and 1931, when, according to the decisions of the Washington conference, the whole question of naval armaments will be reopened.

This is viewed as a mere evasion, as before 1931 the world will be aflame with war and such a conference will be out of the question. Not even the tories themselves dare look ahead to that date. They feel that they will not be the dominating party at that time and take the pragmatic attitude that any sort of patch-work is acceptable that will enable them to hang on a bit longer.

Washington Knows Game Is Up.

WASHINGTON, July 28. — No hope for the Geneva naval conference reaching any conclusion other than collapse was seen here today as facts regarding Sir Austen Chamberlain's stand reached Secretary Kellogg. The assertion of the British foreign secretary that the formulas of the Washington naval treaties was inapplicable at this time and that further sessions of the Geneva conference almost useless according to official expressions of opinion.

The cruiser supremacy will be on full blast at the next session of congress when huge appropriations will be asked in order to build new flocks of cruisers to extend the tentacles of the rapacious imperialism of Wall Street.

Pacific Relations Fight Over Chance Of U. S.-Japan War

HONOLULU, T. H., July 28.—After a bitter argument as to whether the United States and Japan were certain to fight in the Pacific in the near future, the Institute of Pacific Relations settled down to the usual complimentary waddle. The Japanese and American delegates mutually assured each other that war was impossible.

Previously, however, Mrs. Carrie Chapman Catt had alluded to Japan's population problem as certain to make treaties with that country useless unless land was afforded her for colonization, and F. W. Eggleston of Australia had shocked the American propagandists by proposing that naval bases be abolished, thus making the U. S. navy unable to reach the Philippines. Eggleston stated rather frankly that if navies had to stay in their home waters, little danger of war existed in the Pacific, but his words were unwelcome to the American delegation.

NEW YORK OPENS ATTACK AGAINST THE WAR DANGER

New York's campaign against "The War Danger" got under way Wednesday night with an enthusiastic mass meeting held at Bryant Hall, Sixth ave. and 42nd street, under the direction of Section 2, Workers' (Communist) Party, made up in large part of furriers and ladies' garment workers. Other similar meetings on a larger scale will be held as the campaign develops.

"The working class of the world is on its way to another shambles," said William F. Dunne, editor of the DAILY WORKER.

"The workers are not awake to the fact that capitalists the world over are getting ready for another war. The danger is that they will not wake up until it is too late."

J. Louis Engdahl, editor of The DAILY WORKER, was the second speaker. He pointed out the concrete evidence of an attack on the Soviet Union shown in the Royal Dutch Shell Oil-New Jersey Standard Oil efforts to patch up their differences; and in the new arrests of large numbers of Communists in Germany and France.

Joseph Freeman gave some of his recent experiences in the Soviet Union; and M. J. Olgin, the last speaker, rehearsed the many attempts at intervention that have been made by the world powers and showed that the present attack is made not alone upon the Soviet Union but upon the Chinese.

JAILED LEFT WING FURRIER LAUDS JOINT BOARD FIGHT AND DAILY WORKER IN LETTER FROM CELL

Oscar Mileaf, militant left wing furrier, who is now serving six months on Welfare Island, because he is alleged to have "threatened" a scab, and who is under a sentence of from 2½ to 5 years as a result of the Allington case, has written a letter to I. Shapiro, Joint Board leader, in which he expresses his sorrow at his inability to carry on the fight against reaction and lauds The DAILY WORKER as an organ of militant labor:

"July 22, 1927.

Dear Comrade Shapiro,

Just a few lines to let you know that I am feeling fine in health. There is one thing that I worry about and makes me feel that I am in jail, that is because the honest and loyal workers in the needle trades are out on a bitter struggle to win an honest and loyal union, and I am not there to do my duty.

Well, you know as well as I that if it was up to me I would be with you all, doing my share; and I can promise the working class that I will do my utmost for the workers in the future. I will be back in the rank and file as soon as I get my freedom.

Since I read The DAILY WORKER, I learned a lot about what is going on in the working class, and by reading this paper, I gained more spirit and more courage to face those who are misleading the workers. I hope that all the workers realize what the right wing is doing, and as soon as the workers do, the sooner we will have an honest and loyal union.

I have nothing else to write, so I close this letter hoping that the left wing workers will be successful in this bitter struggle.

Your everlasting pal and comrade,

OSCAR MILEAF.

P. S.—Please write to me once in awhile. Let me know how things are getting along in the strike."

Right Wing Renews Its War On Cloakmakers

and will undoubtedly be at their machines again this morning. The boss refused to yield to the right wing pressure and discharge the four workers who continue loyal to the Joint Board.

Thugs Hold 28.

The 28 workers who yesterday were held in the International office all day, had a similar experience on Wednesday, when 20 thugs entered the shop and forced them to go to the right wing office. They were kept there all day while two of the workers in the custody of gangsters were taken back to the shop where the boss was made to give the thugs $200 for back dues.

The needle trades market is expected over this latest move of the right wing. Wherever workers congregated yesterday it was the main topic of conversation.

Chicago Right Wing In Action.

CHICAGO, July 28.—A move for the expulsion of the militant elements of the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union is looming. The fake trial committee consisting of four international vice-presidents and John Fitzpatrick, president, and Ed. Nockels, secretary of the Chicago Federation of Labor cross-examined I. L. Davidson, organizer, and Mc Laylne, secretary of the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union Joint Board yesterday.

Aided N. Y. Cloakmakers.

Davidson was questioned for over an hour. The main crime which he was charged with was organizing the committee of 100 to raise funds for the New York cloakmakers.

Fitzpatrick and Nockels were bitter in their remarks. They stated that "the Chicago Federation of Labor will drive out every progressive element in Chicago, including those who are on trial."

Nockels and Fitzpatrick are acting as judges. Nockels asked Davidson if he would carry out the decision of the committee.

In a brilliant speech Davidson answered the accusations. His main point was that he was working for a democratic trade union movement and on that basis he had carried out all of his past activities.

The main witness against the progressives, Rippmont made the usual cry of "Moscow" and attacked the Trade Union Educational League bitterly.

Trial A Farce.

Manager Levine replied, pointing out that the trial is a joke. "The decision has already been agreed upon," he charged. "It is planned to expel all progressive elements. It is intended to break up the Chicago movement just as the New York union has been destroyed.

"The plan in the long run will not succeed any more in Chicago than it will in New York."

Frame-up Election.

At a local meeting of the workers Salvatore Ninfo, one of the right wing vice-presidents, declared that only those who support Morris Sigman will be allowed on the ballot in the coming union election.

The present trial is a result of the recent action of the General Executive Board of the International stopping the yearly election of officials. It sent four vice presidents, Ninfo, David Dubinsky, Mollie Friedman and H. Krindler here. They got in touch with the Chicago Federation of Labor, the present trial resulting.

11 Dead As Chicago Pleasure Boat Sinks

CHICAGO, July 28.—Eleven bodies had been recovered at 6 o'clock from the capsized excursion boat Favorite, which went over in a storm off the municipal pier at 4 o'clock this afternoon. Rescuers said the death list would reach fifteen. Many of the victims were women and children. The boat carried excursionists between the municipal pier and Lincoln Park, three miles distant along the shore.

A F of L Accepts Paper Box Makers' Union

The Paper Box Makers' Union has been accepted as a federal union by the American Federation of Labor. It has been given a charter and is now known as local 17062.

An important conference has taken place at the office of the union, with representatives of important labor organizations, representing employers who work on commodities for which paper boxes are extensively used. They pledged the full support of their membership to the paper box makers, unanimously agreed on a wide plan of organization work. A letter signed by the committee was drafted which the union will send out to the entire membership.

The union has been carrying on a campaign to organize the trade. Two successful mass meetings have been held and were well attended despite charge their workers for going to the meetings.

Carpenter Local Turns Down Both Referendum Votes

(By Worker Correspondent.)

SALT LAKE CITY, Utah, July 26. —Local 181 of the Carpenters and Joiners Union at a special meeting called July 20th to vote on two referendums sent out by the International, opposed both unanimously.

The first, that no member can hold office or vote on wages or working conditions unless he has been a member for at least one year, roused the rank and file to a high pitch of resentment and anger. Every member of the local present voted against this proposal.

It was hinted that next year, following such undemocratic precedents, President Hutcheson will call for a referendum vote on perpetuating himself in power, and making it impossible to put him out of office.

Oppose Increases.

The second proposition on the question of increasing general officers' salaries was likewise defeated. It was pointed out that the General Officers are already receiving more salary than they deserve for the little work they are doing. A charge was made on the floor that the only result for the workers out of the $350,000 squandered in San Francisco, was the Open Shop. "Our General Organizer," said one speaker, "are leading the workers away from their own and towards the bosses' goal."

Union Officials On Their Way to USSR; Economists Go Too

With James H. Maurer, president of the Pennsylvania Federation of Labor and the Workers Education Bureau, obtaining his passports under difficulties the trade union delegation to the Soviet Union and other European countries finally sailed on the S. S. Roosevelt. The delegation will study labor, industrial and political conditions abroad and report its findings on its return in October.

One month will be spent in Russia—as the land about whose labor movement there are the most contradictory reports. England, Scotland, France, Belgium, Germany, Czechoslovakia, Poland will also be visited.

Accompanying Maurer are the following trade unionists, with one or two more perhaps joining the delegation later:

John Brophy, for 19 years president of District 2, of the United Mine Workers, now a resident of Pittsburgh.

Albert F. Coyle, for the last 4 years editor of the Locomotive Engineers Journal.

Frank Palmer, for several years editor of the Colorado Labor Advocate.

James Fitzpatrick, president of the White Rats, the national union of vaudeville actors, an integral part of the Actors' Equity Assn. and the American Federation of Labor.

While the trade unionists are inspecting labor organizations and industrial plants a staff of economists will be making broad economic surveys. The economists include the following:

Stuart Chase, author of the Tragedy of Waste, an industrial study which the Workers Education Bureau uses as a text book. Chase is also part of the Labor Bureau, Inc. Some years ago he won national attention by his expose of the Packers' Trust, undertaken for the Federal Trade Commission.

Guy Rexford Tugwell, a professor of economics, of Columbia University.

Paul Douglass, economist of the University of Chicago.

Jerome Davis, of Yale University faculty.

B. Brehmer, of the economics department of Columbia.

J. A. Hopkins, of the Committee of 18.

The delegation is hastening back in October because of the press of their private duties. Brophy, for instance, is starting a labor paper in Pittsburgh. Maurer, though his executive board in Harrisburg has ordered his tour, must also not delay his return beyond early October, as the others likewise.

CHICAGO, July 28 (FP).—Attys. Clarence Darrow and Seey. Arthur Fisher of the Emergency Foreign Policy Conference, both of Chicago, have joined the technical staff of the American labor mission to Russia and other European countries which sailed this week. Darrow will join Frank P. Walsh in studying Soviet law and its social effects while Fisher will devote himself to public utilities.

Results of the Plenary Session of the Executive Committee of Communist International Speech by Nikolai Bucharin.

I am of the opinion that in the first place this estimate is entirely wrong. There is of course no thought of denying that there have been defeats, severe defeats. But it is entirely useless to attempt to place these defeats to the account of the so-called "opportunist" majority of the Central Committee, since a large number of these defeats coincided with the culminating point of the leading role played by Comrade Zinoviev in the Comintern, and of the fairly important part taken in the Political Bureau of the C. C. and of the C. P. S. U. by those comrades who are no longer members of this Bureau. I am however not desirous of drawing attention to these matters. I only wish to point out the incorrectness of drawing such wholesale conclusions as the statement that we are weaker at the present time than formerly. There has been a certain regrouping of forces in Europe of late. This phenomenon has received due consideration in the thesis on the "partial stabilization of capitalism." The present period is characterized by a temporary firmer footing of European capitalism, especially of central European capitalism.

The utterances denying the partial stabilization of capitalism are pure nonsense. The economic basis of European capitalism have become stronger, especially the economics of German capitalism. Enormous amounts of capital have been invested in industry. The fact of an economic uplift if further confirmed by the literary data at our disposal, by the index figures, and by the reports of comrades coming from this country. What will happen later is another question. It is probable that the limited capacity of the home market will lead to a mighty collapse after the lapse of a certain time, but it is possible that the curve of development may continue to rise for some time being. There is no doubt whatever that German capitalism has a securer footing than before; and there is as little doubt that there is a simultaneous political consolidation of the forces of German capitalism, a co-ingernation among the agrarians and industrialists belonging to every wing, a firmer establishment of the Fascist organizations, a consolidation of these organizations and their united front, nowadays in the united front in combination with the present German government.

The assertions that Polish capitalism is falling rapidly into decay, are not true by any means. On the contrary, we say that Polish capitalism is passing through a period of increased temporary consolidation, both politically and economically. This is based on a number of causes. In the first place, the Polish bourgeoisie was helped by the British strike, and then by a large number of branch and investments, especially from American capitalists.

There is also the possibility of throwing charges on the oppressed, of forcing in the direction of a stabilization of capitalism, and a consolidation and fresh establishment of its political positions in Central Europe. And there is little doubt that Zinoviev was in error when he lately stated that the stabilization had already disappeared.

The greatest peculiarity of the present situation is however the fact that that inequality in the development of capitalism, referred to at the VII. Enlarged Plenum of the Executive Committee, has become more conspicuous than before. The many-sidedness, the rapidity, and inconsistency in the development of the various departments of the world's economics have found even clearer expression. And though on the one hand we must admit the advancing consolidation of European continental capitalism, on the other hand we observe with equal clearness the rising tempest of the Chinese revolution, which is sweeping through the whole system of international relations in our present state of society, shaking them to their foundations.

When we take into account all these facts of up-to-day development, and when we duly estimate the immensity of the Chinese revolution and its consequences, and the growing power of the Soviet Union, then we can scarcely arrive at the conclusion "that we have become weaker." It is true that our antagonist has become stronger (this we admit when we recognize the "partial stabilization). But in general comparison of forces does not show him to have gained any advantage. The formula of our having become weaker" does not express the actual state of affairs.

The general estimate laid before us by the Opposition is therefore wrong.

As to the "definite proposals" made to us by the Opposition, it must first be observed that all these proposals have been accompanied by unheard of attacks on the C. C. of our Party, and on the Comintern. We have never before heard such utterances as these, so rude and insulting, so entirely adventurous, not even during the inner Party and Comintern discussion of the last few years. And yet Comrades Trotzky and Vujovitch, who have represented the Opposition in the Plenum of the Executive Committee, have literally not brought forward one single definite proposition, not one single word, with respect to the problems which I have touched upon here. And this although I questioned Comrade Trotzky most urgently, in my speech, to deal with the most important questions concerning the preparations being made for war.

During the imperialist war Comrade Trotzky was opposed to the defeat slogan—is he conscious, or is he not conscious, of the error committed by him in the years between 1914 and 1917? Is he conscious of having been in error in rejecting the defeat slogan of "the conversion of imperialist war into civil war?" Is he conscious of this, or does he acknowledge being in the wrong in advancing the peace slogan as our central slogan?

In asking these questions I am not referring to past times. We are concerned with burning questions of the moment. It is an open secret that we are moving rapidly towards an epoch which will put an end to our "pause for breath," and are entering on a period involving wars and attacks upon the Soviet Union. We do not know when the storm will break over our heads, but we know that it is approaching, dark and threatening. And now consider carefully if we take this estimate of our situation seriously, then we must be ideologically prepared for it; fully prepared for it, prepared one hundred per cent. Is it possible to take it less seriously? It is only right to speak of one hundred per cent. We are not dealing with a mere bagatelle; we have to adopt either one definite standpoint, or another; we have to adopt one central slogan, or another. Indecision is of immediate practical importance, and not merely of practical importance for some secondary matter, but for a question of principle, laying down the actual line of organization for our Communist Party.

Have such problems as that of "defeatism," of the peace slogan, of civil war, etc., lost anything of their acuteness? Can we simply put them by?

It is not the most elementary theoretical conscientiousness demands that Comrade Trotzky either acknowledge that he has been in error in the cardinal questions, or that he is in open opposition to Lenin? It is difficult to understand that an attempt to avoid this question at the present time would show utter lack of principle.

The Communist Academy at Moscow Is Not Worried by Rebuff from Harvard "U"

By J. LOUIS ENGDAHL

HARVARD UNIVERSITY, America's proudest, bluestocking center of capitalist learning, doesn't desire to maintain any relations with the Communist Academy of Moscow, U. S. S. R.

Mrs. Henrietta Derman, librarian of the Communist Academy, gave me this information during an interview in her office in Moscow. At the same time she studied a whimsical smile as if to say, "What does it matter? If need-sarry, we can get along without Harvard."

"In my earnest solicitation, she went to the files and brought out the letter from Harvard University, stating its effort to impose an "intellectual blockade" on the Soviet Union. The capitalist supporters and the coupon-clipping alumni of Harvard have been part of the "anti-Red drive," they have been made with as many repeated failures, to establish in the form the economic and the financial blockade against the Soviet Union, not to speak in the open war that was waged once, and is again in the making. So the intelligentsia, that prostitutes itself in the service of the dollar subsidies that the under its provisos, feels that it, too, must follow suit in its own way.

The letter was received from Charles J. Bullock, chairman and director of the Harvard Economic Service, in reply to a letter sent him by Mrs. Derman, requesting that the two institutions exchange material to the mutual benefit of both. The letter reads:

"I have your letter of Nov. 3, proposing an exchange of publications with this organization, and in reply regret to say that, until the government of the United States informs us that the Government of Russia has ceased to encourage or carry on in the United States propaganda inimical to our government and American institutions, we shall be unable to exchange publications with any organization and the direct or indirect control of the Russian Government."

The letter was dated Nov. 22, 1926, and since then the Soviet Union, in the best known because of its many achievements, there any intellectual achievements that has been in error in its cardinal questions, or that he is in open opposition to Lenin? It is difficult to understand that an attempt to avoid this question at the present time would show utter lack of principle.

Just to show that even all capitalist institutions of learning do not adopt the same attitude as Harvard University, Mrs. Derman pointed out that connections are being maintained with 150 universities, colleges, libraries in other countries.

Some of these are the Chicago Public Library, the Ford Research Institute, the American Political Science Association, the Carnegie Endowment, Clarke University, at Rochester, Mass.; the National Economic League, at Boston, Mass.; the Institute for Research of Land Economics; the New York Public Library, the Ross Institute, Texas; Foreign Affairs Committee, New York, and the United States Department of Agriculture.

It is interesting, therefore, to learn that while Harvard University, forming for the United States Government, turns its back on the Communist Academy, the government at Washington, thru its agricultural department, maintains relations with the feared Bolsheviks.

Perhaps the Harvard professors themselves would be shocked to know that Mrs. Derman received part of her education and experience in library methods right here in this country. She was a graduate of Simmons College in Massachusetts, and was for four years a member of the staff of the Congressional Library, at Washington, D. C., a government institution. She was the first to apply the dictionary cataloguie methods to libraries in Russia.

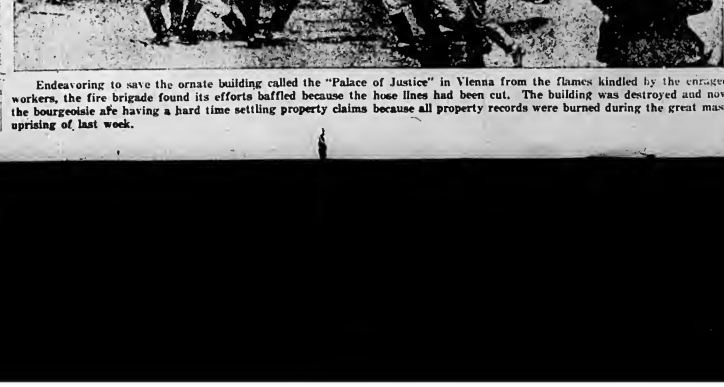
The Communist Academy is not a university in the usually accepted definition of that word. It is unique among the world's educational institutions, not in the fact alone that it is Communist, but also in the fact that it has no students.

It is, in fact, a college of professors—called Professors, as they are called in Moscow. Membership in the Communist Academy is limited exclusively to those who have already produced some original work. This is best shown, of course, by the writing of some book that has been published. The Communist Academy is a center of Marxian thought.

Thus the library becomes the laboratory where the researches of the Academy work. It is large that eye looks, pamphlets, magazines and newspapers are gathered for the use of those carrying on intensive research who are given status.

The great task of assembling this library began in 1918, almost on the very heels of the rise to power of the Soviets in November, 1917. In this period many private libraries were nationalized and turned over to the Academy, which also became the heir of the libraries of many private and public institutions of learning that flourished under czardom, but were liquidated by the revolution.

At the same time, however, entire libraries were purchased abroad, in England, Germany and France, especially during the years 1919, 1920 and 1921, and brought to Moscow.



"If you have any libraries or private collections of books of any value, you can depend upon it that in the United States we shall be glad to purchase it," said Mrs. Derman, with a smile.

Interesting as the actual routine, on account of its rare and valuable material contained in these collections, is especially in great demand. The library of the Communist Academy at the present time number scientific persons. These are buildings that once made up the home of the merchant prince under the czar have become much too small. Plans have already been gone over carefully for an entirely new building of imposing proportions. The architects are busy. But actual building operations have not yet been started.

The Communist Academy has its own publications, including the Messenger of the Communist Academy, a quarterly; The Agrarian Front, a monthly, with a circulation of 8,000, and The Magazine of World Politics and World Economics, also a monthly, circulating 2,500 copies. Two books issued are "Law and the Theory of the State," and "The Revolution of Law." But this is only the beginning.

Tomorrow: England will review some of the huge tasks undertaken by the Communist Academy in collaboration with the Soviet Government.

FIRE BRIGADE TRIES TO SAVE PALACE OF "JUSTICE" FROM FLAMES

Endeavoring to save the ornate building called the "Palace of Justice" in Vienna from the flames kindled by the enraged workers, the fire brigade found its efforts baffled because the hose lines had been cut. The building was destroyed and now the bourgeoisie afe having a hard time settling property claims because all property records were burned during the great mass uprising of last week.

A MARXIAN BLAST AGAINST THE PROFESSORS OF BOURGEOIS ECONOMICS.

THE ECONOMIC THEORY OF THE LEISURE CLASS. By Nikolai Bukharin. International Publishers. Price $2.50.

Every aspiring bourgeois economist starts his career by writing what he modestly calls a refutation of the fundamental economic theories of Karl Marx, but it is noteworthy that each one of them admits that all previous attempts to annihilate Marx have failed and that he, alone, has succeeded. But the analysis at the hands of Marxist of the theories of the latest aspirant to shine as the annihilator of Marxism goes the way of all his predecessors—contributes one more stone to the monument that testified to the unprecedented vitality of Marxism as the one scientific approach to an analysis of, the capitalist system of production.

The fact, however, that the theories of the bourgeois economists are discredited by Marxists before the ink on the first editions of their work is dry does not prevent their being widely taught by the sychophants of the university chairs.

By far the most powerful opponent of Marxism and the one that has gained the most general approval of the university chairs is that of Bohm-Buwerk, the leader of the Austrian school of political economy. Particularly is his work used as the chief text-book in many of the leading American universities and the average product of these universities, having been assured by his professor of economics that Marx has been superseded by Bohm Buwerk, takes it for granted that it is so.

In the many debates the present writer has had with American university professors on the subject of the Marxian law of value, there has never been a single professor who did not rely entirely for his theoretical arguments upon the Austrian school, with its theory of marginal utility as opposed to the Marxian law of value.

The prevalence of this school as the dominant note in all American colleges and universities and its wide acceptance by our leading professors of economics made essential a comprehensive refutation of the whole theory of the Austrians. Unfortunately the condition of the revolutionary movement in the United States has not been favorable to the production of theoretical works of the character required to combat this insidious teaching. Lolas B. Boudin, in his "Theoretical System of Karl Marx," endeavored to deal with Bohm-Bawerk, but his own understanding of Marxism was so mechanical and limited that he failed utterly to portray the economic basis of the theory of marginal utility—the idea that the value of commodities is determined by their utility to the consumer.

Bukharin, probably the foremost theoretician in the revolutionary movement today, a thoroguing Marxist-Leninist, approaches the question of the Austrian school by first placing it in its historical perspective and explaining that the "psychology of consumption is the psychology of the rentier, the psychology of the holder of national and municipal bonds, real estate mortgages and other securities affording fixed interest on investments. This purely parasitical creature, separated from industry, who is not even a trader and who frequently hires people to cut coupons, who is only a consumer of commodities and has no connection with production, naturally looks upon commodities only from the standpoint of the consumer and if he speaks of work at all "means the 'work' of picking flowers or calling for a ticket at the box office of the opera." A product of the decline of the bourgeoisie, knowing nothing of the social life and standing apart from it the economic theory of the coupon-clipper is bound to be strongly individualistic, a theory that rejects evolution and fears the future.

His position in society isolates him even from the ordinary trials and tribulations of the rest of the capitalist class and he loses all interest in social questions.

The proletariat is the antithesis of this coupon-clipping strata of society. In direct contact with the great forces of production carried out on a society basis, perceiving the rapid changes that take place in the sphere of production, the proletariat "swiftly discards the individualistic garb of the classes from which it takes its origin, the urban and rural petty bourgeoisie." It evolves in a direction just the opposite of that taken by the coupon-clippers.

After dwelling upon the details of the differences between the school of Karl Marx and that of Bohm-Bawerk, Bukharin summarizes these differences as follows:

Karl Marx	Bohm-Bawerk
1—Objectivism.	Subjectivism.
2—Historical standpoint	Unhistorical standpoint
The point of view of production.	The point of view of consumption.

Bukharin's analysis of the forerunners of the Austrian School and its translation into English is a real contribution to economic literature in the English language as no other work in this language even attempts such a criticism.

"Another real contribution is the reference in this work to the American school of economics. The prominent spokesman is John Bates Clark. This school is supplanting even Bohm-Bawerk's theory of marginal utility and its economic place is to be sought in that class that dominates the great combinations of finance capital. "The economic process of the transformation of capital into finance capital finds again incorporating the sphere of activity a portion of the bourgeoisie that had held aloof on so far as banking capital is being absorbed in industry and this being made an organizer of production)—for instance, the organizers and managers of the trusts, an extremely active type whose ideology is a militant imperialism and whose philosophy is an active pragmatism. * * * Accordingly the ideology of this type is somewhat different from that of the rentier; it counts on production; it even applies he 'social-organic' method of investigation to the entirety of the social economy." The American school is "a product of a progressive and by no means a declining bourgeoisie; of the two curves now to be observed—that of progressive ascent and that of progressive disintegration—the American school expresses only the former."

Pursuing the dominant schools, with particular attention to the Austrians, Bukharin takes up one by one the fallacies of the bourgeois economists and exposes them to the penetrating and devastating light of Marxism. No worker or propagandist or agitator who wants to equip himself to meet and defeat the apologists of either the coupon-clipping rs or the imperialists can afford to be without this book, and many who are inclined to neglect the ideological fight should heed the wise advice of Comrade Bukharin wherein he declares:

"As for the actual theoretical work of the bourgeoisie, the example of Bohm-Bawerk has revealed it to be a barren desert. But that does not follow that Marxists should entirely ignore this field, for the process of evolution of the proletarian ideology is a process of struggle. Just as the proletariat advances on the economic and political field by means of countless struggles against hostile elements, so it must be also on the higher levels of ideology. Ideology does not descend from the sky, a system perfect in all its parts, but is gradually and painfully built up in a hard and toilsome process of evolution. By means of our criticism of hostile views, we not only ward off the enemy's attacks, but also sharpen our own weapons; a criticism of the systems of our opponents is equivalent to a clarification of our own system."

A BRITISH IMPERIALIST TELLS DULLY OF THE CONQUEST OF ARABIA.

REVOLT IN THE DESERT By T. E. Lawrence Jonathan Cape, London. $7.50.

This much-touted book is about as dull a piece of reading as this writer ever dragged his eyes thru. The highly praised even in such an advanced magazine as the "New Masses", Revolt in the Desert is nothing but a tedious account of how Great Britain, chief thru the instrumentality of the self-styled political and military genius, T. E. Lawrence, defeated the Turks in Arabia, during the World War, deceived the Arabs that could be bribed and murdered those that could not be bribed or deceived.

If there is any saving grace in this book it is in the touch of cynicism that creeps in occasionally and which suggests that all men are rogues. Lawrence got this way from his association and service with the imperialist rogues of Great Britain. His contempt for the Arabs breaks out thru every page.

The book is written very much in the style of the monthly report of a travelling salesman, giving the names of the towns he covered and of the various forelades he took to the theatre and the amount of money he spent on them in the interest of bigger and better orders.

Lawrence had a generous expense account and when the sheiks and sheriffs indicated by various signs that their devotion to the allied cause was suffering from attacks of pernicious anemia, the imperialist agent took them aside and greased their palms. The victims were the tribesmen who thot they were taking it out on the Turks for the oppressive rule of the Sultans. They did not realize they were exchanging masters and sacrificing their lives for the change. They know it now.

THE NEW MAGAZINE

Section of The DAILY WORKER

SATURDAY, JULY 30, 1927 — This Magazine Section is issued every Saturday by The DAILY WORKER — ALEX BITTELMAN, Editor

EDITOR'S NOTES

By ALEX BITTELMAN

DEFINITELY and openly William Green and Matthew Woll have been doing their best at the Fifth Congress of the Pan-American Federation of Labor to whitewash the brigandage and murder by American imperialism in Nicaragua. They exerted all their efforts to prevent the congress from speaking out plainly and energetically in condemnation of the Nicaraguan killings and of the American government responsible for it. In this the Green-Woll combination succeeded largely but not fully. The congress did go on record, despite Green and Woll, protesting against the murder and demanding the withdrawal of American military forces from Nicaragua.

The militant delegates from Nicaragua and Venezuela, whose courageous efforts were responsible for forcing the congress into action, were also instrumental in opening up a discussion on the so-called Monroe Doctrine, attacking it for what it is—an instrument of American imperialism to subjugate and oppress the peoples of Latin-America.

But Green and Woll, who had been humiliated on the previous issues, succeeded in taking their revenge after all by attacking the Communists and the militants generally, thus attempting to placate their masters—the imperialists of the United States—who were naturally greatly displeased with the course of the congress in the beginning of its deliberations. It was exceedingly beneficial to the labor movement in the Americas that the Nicaraguan and Venezuelan delegates succeeded in bringing forth the issue of struggle against American imperialism in Latin-America, forcing Morones, of the Mexican Federation of Labor, to come along part of the way and defending the efforts of Green and Woll to keep the whole matter out of the congress.

The deliberations and actions of this congress, though inadequate and indecisive, will yet prove of inestimable value if as a result of what happened in Washington, D. C., a real anti-imperialist movement comes forth uniting the labor movement of Latin-America for genuine struggle against the domination of the imperialists of the United States.

The Nicaraguan outrages happened in an "unlucky" hour, as one of the capitalist papers had put it. It was "unlucky" for Coolidge for this to have happened almost on the eve of presidential elections when he is already confronting formidable sentiment against the imperialist policies of his administration. And it was also "unlucky" for William Green to have "this thing" happen just at the opening of the Congress of the Pan-American Federation of Labor. The New York Times puts it this way:

> "One of the unlucky aspects of the whole business is that the Pan-American Federation of Labor was meeting in Washington at the very time when these bloody occurrences were reported in Nicaragua. Violent speeches were naturally made by some of the Latin-American delegates, and a resolution of protest was to be drafted and sent to the state department."

One can sense in these words of the spokesman of Wall Street an effort to apologize for William Green's failure to keep the congress completely in check. Green and Woll will undoubtedly be exonerated by their masters in the imperialist camp, particularly those who are inclined towards the democratic party, like the Times, and who are not averse to the idea of hurting the political fortunes of the Coolidge administration just a little bit. But

The New War Danger Facing Soviet Russia

By G. VOROSHILOV

(Commissar of Defense Of the Soviet Union)

A FEW months ago I contended that the Soviet Union was going to have to encounter difficulties more independent of its own approaching difficulties. Since that time I have repeated this fact in various speeches and I pointed out that despite all our efforts, despite our determined peace policy, our enemies wished to force us into war.

Recent events have completely corroborated the analysis of comrade Bukharin. A few weeks after Bukharin's speech, we received the Chamberlain Note, and then followed the events which are now well-known. Our country is approaching a new period of difficulties, and it is our duty to prepare ourselves in all seriousness for the trials which are facing us.

One can still meet the opinion that we will be successful in our manoeuvring and be able to avoid a collision with the enemy. This opinion is to a certain extent justified, but it does not represent the whole truth. The whole truth is that we are now approaching a period of history in which our class enemies will inevitably force us into war.

What has been our international situation up to the present? The majority of countries trades with us, the majority of countries recognizes us, but at the same time the capitalist world tells us through the lips of individual politicians, through the speeches of the representatives of the most reactionary section of the bourgeoisie, that it regards the existence of the Soviet Union as a temporary phenomenon which must be brought to an end. The bourgeoisie of the whole world is united in the fond hope that we will one day be destroyed. Not only Great Britain, but the whole capitalist world is of the opinion that we, that is, our state which has a new structure, who are building up socialism have no right to exist and must disappear from the stage. We have been in this situation now for ten years, since the commencement of the Soviet Power. Temporarily the situation relaxed, sometimes it was intensified. Now we are faced with a severe intensification. In face of this, can we expect a new period in which the hostility of the capitalist world towards us will relax?

I believe that the answer to the question is in the negative.

It was no accident that in the British House of Commons the representatives of the whole bourgeoisie supported the proposal of the conservatives to break off diplomatic relations with us. Although the British bourgeoisie as a whole is by no means interested in a breach of the diplomatic and economic relations with us. And because the whole bourgeoisie nevertheless supported the breach, then that proves that we have no right to expect a new spring of friendly and neighbourly relations with the outside world, but that, on the contrary, we must prepare ourselves for the worst. The compartively embassy in Peking, which was carried out under the instructions of their governmental circles, was intended as a decoy. The British capitalists thought that we would answer the insults and maltreatment heaped upon the employees of our institutions in China with a note or protests. They thought above all, that we would not undertake any armed action against Chiang Kai-shek, who was directly responsible for the raid upon our Peking embassy. The British capitalists wanted to kill three birds with one stone: by provoking us into war in the East, they hoped to put a stop to the progress of the Chinese revolution, they hoped also further to promote weakening of our country in consequence of the war and finally a weakening of the defense of our western frontier which would have made it easier for them to urge our neighbour against the Ukraine and White Russia.

But our government realized these not over-intelligent plans of the British capitalists in time. We did not permit ourselves to be provoked. In a difficult moment we retained our coolness and level-headedness. Following upon the failure of the raid upon our representation in Peking, came the raid upon our Trade Delegation and Arcos in London. The aim of this raid was to discover documents which might have compromised our employees and been used as material to accuse us of anti-British propaganda. No such documents were found, and the British government was compelled to declare that sufficient grounds were present for a breach with us without offering any concrete proofs.

The following acts of the British bourgeoisie are known to everyone. They are laid down both in the note of Litvinov to Poland, and in the statements of our government published in the press. We accuse the British bourgeoisie very definitely not merely of bearing the responsibility for the organization of the murder of Voikoff in Warsaw, but also that the British secret service guarantees and supports counter-revolutionary, terrorist and murderous undertakings in our country. The published statements of our government contained only a part of the facts which are at our disposal. But this part is sufficient in order to show the increased activity of our enemies who are openly led by British official organs. We have arrested British spies very often before, we have, however, never made any great stir about it. We knew very well that the cruder

Green and Woll will NOT be exonerated by the oppressed peoples of Latin-America and by the workingclass of the United States. The workers of America will neither forget nor forgive the agents of imperialism in the American labor movement and will proceed to organize and struggle despite them and against them.

The Chicago Tribune, which speaks for most of big Western capital and whose political attitudes be in the direction of the republican party, endorses fully the murderous actions of the American imperialists in Nicaragua, and is making a frank appeal to the egotistic interests of the reactionary labor bureaucracy and the corrupted upper section of the labor aristocracy. The Tribune makes its appeal on what it calls: THE LABOR STAKE IN CENTRAL AMERICA.

It argues like this:

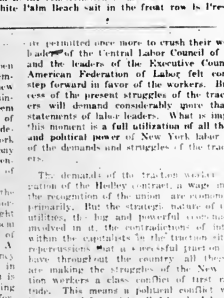
"Labor in the United States will not find its future in visions and fallacies. It will find its welfare in the production of raw materials and the manufacture of, them in ordered society. Organized labor is based upon a recognition of force as a means of acquiring good. It is much more willing to use force in domestic affairs than the United States has been in international affairs."

And further in the same editorial, the Tribune says:

"The world will do better with order in disordered regions nearby than it will do with violence and insecurity. The United States will do bitter with doors closed to European maladiesomeness and doors open to the production of materials. In this there is a higher humanity than there is to be found in the armed politics of jungle adventurers. And in it labor has a stake."

The Chicago Tribune, as is its habit, is very frank but not quite frank. What it meant is not that labor has a stake in the acquisitions of American imperialism, but that the reactionary labor bureaucracy has such a stake. The Green and the Woll's reason along the same lines as the Chicago Tribune, and they do so because they represent in the American labor movement the interests of American imperialism and of that upper section of labor which is corrupted by imperialism. The mass of American labor has no "stakes" in Central America. It is as much a victim of American imperialist oppression as are the peoples of Latin-America. And its answer to the Chicago Tribune will be: a strong and militant labor movement at home, fraternal unity with the exploited peoples of Latin-America for common struggle against the [illegible] imperialism.

The Ohio coal operators are preparing to open their mines with scab labor by equipping themselves with armed thugs, machine guns, etc. A new and sinister move is being made to break the miners' strike, but Lewis and his henchmen don't seem to notice it. And Matthew Woll, vice president of the American Federation of Labor, engaged in destroying the labor movement among the New York needle trades workers, cannot be "expected" to pay much attention to the miners' strike except to encourage the reactionary and treacherous policies of the Lewis administration.



Rank and file sentiment and spirit among the miners has not been weakened, despite the demoralizing tactics of Lewis. The miners want to fight but the reactionary leadership would not let them mobilize all their resources. The deliberations of the District time Convention of the U. M. W. of A. are indicative of a strong sentiment of militancy among the rank and file which the opposition in the convention has not as yet fully expressed. It is becoming absolutely imperative that the left wing and the progressives in the miners' union steps forward more militantly than before to resist the treacherous moves of the Lewis administration and to strengthen the ranks of the strikers in insure their victory. The extension of the strike into the anthracite region thus making it a national strike for a national agreement is at present the most urgent and imperative step in the struggle against the coal operators.

The existing traction situation in New York city is full of great and important possibilities for the strengthening of the labor movement economically and politically and in every other way. But to achieve this end, the labor movement will have to display real progressive and militant leadership which (this must be said) is not to be found in the circles that dominate today either the Central Labor Council of New York or the Executive Council of the American Federation of Labor.

This progressive and militant leadership, which is so essential for a full and proper utilization of the traction situation for New York labor, will and must come forward from the ranks of the labor movement, from its left wing and progressive elements. And the first prerequisite for this is a definite program and a clear line of policy based upon the widest application of the united front.

The workers employed by the New York traction companies are decidedly against the company union and against the labor conditions imposed upon them by the Hedley contract. By the time these lines appear in print, these workers may be on strike to enforce their economic demands and to establish a genuine union. Because of the pressure from the workers, and because of the political complications that may arise for some of the dominant labor reactionaries in New York if the traction companies are permitted once more to crush their workers, the leaders of the Central Labor Council of New York and the leaders of the Executive Council of the American Federation of Labor felt compelled to step forward in favor of the workers. But the success of the present struggles of the traction workers will demand considerably more than friendly statements of labor leaders. What is imperative at this moment is a full utilization of all the economic and political power of New York labor in support of the demands and struggles of the traction workers.

The demands of the traction workers—the abrogation of the Hedley contract, a wage increase and the recognition of the union—are economic demands primarily. But the strategic nature of the traction utilities, the big and powerful economic interests involved in it, the contradictions of interest even within the capitalists in the traction situation, the repercussions that a successful traction strike will have throughout the country all these elements are making the struggles of the New York traction workers a class conflict of first rate importance. This means a political conflict which must be prepared for and handled by the labor movement with a complete economic and political program looking toward the fullest mobilization of all the industrial and political resources of labor in support of the traction struggles. Only in this way will the struggle of the traction workers be won and labor as a whole strengthened.

The Danger of War

By PIERRE SEMARD (Paris)

Comrade Semard wrote this article in the Sante Prison in Paris. After recovering his freedom on the 25th of June by a Royalist trick, he returned to his post in the Party without making any attempt to hide from the authorities. He wished neither to make use of royalist mercy nor to give himself up voluntarily to the courts. The courts have given him a period of ten days in which to present himself at the prison to serve his sentence. Ed.

THE workingclass of France is under the pressure of the bourgeois offensive: reduction of wages and growing increases of prices, in reason of indirect taxation and customs which fall upon the proletarian consumers; ruthless measures of rationalization the costs of which the workers have to pay. Hand in hand with the economic offensive there is also a political offensive whose object is to crush the resistance of the proletariat: persecution of the advance guard of the workingclass, the Communist Party, the arrest and imprisonment of its officials; attacks upon the trade union movement; abolition of the right to strike, etc.

At the same time the danger of war internationally is growing. International capitalism is arming for the final struggle under the leadership of British imperialism against the first Workers' and Peasants' State in the world, against the bulwark of the workers in all other countries. It is the broad masses of toiling humanity in the capitalist countries who are to bleed in this next war for the salvation of the capitalist system in the whole world. The French bourgeoisie is also taking up its position in the battle front. Although it diplomatically hypocritically deny this to the outside world. Yet the actions of French bourgeoisie show that it is no better than the British. Side by side with the British imperialists it is already carrying on war in China against the revolution. In Indo-China and in the other French colonies it is oppressing the native population and trying to throttle its movement for emancipation. And in France itself it is systematically preparing for the new war. The military budgets and the shameful mobilization law of the so-called Paul Boncour which aim to place old men, women and children in the services of the militarists as also the trade unions and the co-operatives, mean nothing less. There is no doubt about the enemy in this new war. The furious campaign of the French press against the Soviet Union should open the eyes of the blindest.

In this international situation, the National Conference of the Communist Party of France will meet on the 29th of June. The chief tasks which it will have to perform arise with iron necessity from the double pressure of the capitalists.

First of all the Party must set its aims in the struggle against the campaign of the bourgeoisie against the living conditions of the workingclass which threatens also the existence of the workingclass organizations. Secondly, it must prepare and organize the struggle to prevent the planned armed attack of the imperialists against the Soviet Union and for the destruction of the Chinese revolution. This task must be the central point in the coming National Conference and indeed in the whole policy of the French Communist Party.

Some of our comrades assume that the danger of war is not immediate, that we have still sufficient time to awaken and mobilize the masses. That is a great mistake which may have serious consequences. For the latest events show with all clarity that the danger of war is increasing and that it is as great as it was on the evening of the 4th of August 1914. Just as in the period which preceded the great imperialist slaughter, all the imperialist states are arming feverishly. Almost everywhere incidents are taking place reminiscent of Agadir and Sarajevo. The clouds of war are gathering over the Pacific. Big guns have already sounded in China.

The intervention of the imperialists in China is not aimed to defend the concessions, but it is a part of the offensive plan of the great powers against the Soviet Union. It is necessary that all workers, all toilers realize clearly—for some of them are not yet conscious of it—that under the leadership of capitalism a real class war of the imperialists against the workers and peasants of China and the Soviet Union is in preparation.

Communism threatens the capitalist states from within. It threatens them still more from Russia where it is in power, and it threatens them in China where it acts as a spur to the revolutionary movement. Thus capitalism can feel the ground rocking under its feet. That is the reason for its determined preparation for a class war. In order to create the anti-Bolshevist united front, the capitalists of the various countries are striving, up to the moment without success, to moliden their mutual contradictions. If they once succeed, then the war against revolutionary China and against the Soviet Union can take its course.

According to the imperialist plans, the Soviet Union is to be attacked upon all front at once. First of all economically and politically through the breaking off of diplomatic and commercial relations and by the formation of an economic and financial blockade of the Soviet Union. Then militarily: by the forcing of the border states into war, in China by the destruction of the revolutionary movement and finally with the assistance of the reactionary generals, by attacking the borders of the Soviet Union in the Far East.

All the forces of the working and peasant masses must be mobilized tirelessly against this imperialist plan to force an anti-Bolshevist war, against this hellish attack upon the bulwark of peace in the world, the Soviet Union. This is the task before the Communist Parties. The united front of the imperialists must be met with the united front of the workingclass, the united front of the toilers.

The Communist Party of France will place itself at the head of the action against the threatening war. Recently it has been shown, for instance by the parliamentary by-election in the agricultural department Aube and in the municipal elections in Paris and the surrounding country, that the influence of the Communist Party both inside the workingclass and inside the peasantry, is steadily growing. This explains the bitter campaign of the French government, of the Minister of the Interior Sarraut and the Minister of Justice Barthou against the Communist Party and its leaders. But it is just the man hunt after the Communists which proves to the broad masses that it is only the Communists who are feared by the bourgeoisie.

The Communist Party alone is the defender of the old revolutionary traditions of the French proletariat. The socialists have entered the united front with the bourgeoisie. And, as the new mobilization law of Paul Boncour proves, they even do not hesitate to take the intiative in preparing for a new war. Despite all persecution, however, the Communist Party will continue its struggle against the offensive of capital and for the defense of the Soviet Union and it will double and treble its forces in this fight. Our immediate task is an intense political enlightenment of the masses, and to give our rising influence an organizational expression, so that we may do our duty victoriously.

All children know that animals that fly have two wings, a right wing and a left wing. But very few children know that in workers' organization there are also two wings. There is a right wing and a left wing. In this little article we are very briefly going to explain to you the nature of these wings. These wings are not like the wings of a bird that help it to fly, but these wings represent two different groups in the labor movement.

The left wing is that group of workers (many of whom are organized in the Trade Union Educational League) that stand always ready to fight for the interests of the workers against the bosses. They fight not only against the bosses but also against union leaders who betray the workers to the bosses. They also explain to the workers the need of organizing all the workers into a Labor Party so that they could elect their own representatives to congress instead of electing republicans and democrats who are against the workers. This is in brief the nature of the left wing.

The right wing consists mainly of two elements, some misguided workers, and traitorous leaders. These leaders betray the workers to the bosses. They fight the left wing as in the furriers' strike. They shoot the workers when they revolt as in Vienna recently. Many other such examples can be given, which prove that the right wing is the worst enemy of the workingclass.

Articles on this subject will be welcomed and printed.

NO MORE BOSS

By JOSEPH SHEMETH

The capitalist, the short fat man,
Just now thinks that he's the boss
But when the workers are united,
The rich boss will be a total loss

IN GENEVA

They're a land across the ocean
Where the great old powers meet
Each one is with zeal discussing
What to do with the others' fleet.

Each power in its own way is trying
To deceive all the others there
Trying to show it is very weak
On the sea and in the air

In reality all are ready,
In case there should be war
With many kinds of weapons
And men from near and far

Disarmament is but a blind
To hide real motives there
For all have men and all have fleets
And all have ships of the air.

Workers, if they ask us to fight
Fight in their bloody war
Let us hurl a defiant NO at them
And ask them what they are

That we should sacrifice our lives
And kill our fellow men
Only to give more profits
And make it pleasant for them

Workers, you answer must always be
A bold and defiant NO
Not for loss or profiteer
To battle will we go

But when at length the time has come
The time that soon must be
Then will we strike a mighty blow
That the workers might be free

Clara Zetkin and Her Life Work

By KAETHE DUNCKER
(Berlin)

COMRADE Clara Zetkin whose 70th birthday we shall celebrate on the 5th of July, is one of the old guard of the international workingclass movement. She is one of those who have passed through the "heroic age," through that time when it required much greater courage and heroism to champion the cause of socialism than it does today, for then there was nothing but persecution and personal sacrifices for the upholders of socialism.

Clara Zetkin was one of that small group of personalities including Bebel and Wilhelm Liebknecht, which set its stamp upon the social-democratic party or at any international congress and who represented a part of the tradition of the international workingclass movement. And, most important of all, she was one of those few who, when the German social-democratic party developed into a petty bourgeois party of reformism, never sacrificed her revolutionary principles. In this respect her name is bracketed with the names of Karl Liebknecht, Rose Luxemburg and Franz Mehring. When in these days we honor the life work of Clara Zetkin therefore, it is a considerable part of the history of the international workingclass movement which passes before our eyes.

The work of Clara Zetkin in the proletarian women's movement shows us more clearly than anything else, the great possibilities of a leading personality inside a mass movement. Mass movements do not grow from thin air; they develop more or less quickly under the direct influence of the economic transformations. But the task of a leading personality is to assist that which lies in the elementariness of a mass movement to give itself conscious expression and thus to ensure that the movement itself, which might otherwise expend its forces in a disorganized and wasteful manner, expresses itself in a united and consolidated form. Assuming, as was the case with Clara Zetkin, that the leader is perfectly clear with regard to the idea expressed in the mass movement and with this clarity combines a passionate devotion and a preparedness will.

The work of women's industry in Germany had already taken on a very considerable extent in the eighties of the last century. In 1882 there were four and a quarter millions of women under from female servants, earning their own living. There were at this time, it is true, only a million and a half directly engaged in industry and commerce. But in the textile industry alone, over 200,000 women were working, and great numbers in the tailoring, dressmaking, tobacco and paper industries.

The objective conditions for a growth of class consciousness amongst women were therefore present. The subjective consequences were not favorable to this growth. The majority of the women workers was petty-bourgeois in its thinking and still bound to the churches. The women were compelled to go out into the world, owing to the breakup of the old principle that the woman belonged in the home. They regarded women's work as a temporary phenomenon both for the individual and for society as a whole. No wonder! The men who had lost their bourgeois position were unacquainted with the idea of revolutionary in their respect. Added to this was the difficulty to approach the women by agitation and organization. Many of them worked in small workshops or as home and further the application of the laws relative to coalition and organization as unbelievably as the case for the European federal states—made it difficult to organize the women in trade unions and rendered their political organization impossible almost everywhere.

All these circumstances together with the speedy growth of capitalism and labor in the movement. Small groups which subsequently became the nucleus for the mass movement themselves only a few industrial districts such as Berlin, the textile districts of Saxony, Westphalia, etc. On the other hand the bourgeois women's movement had already attained a very considerable growth and did not lack intelligent leaders and eloquent speakers. In its first flush this movement even felt itself to be the representative of all women irrespective of class distinctions. It commenced to make propaganda for its ideas and its organizations amongst the petty bourgeois circles, amongst the women working at home, amongst the tailoresses, washerwomen, etc. It was therefore of very great importance that the proletarian women had a leader in Clara Zetkin, Marxistically schooled, many-sided, eloquent in speech and writings, to organize the isolated small groups of proletarian women under the banner of the international working class movement.

In the eighties of the last century Clara Zetkin lived abroad, first in Switzerland and then in Paris. She was active in the workingclass movement both in speech and in writing, together with her husband, Ossip Zetkin, a Russian refugee expelled from Germany. After her husband's death and the abolition of the anti-socialist laws, Clara Zetkin returned to Germany where she found employment in the publishing house of Dietz in Stuttgart. In 1892 she took over the social democratic women's newspaper "Gleichheit" ("Equality") which had been founded a year previously by Emma Ihrer under the name "Arbeiterin" (Woman Worker).

...d Suburb in France

By Amy Schechter.

WHEN the revolutionary workers of France make demands on their government they take no chances about being heard. They have a reason for putting their demands in such form that even the close, if not official attention to their government, as well as attention of the masses of workers throughout the land. Lately, in order to give emphasis to the need for amnesty for the hundreds of class-war prisoners in French jails and condemned to the horrible death in life of Devil's Island, the workers of Dumoulin, a suburb of Paris, elected as their candidate in the municipal elections of Ivry, the workers' suburb of Paris called the "Red City."

Dumoulin is serving a four years' sentence as a leader of the 1925 mutiny in the Mediterranean Fleet against France's imperialist Moroccan campaign. The Red suburb returned Dumoulin by a big majority, and when the election results were announced, thousands of workers, waiting in front of the Mairie, broke into the International, and then went marching through the streets of the town singing revolutionary songs and shouting their demand for amnesty.

The French Communist Party attaches great importance to the election of the young sailor. It is a gesture that will catch people's imaginations—particularly the imaginations of the young workers and peasants serving in France's army and navy, and help in arousing sentiment not alone for amnesty, but also in favor of the Party's anti-imperialist campaign against war on revolutionary China and Soviet Russia.

The 1925 mutiny is still fresh in the minds of the French workers. The uprising, spreading from vessel to vessel of the fleet sent into Mediterranean waters to assist in carrying on the Moroccan campaign, coincided with the great anti-war conferences held throughout France by the Workers' and Peasants' United Front Committees of Action.

An account of the Marseilles Peasants' and Workers' Conference giving a vivid picture of how sailor delegates slipped away secretly from their ships and came before the immense audience to pledge the solidarity of the class-conscious men in the navy with the other sections of proletarian France against the government's imperialist ventures.

This movement among the sailors was distinctly revolutionary in character.

"We refuse to be the accomplices of the bankers," declared the sailors, stationed at Toulon, in a letter to the Committee of Action. "We have heard your eloquence—the sailors understand the slogan of fraternization."

Already our comrades of the Strasbourg and the Courbet have taken a stand against the war. The violent repression which they have had to suffer will not hold us back. It will only strengthen us in our decision.

Whatever the cost may be, we shall find a way to answer you as it shall seem to be most effective.

"We belong with you—you will help us. It is through the fraternization of the exploited proletariat, and of the enslaved soldiers and sailors, and the oppressed colonial peoples—it is through our common action that we shall be able to put an end to the war in Morocco."

At the time of the mutiny, 25 year old Dumoulin was quarter-master of the Courbet, where a number of sailors were killed and wounded in the struggle with the officers. Dumoulin took a leading part in events on shipboard, and then, later, made a splendid showing at the court martial by which he was condemned.

Of course Dumoulin will not be freed immediately because of his election. But, in the meantime his election will give fresh impetus to the amnesty and the anti-war campaigning. The French government has frequently testified, of late, to the effectiveness of the present Communist anti-militarist campaign with its definite class base, and freedom from the bourgeois pacifist illusions of the anti-militarist campaigns of the pre-world war period. Their latest testimony to the effectiveness of Communist anti-war tactics is the imprisonment of seven of the leading party members on charges of treason because of their anti-war propaganda.

As formal receipt expressed it as an attack on the Communists delivered in the Chamber of Deputies.

"The anti-militarist campaign of 20 years are trying to penetrate the morale of the country, but the present anti-militarist action of the Communist Party is infinitely more dangerous. It is no longer a question of simple revolutionary ideas, but of a veritable war machine directed against the army and the nation."

The New War Danger Facing Soviet Russia

capitalist world could not live peacefully side by side.

But—although we were aware of this primitive truth, we did our utmost to maintain the peaceful breathing space. Since the first days of the existence of Soviet Russia, Great Britain has fought us bitterly. First of all by armed intervention and then by supporting Kolchak and Denikin with money and arms. But we destroyed both those weapons of Great Britain.

From 1921 to 1927 the bourgeoisie hoped that although it were impossible to overthrow us by force of arms, it might be possible that we would be suffocated in our own economic difficulties. But the bourgeoisie was quickly compelled to recognize that this hope also would not be realized. The economic system of the Soviet Union grew and strengthened. Then the bourgeoisie once more returned to the old methods of struggle. In recent years Great Britain has carried on against us at a great rate in Poland, Esthonia, Roumania and Latvia. These preparations have found their form in the form of a considerable increase of the military power of Roumania and particularly of Poland. If despite all this Great Britain has up to the present time not succeeded in driving us to war, but the only reason was that the British bourgeoisie had obviously miscalculated. At the time it openly secured the support of other capitalist states, but in the decisive moment those states refused to keep their promises. Only Germany and even France, Italy, Poland and the Baltic states declare that their policy is not the policy of Great Britain.

From all this is it clear that, with the breaking off of relations with the Soviet Union, Great Britain has not achieved its aim which consisted in the immediate opening up of military operations against us. Great Britain is not sufficiently strong and will any serious importance in a struggle against it. It is superfluous to say that the bandit raids, the bomb attempts, as they were carried out in Leningrad, cannot lead to any noticeable results. Other measures are necessary to draw our country into war or to commence the attack upon us. It would be serious only if Great Britain were successful in forming if not a military, then at least an economic united front against us. Great Britain is attempting to do this. The hope that as we are no industrial country, an economic blockade would cause us great economic difficulties, forms the condition for a successful military attack upon us.

I don't believe that Great Britain will be able to form such a united front against us. The interests of the individual capitalist countries are too contradictory. This was shown by the recent breaking off of relations with our Union by the British reactionaries. Immediately after this action we received numerous offers from capitalist groups in other countries to give us credit upon conditions not less favorable than those we received from Great Britain. Also, the capitalist states must take their own inner political situation, the spirit of the working masses, into account. And in some countries they must reckon that the breaking off of commercial relations with the Soviet Union would inevitably produce severe economic consequences concerned.

But in any case, we must be prepared for the worst, and the worst is that the British bourgeoisie will prepare with all its forces a united front for a military attack upon us. That can happen in two years time or in one year, it is even possible, though improbable within a few months.

What is our situation? A short while ago I visited the whole Ukrainian military district, I visited the Black Sea Fleet and the Donetz Basin, and I had occasion to observe the spirit of the working and peasant masses. I must say, that apart from the Red Army, which must of course be ready at any time, the workers and peasants are also prepared in a moment's notice to defend the socialist fatherland with the last drop of their blood.

But today that is no longer enough. Today it is probably not possible to defeat us with a direct military attack. Our army is in such a condition that it will be able to reject the attacks of the enemy. But in order to be really prepared to resist the enemy, we must also prepare the Hinterland. We must so prepare ourselves for the defense of the Soviet Republic that the economic system of our country will be able to work normally in case of war. It is a matter of course that we are opposed to war. We are building up our economic system, and the construction of socialism is developing at such a rate that in five or six years we will have an economic organism that will stand any pressure. Today a war would cause us great economic difficulties unless we are prepared. Activities properly.

The only way of avoiding these dangers is to, re-double our whole economic work. This is not an empty phrase. If war should break out, then we shall have to do it at once, then we may arrive in a situation where a war would cost us everything that we have achieved in the previous comparatively peaceful breathing space. We must already begin to reckon everything exactly. In case of war we must know exactly what branches of production must be limited, what branches extended, etc. Also we are to dispose of our labor forces so that our economic system can continue without interruption.

The second task is to be watchful, and still more so than ever before. Our enemies are working with bombs and arms, more than ever before. This decause that every worker should observe what is going on around him so that he as a member of the dominant class can guard the property of the Soviet Union with his arms. Such an atmosphere must be created in our factories that no bomb has any room for work and that no traitor can harm us. Watchfulness and attentiveness must be our principle—[illegible] war for our defense against attack.

In the Land of the Free

By H. G. Weiss

AMERICA, the land of the free and the home of the brave. The place where John D. made a fortune out of nothing and where any worker can get a job at decent wages if he isn't a Communist, or a natural-born loafer. Albert stood on the corner of Washington Street and admitted — or rather his stomach admitted for him—that he was hungry. But what to do about it? There were more men in town than jobs. All the collars were cleaned out, all the knees mended, and all the garbage gathered up. The "loafers" had been busy chopping wood, painting fences, doing odd jobs, until now, apparently, there were no more odd jobs left to do. The stout women proprietor of the 25c eating house on Sixth Street had fed him a couple of times—but the last time she had told him not to come back. But Albert had gone back. He would wash dishes, mop floors, peel potatoes—anything—if she would give him a meal. But the stout woman was adamant. She didn't want any more loafers around. Let him earn a living like she had to. So Albert—along with hundreds of others—stood on a street corner and found himself in a position to appreciate what a working stiff of Palestine once said: "The birds of the air have nests, the foxes of the earth have holes, but the son of man hath no place to lay his head." He sniffed the air hungrily. An appetising odor was wafted to his nostrils. The stout womnn proprietor was setting what looked to be a steaming meat loaf on a ledge outside a bakery window. He felt he never would be able to take his eyes off that meat loaf. His knees felt wobbly under him; the saliva trickled in a thin stream down the corner of his mouth. Oh to be biting into that meat loaf, that juicy meat loaf! To be savoring it, swallowing it!

"Hungry, kid?"

He turned and saw a tnin, evidently an unfortunate like himself, who had been engaged canvassing work or food from door to door. This person was taller than himself, older, and by the placid look of his face, better fed.

Was he hungry? The nod was hardly needed for answer. Almost as if the meat loaf were a magnet with power to draw them, his eyes swung back to it, his nostrils twitched like those of an animal.

"Well, if you wanna eat, do as I say, see? Go to the back door where the meat is and butter the woonan for a hand-out."

"But I've been there already and she turned me down."

"Never mind that. I bet we get somethin' puta her this time. You see if we don't. If you wanna eat, go ahead."

The womnn was angry to see him at the back-door for the second time and told him so in no uncertain language. When he regained the sidewalk and looked around for the tall man, that worthy was beckoning him from a street corner half a block away. Jogging him, he was grasped by the arm and led around several blocks before the man stopped and withdrew from under the sheltering folds of his ragged coat the meat loaf! At his astonishment the man laughed.

"Sniped it, when the old hen was bawlin' you out in the back." he explained airily. He broke the meat loaf in two and gave Albert the larger piece. The latter did not know whether he ought to accept food thus stolen, but hunger made short work of scruples. Sitting his piece he devoured it ravenously, to the last crumb, feeling renewed strength and vigor flowing back into his body with every mouthful. Food it was good! He could have eaten thrice as much again. His companion clapped him on the shoulder.

"That's the way to hide the goods," he grinned. "It'd take a stomach-pump to find the evidence now. What's yuh name, kid?"

Albert.

Well, Albert, mine's Jake. Put yer there."

Jake was a jolly rascal. Albert drifted with him to a small park on Jefferson Street where they lay on the grass and sunned themselves.

"So the old man kicked the bucket, the bank got the farm, and your maw's gone to live with an aunt," he said sympathetically. "It's a tough time to hunt work in the city, kid, and it ain't better nowhere else, either. Me, I used to carve a hoe—when I wasn't heavin' a muck-stick—but the buildin' boom's all shot to hell and they ain't an axe huntin' for jobs that don't exist. We'll take it easy until three-thirty and then beat it over to the Volunteers and git some san'wiches."

"I didn't know there were places you could eat for nothin'."

"Nothin' me eye! Them people live offa guys like us. They use us as an excuse to beg the business men for checks, and collect old cloes and sell 'em. They're like the Salvation Army, in the second-hand business. Their wagons goes round and picks up the stale box-lunches. Tait's and Leighton's have left over from yesterday. We 'get' them. For nothin'? Oh, hell!"

When Jake and Albert went over to the Volunteers an hour later, a hundred or two other men were already lined up. Jake cursed because the two sandwiches each received were made of jelly. "They long the meat ones for themselves," he complained. "Damn their souls! We'll hit the Mission tonight, kid, and make the price of a meal and bed."

The Mission was the Holy-roller place of worship on Broadway, which opened doors at eight o'clock every evening. It was crowded by men and women and children, unmistakably of the working class. A sprinkling of hobo intellectuals was there, not to worship, but to enjoy the performance. With the pathetic exception of some horny-handed worker's attempt to look "dressed up"; with the equal exception of some tired-faced woman's effort to appear fresh in a limp gingham, the congregation was frankly unwashed and unshorn. Up on the platform there was a long row of chairs on which amateur preachers sat—they, too, the better clad than the congregation of the evening, carried unmistakably workers until it was their turn to take the floor and hold forth for the glory of God and the salvation of sinners, hallelujah! And there was a band in one side with an assortment of instruments; a piano out of tune; and a choir packed full of misdirected sex energy in the shape of exalted-singing young and old men and women. Here and there among the fleet could be noticed keen-looking roughly-garbed men with a more sophisticated air. These were evidently the mainspring of the Mission, the ones who kept it a "going" concern. They were the gentlemen who filled the gaps left by the hesitations of the amateurs; the ones who rounded out the periods when human endurance was at an end with an inspiring call for a hymn. When he leads us, I will follow."

There was no attempt to be coherent. Sermons consisted mainly of separate cut. Penitents rose here and there and cried to Jesus. The air was full of bloodthirsty cries, "Oh, the blood of Jesus! You must be washed with blood! Blood must be shed! Behold the blood that washes away the sins of the world!

Broken confessions were made by members of the congregation, a solid unfair some unbelievers laughed immoderately at it were led to the rear by a hard-headed looking cuss who escorted a big specimen officer looks on the blood of his coat. Albert felt bewildered and disgusted. He could hardly believe he was in a house of prayer. The little Episcopalian church to which he had enlisted all his life, had never indulged in such antics, and he had never attended a revival before. One of the tearful grafted men came to where Jake was seated. It was evidently an old game.

"Are you saved, brother? How is it with your soul, brother? Have you asked yourself where you are going to spend eternity, brother?"

Jake nudged Albert in the ribs. "Listen to the bosh talk, will yuh. Saved? Hell! How is it with our souls? Bunk! Where we gonna spend eternity? Say, brother, you'd better ask where we're gonna eat and spend the night!"

"The Lord will provide," and the chap smiled unctuously.

"Well, he'd better hurry up," returned Jake, "because me and me buddy are on 'em' pretty hungry, and sleepin' on park benches is cold work these nights."

"Ah, then of little faith. But he turn the multitudes away? No, no, he fed them with loaves and fishes. Give yourself to him. He is food for the body, manna for the soul, a very refgue in time of trouble." He placed his hand on Jake's shoulder. "If you will confess your sins, receive Jesus in your heart, he will not let you want—I tell you he will not let you want."

Suddenly Jake waxed tearful. "How are we gonna think of salvation when we're hungry, when we're homeless! If we only had a little money . . ."

The sleek one baled Jake to his feet. "Tell it to Jesus, brother," he exhorted. "Carry it to the Lord in prayer. When has he failed a contrite heart? Hellelujah! Hallelujah!"

Thus encouraged Jake came to Jesus. His was a rambling discourse broken into by the loud amens and hallelujahs of the faithful.

"He wanted to believe—Bless the Lord!- But he was hungry, cold—God bless you, brother!—But Jesus kept calling him to confess his sins—Oh Holy Annie!—Would the faithful pray for him, pray for him. . . ."

Several of the brethren—and sistern—we mean sisters—would, and immediately they did. Jake fell on his knees by his chair burying his face in his hands. The choir swept spontaneously into the singing of "Bringing In The Sheaves," while the sleek one wrestled for the timid, perspiring soul of Albert.

After the meeting, Jake with several other newly saved sinners of the evening, carefully unmistakably workers until it was their turn to take the floor and hold forth for the glory of God and the salvation of sinners, hallelujah! Pathetique

It so happened that on a Sunday he walks dully and in a lifeless repetition of steps, one succeeding the other,
into the restaurant, and sits down in uninterested manner upon one of the stools at the counter.

He is wearing a dark grey jacket that is baggy from overuse, worn trousers and shabby cap.

While waiting for the order
he carefully looks at his shoes.
They are very new and commonplace—a bargain.
and he is wanting to feel a certain pride in them.
[illegible] expression is only tired and dull.

He [illegible] be about forty . . .
[illegible] already has that stamp of barrenness

NEW YORK DEMANDS SACCO, VANZETTI BE FREED

Comintern Declaration on the Inner Situation in the Workers (Communist) Party and Statement of the Political Bureau in Reference to This Declaration

Cable From the Communist International.

Moscow, U. S. S. R., July 27, 1927.

E. C. C. I. considers such methods struggle as opposition group uses in statement impermissible factional. Such expressions styling majority of Polcom "petty bourgeois intellectuals" as "clique leadership" are opposed resolution of E. C. C. I. and agreement of American comrades serving only to poison Party life. E. C. C. I. most decisively opposes these faction methods. On other hand E. C. C. I. declares against any disciplinary measures against opposition.

(Signed) PRESIDIUM E. C. C. I.

Declaration of the Political Committee Follows.

1—The CEC is in possession of a factional document entitled "Statement of the CEC Majority Group Exposing the Factional Irresponsibility of the Lovestone Group."

2—The Polcom is of the opinion that it is high time to stop the circulation in the rank and file of the membership of all factional documents, no matter by what group they are issued.

3—The Polcom has decided that with the publication of the CI Resolution, the CI Supplementar Decision and the Agreement arrived at by our comrades in the American Commission, the Party discussion is officially opened. This means that there is not the slightest reason for the circulation of any factional documents by any group of the Party.

4—Any statement or fact which any comrade cannot or will not make openly in the Party discussion should not be disseminated in our ranks. For any secret or exclusive channels.

5—The Polcom call upon the Party members, regardless of their former group agreements, to discontinue factional methods in the discussion. There is no room or cause for bitterness, prejudice, hostility in our ranks. In order to hasten the unification of our Party, we must discuss our problems only in a Communist and comradely manner.

COMMUNISTPARTY OF CHINA QUITS HANKOW REGIME

Brands New Militarism Enemy of Revolution

BULLETIN.

HANKOW, July 29.—The special commission attached to the labor section of the central committee of the Kuomintang has adopted a resolution pointing out that soldiers occupy the premises of over thirty trade unions, and protesting against such conditions. The commission demands that the central committee of the Kuomintang insist on the withdrawal of troops from the premises of trade unions.

Such coercion of the unions, declares the resolution, runs counter to the recent decisions of the central committee of the Kuomintang in regard to the protection of labor and peasants' organizations.

From an unknown cause an explosion occurred in the military stores at Wanhsing. Seventy soldiers were killed and forty wounded. The explosion and fire destroyed sixty thousand shells valued at half a million dollars. An investigation has been initiated.

HANKOW, China, July 29.—The Central Committee of the Chinese Communist Party has recalled its representatives from the Wuhan (Hankow) government and has issued a declaration, in the course of which it is pointed out.

"The policy of the majority of the Central Committee of the Kuomintang, the nationalist government is fatal for the revolution and made the Wuhan (Hankow) government the center of a new bourgeois group. The Communist Party cannot assume responsibility for such a policy. Therefore the Central Committee has recalled to recall its representatives from the Wuhan (Hankow) government.

Will Fight Imperialism.

"The thousands of Communists who have fallen in the fight against the militarists are yet fresh evidence that the Communist Party will always remain with the people, even when the Kuomintang leaders and the nationalist government turn away from the toiling masses.

"The Communist Party will carry on uncompromising struggle against imperialism, militarism and feudalism for the full success of the revolution thru an alliance with workers and oppressed peoples of the world, and thru alliance with the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics.

"To renounce the agrarian revolution is to renounce the struggle against feudalism, without the abolition of which it is impossible to overthrow the yoke of the imperialists. The Communist Party will carry on this struggle together with the truly revolutionary elements of the Kuomintang and the Kuomintang masses.

"Therefore, the Communists see no reason for leaving the Kuomintang or refusing to cooperate with it. Insofar as Kuomintang leaders and nationalist government will really carry thru a policy of struggle against imperialism, militarism and feudal reaction the Communist Party will support the revolutionary struggle.

"However, the Communist Party

SELLING CERTIFICATES

At every party meeting, every union meeting, every club and fraternal organization, at every picnic and working-class amusement the GUARD THE DAILY WORKER FUND CERTIFICATES must be sold by the loyal DAILY WORKER supporters. We must build up a fund in preparation for the time when our cases come to trial. We must not be caught unawares. We must prepare now. We call upon every comrade to provide himself with one more certificate book, which should be utilized energetically upon every opportunity.

Already the certificates are beginning to roll in. But they must be pushed with greater vigor, otherwise we shall be confronted with the necessity of appearing before the Federal Grand Jury, without any means of providing for our own defense. Now is the time to act. Now is the time to GUARD THE DAILY WORKER.

Union Square Meeting Tomorrow Will Demand Sacco-Vanzetti Freedom

An open air meeting to demand the release of Sacco and Vanzetti will be held in Union Square tomorrow afternoon at 3 p. m.

Among the speakers who will address the meeting are Leonard Abbott, former editor of Current Opinion, Jacob Margolies, Detroit attorney who has made a special study of the case, Isaac Don Levine, Professor Gusadagni, Arthur Calhoun, Clinton C. Golden, Armando Borghi and W. T. Markantonio.

William F. Dunne and J. Louis Engdahl, editors of The DAILY WORKER, will speak on behalf of the Workers (Communist) Party.

LIFE PRESERVERS ON 'FAVORITE' ALL OLD AND ROTTEN

CHICAGO, July 29.—Twenty-eight known dead and ten missing were the total victims of the excursion boat Favorite disaster in the latest checkup today.

Two additional bodies have been recovered from the choppy waters of Lake Michigan since dawn. Others are believed pinned beneath wreckage.

The twenty-eight victims in the sinking of the excursion boat Favorite, which foundered off Lincoln Park in Lake Michigan here yesterday, were trapped like rats with no chance of saving their lives it was indicated today by Coroner Oscar Wolff.

"Every one of the life belts on the boat bore government inspection stamps of approval dating back more than seventeen years," Wolff declared. "The ropes binding the corks together were rotten and fell apart. The buoyancy of the belts was in-

The young couple will go abroad where Flint will honeymoon with his bride and with several large financial deals he has in hand.

FUR DYE WORKERS REFUSED AID BY THE RIGHT WING

International Ignores Joint Board Letter

Further proof of the unwillingness of the right wing administration of the International Fur Workers' Union to organize the workers of the trade is seen in their refusal to take any action to help the workers of the Stein Fur Dyeing Co., who went on strike Tuesday, unable any longer to work under unbearable conditions.

On Wednesday the Joint Board sent special delivery letters to Philip Silberstein, international president and Local 54, Newark and Local 3, Brooklyn, explaining the situation. The letters told how the workers walked out of the shop and came to the Joint Board for aid.

The letter points out that the Joint Board has no jurisdiction over dye shops, it field consisting only of manufacturers, therefore it urges the international office to take control of the strike, the Joint Board to cooperate to the best of its ability.

As no answer has been received and as no attempt has been made by the International to help the striking workers, it appears that it has no interest whatsoever in organizing the poorly paid workers in the dye shops.

Workers Angry.

When the workers in the market heard of the lack of interest displayed by the right wingers, they expressed their opinions. Many workers were heard to say that "when it is a question of fighting against the workers for the boss, the right wingers are on the job. When it is a case of fighting for the workers, they take just the opposite position."

Action on over 100 strike cases will be taken in Jefferson Market Court Tuesday morning. They have been postponed from several weeks ago.

Gangster Cases.

Five of the seven right wing gangsters who beat up four strikers over a month ago, and which they were arrested tobl the police they were hired by the right wing for $50 a week, will come up Wednesday morning.

The two killers who almost murdered Aaron Gross, will have a hearing in Jefferson Market Court Thursday morning.

Frank P. Walsh, attorney for the Furriers' Union, is now examining the minutes of the Mineola trial.

THOUSANDS GATHER IN SEVEN HUGE MEETINGS; POLICE ARE PROVOCATIVE

Workers Adopt Resolutions to Gov. Fuller and Imprisoned Workers; Ask Complete Freedom

Thousands of workers flocked to seven great meetings scattered around New York last night, in Manhattan, Brooklyn and Bronx. They wanted freedom for Sacco and Vanzetti, and they loudly demonstrated that fact, cheering speakers who pointed to the frame-up of the two imprisoned labor leaders, their long martyrdom, the slowly accumulating mass of evidence that proves them innocent, and the trickery of those who pretend to be enforcing the law on them.

In ringing tones they applauded the two resolutions asserting their innocence and demanding liberty, one sent to Sacco and Vanzetti themselves, and one to Governor Fuller of Massachusetts.

The police did not break up these meetings, as they did the last one in Union Square, but they interfered in petty ways. First of all, no permit was issued the committee for a Union Square meeting.

Police Object To Banners.

In several of the meetings they shoved the crowd around, and insulted it. At Grand Street Eastern Williamsburg, they ordered some of the banners taken down, and refused to let anyone speak who was not on the original list.

But in spite of everything, the workers met, and heard their speakers, and adopted the following resolutions.

Demand On Governor Fuller.

To Governor Alvin T. Fuller, State House, Boston, Mass.:—We, in meeting assembled, pledge our solidarity with fellow-workers Sacco and Vanzetti, in their hunger strike which is their protest against the secrecy enveloping the investigation of their case by your commission. We demand a public investigation of the case, and call upon you, in the name of justice which American prides itself on, to grant these two victims of a frame-up, a retrial or a public investigation.

We believe that the evidence presented at the trial of these two men

VACUUM OIL CO. MAY GET SOVIET OIL CONCESSION

BULLETIN.

It became known here yesterday that Justice Chas. Evans Hughes, in June, 1926, was appealed to by an agent of Sir Henry Deterding, managing director of the Royal Dutch Shell Oil Co., and Walter Teagle, president of the Standard Oil of New Jersey, with representatives of the Standard of New York present, to decide whether trade with the Union of Socialist Soviet Republics is legal.

Deterding and Teagle argued that "Russian oil is stolen goods." Hughes, no friend of the U. S. S. R., but with memory of British court precedents in mind, told the directors they should buy the best oil and leave technicalities to the courts.

MOSCOW, July [illegible] Virtual admission that the American Oil Company and the General Electric Company are negotiating concessions in Russia involving $100,000,000, was made today by M. Krasnikoff, deputy chairman of the concessions committee.

WIFE OF MAN KILLED IN HOLD-UP DEMANDS TWO WORKERS' RELEASE

Will Try Once More to Carry Case Before U. S. Supreme Court On Writ Of Error

BOSTON, July 29.—Declaring that Sacco and Vanzetti are innocent, Sarah Berardelli, whose husband was killed in the Bain tree murder, has telegraphed Governor Fuller, urging the release of the two framed-up workers.

"I am one of the two who suffered most from the Braintree murder," she declared. "I lost my husband and the father of my two children, but I would be sorry to have two innocent men put to death. I have always doubted that Sacco and Vanzetti were guilty, and I hope that you will free them and let them go home to their families.

May Go To Supreme Court.

While final pleas in behalf of Nicola Sacco and Bartolomeo Vanzetti were being made to Governor Fuller, in Boston, today by defense attorneys, William G. Thompson and Herbert Ehrmann, it became known that in the event of an adverse finding by the chief executive a new and unexpected legal move was being planned by friends of the framed-up workers.

At a secret conference between what was said to be "three internationally known legal minds," arrange-

ARGE GRAFT TO VERNOR DUVALL OF INDIANAPOLIS

'Black Box' Documents May Cause Impeachment

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind., July 29.—The spotlight in the Indiana political scandal today shifted from Governor Ed Jackson to Mayor John L. Duvall of Indianapolis as a result of threats by City Councilman of impeachment proceedings against Duvall and City Controller William C. Buser.

Meeting in secret session, more than a majority of the city legislators, frankly discussed impeachment proceedure.

"Strong Pressure"

"The council discussed the impeachment as an issue which can not be evaded any more than any other question can be evaded for which there is strong pressure," Councilman Otis F. Bartholomew explained. Affidavits being filed by Marion County Prosecutors against both Duvall and Buser. Two other officers of Duvall's administration also face trial for alleged attempts to garner a little more than their salaries in buying supplies for the city.

Black Box Evidence

There was a report that special prosecutor Emsley W. Johnson, who has D. C. Stephenson's black boxes, was in Columbus, O., on a mysterious errand. The former Indiana Klan Grand Dragon had headquarters there during his term as National Vice President of the hooded order.

Stephenson, admitted chief corruptionist of Indiana, has confessed to many of his crimes, and handed over documentary evidence contained in two black boxes which implicated many high officials in Indiana. Rumor at failure of the governor to pardon him after completion of more trials is said to be his motive in making the revelations.

The Life Preservers On Favorite Old, Rotten

capable of supporting a human body."

Investigators learned, too, that the frail craft normally had a capacity of ten persons and a crew of three, But a special excursion permit, issued during the summer months, authorized it to carry 150 passengers and a crew of ten.

Dangerous Boats.

The Favorite is one of several old boats which are being used at Chicago as cheap excursion carriers; workers crowd into them on hot nights for the only chance they can afford of a little relaxation and enjoyment of the breezes. It has been charged before that the boats of the Favorite class are unsafe. They are built topheavy, for loading down with passengers, without regard to stability.

Useless "Preservers."

The present disaster indicates that the trifling expense of providing useful life preservers was saved by the management. A report that many of the life preservers were old and would not bear up a man in the water is being investigated. Many rescued passengers told of trying to get life preservers and failing because they were so finely attached to the ship that they could not even be pried loose.

Now They Examine.

D. N. Hoover, chief federal steamboat inspector, today ordered his agents in Chicago to make "a most thorough investigation" of the motorboat Favorite disaster.

Hoover discussed the Chicago inquiry over the phone today with Frederick J. Meno, supervising inspector at Detroit, who was ordered to Chicago. Meno also received a detailed telegraphic account of the disaster.

The investigations in Chicago are being conducted by Inspectors J. F. Hanson and William Nicholson. They are to report to Hoover.

Four Investigations.

Four separate investigations were launched today to determine responsibility for the sinking of the boat, which capsized off Lincoln Park in Lake Michigan during a sudden rain and wind squall.

A coroner's inquest with a jury of prominent business men was to convene late today.

A check-up filed records and reports in the Federal building upon the Favorite as compared with actual conditions discovered with the salvaging of the boat was begun by Capt. J. S. Hansen, inspector of hulls.

The state's attorney's office gathered information from all eye-witnesses of the disaster in an effort to determine any criminal responsibility.

Police were conducting a separate investigation.

END EXPECTED BY GENEVA EXPERTS AS ALL DISAGREE

Monday's Session Will Wind-Up the Farce

GENEVA, July 29. Returning with the unsatisfactory proposals they carried to London so modified as to make their acceptance by the United States an impossibility, the reappearance in Geneva of W. C. Bridgeman, First Lord of the Admiralty and head of the British delegation and his colleague Amiral Lord of Chelwood, is an assurance that the collapse of the Tri-partite Naval squabble will apply a question of days.

Ambassador Hugh S. Gibson, head of the American delegation, made it to be understood that the American senate would never ratify a treaty endowing the British navy as it has that he considered the controversy its death bed. At the same time Baron Ishii, admitted the impossibility of negotiating an agreement and announced that the mission of the Japanese delegation was at an end.

The collapse of the conference has come about then British insistance that the total of American 10,000 ton cruisers be fixed at 12 which the Washington war limits consider too few for their needs, and American fear that the policy of scrapping obsolete ships and adding 25 per cent of the total scrapped in new ships would work out to the British as 1 to 1 to the American advantage.

Prepares For Armament Race

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 29.—Unlimited competition in naval armament would be the direct result of the failure of the Geneva conference according to official circles here today. The United States is ready in the lead in the race and will take every means to maintain her supremacy, it was announced officially. Further over England's refusal to end crushing of Canadian cruisers and the feeling in this quarter Britain may rule the seas. An island will keep her land be Damned.

Cosgrave Cabinet Passes Coercion By Minority Vote

DUBLIN, July 29.—The Free State government, by a vote of 69 to 11, has put through a Public Safety Bill which will enable the Cosgrave administration to use the government forces in suppressing all political opposition in the country.

The Labor Party delegates expressed indignation at the statement of the minister for external affairs who claimed that the Labor Party was making political capital out of the assassination of Kevin O'Higgins. They left the chamber in a body when the motion backed by Cosgrave refused to withdraw the charge.

Opposition Could Beat Bill.

The leaders of the Labor Party delegation are conservative and respectable and no doubt their opposition was not feigned.

Had the republican deputies been in their seats the government would be unable to put through its coercion act, as the opposition vote would be well over 80. The eleven votes against the measure were cast by one De Valerite who took his seat, three independents and the rest members of the National League, the latter a revival of the old parliamentary party organization once led by John Redmond.

The Oath Quibbling.

Serious misgivings are now being voiced in republican circles about the wisdom of the De Valera policy in refraining to take seats in the Dail because of the oath of allegiance.

Expose Traitors in Revolution.

"The Communist Party will not allow the generals, the traitors to the revolution and the wavering politicians to mask themselves with the name of the Kuomintang and Sun Yat Sen's banner. The Communist Party will cooperate with those who sincerely work in the spirit of Sun Yat Sen's three principles."

The action of the Communist Party of China in withdrawing its representatives from the Wuhan government and issuing a statement has had an instantaneous effect upon the leaders of the Kuomintang who are on the defensive before their own membership. As a defensive measure in order to maintain any semblance of unity following the presidium of the political bureau of the Kuomintang, published a declaration charging the Communist Party with "plotting activities", against the Kuomintang and stating that simultaneously withdrawing from the nationalist government which is the supreme executive organ of the Kuomintang the Communists must also quit all "governmental organs and institutions."

The conclusion of the declaration asserts that the Kuomintang will "abhor before, maintain tolerant attitude towards the Communists."

Tory Bill to Break British Labor Goes For Royal Approval

LONDON, July 29.—The infamous Trade Union Bill on which the conservatives are pinning their hopes of crushing down the growing British labor movement passed its final stages last night and is now awaiting the king's approval.

While sustaining general strikes the real object of the bill lies in its clause making it illegal for trade unions to levy contributions on their members for the support of the labor party. The funds of the Independent Labor Party are nearly all derived from such contributions.

co and Vanzetti continued their hunger strike at Charlestown state prison today with forceful feeding looming as a possibility.

The framed-up workers are starving themselves to death by a hunger strike in state's prison and are in a "pitiful condition," William G. Thompson, defense attorney announced this afternoon.

Mrs. Sacco had visited the prison and when told of plans under discussion to forcibly feed the prisoners she was said to have barged her husband to take nourishment.

The committee of three appointed by Governor Fuller, has completed its "investigation" and has submitted its finding to the governor. The governor's decision is expected within a few days. No one has any illusions and the situation is grave all around. The worst is expected for the two framed-up Italian workers.

The Sacco-Vanzetti Defense Committee has been refused a permit for demonstration or the use of Parkman Bandstand on Boston Common for a mass meeting. It is expected that a meeting will be arranged by the Sacco-Vanzetti Committee, Sunday, July 31, on the stand of socialist party on Boston Common mall. There is no confirmation to the rumor that Darrow and Scott Nearing will attend the meeting.

The Workers Party of District 1 has offered its place on the Boston Common to a Sacco-Vanzetti Defense Committee for a mass meeting, but has received no reply. There will be a mass meeting arranged by the Workers Party if the Sacco-Vanzetti Committee fails in its arrangements. Otherwise one joint mass meeting will take place.

But It Swells!

DENN, La., July 29.—Rev. Bob Williams, pastor of the Apostolic church here, allowed himself to be bitten by a moccasin snake during the services last night as a result of his endeavor to prove to the congregation that no harm would come to him as he was a child of God.

Rev. Williams' arm was swollen today and his hand beyond use from the snake's bite. He still refuses to call a physician.

STRIKE!

The time approaches—it is getting late—
The hands of murder rest upon the gate.
O beat those hands away before they dare
Lead Sacco and Vanzetti to the chair!

For God's sake, fellow workers, are you men
That you will meekly toil and once again
See your own class and kind burned at the stake
The vengeance of a ruling class to slake?

What can you do? O servile, cringing crew,
Consider all the strength that lies in you:
Consider your two hands, John, Jake or Mike,
And then throw down your tool and go on strike!

If you stop working—tell me, what would stop!
By God, you may be only just a wop,
A "square-head Swede", an Irishman or Jew,
But when you stop the whole damn works stop, too!

That is a power that the masters fear,
That is a power you have right now—here—
That is a power that can shake the land,
Tie up the wheels of industry, demand
The freedom of your comrades, that can tear
Brave Sacco and Vanzetti from the chair!
That is the power you have, John, Jake or Mike.
Use it, shake, use it, boys, and go on strike.

CURRENT EVENTS

For being fifteen minutes late he was docked one hour and was so weak with hunger before the dinnerwhistle blew that he fainted three times and almost fell off a scaffolding. No doubt if he had the time to take the doctor's advice his stomach trouble would evaporate and all his troubles for that matter.

So it would seem that patience is a virtue that cuts both ways, and poise might be all right in enabling one to stand the strain of being received at Buckingham Palace, entertaining Marie of Roumania or listening to a sermon while wearing a plaid-ed shirt, but when up against the pangs of hunger—(I be the architect of that article—I'm the milkcheck-ing carrier).

AWAY up in the Canadian woods one of the most eligible residents as characteristic of our American democracy was taking place. The son of a banker, investor really known for his wealth, and his unequaled infidelity was taking a marriage the daughter of a physician. The news value of the affair was, lacking in the photographers were in the job. For the benefit of those who do not read the capitalist press it was a Stillman marriage. But Miss. Stillman did not like publicity so she threw poise to the winds and those plates at the photographers.

• • •

SHOULD the same kind of diversion be indulged in by a Mrs. Feigenblatt of Avenue A., by a Mrs. Goletti Carminatti of Downing Street or by a Mrs. Macbuff of 40 Avenue and 46th Street, the police captains of the respective districts would have transported the merrymakers to the nearest detention station and the trained nurses who emphasize the lighter features of police cases in the capitalist press would spread themselves on the tale. There would be no danger of committing lese majestie.

THE trouble with the workers is not a lack of poise or patience. It is too damned much of it. They are taught to believe that meekness, loyalty and submission are the greatest of virtues and they will suffer humiliation and poverty to the miserable point before they kick. Loyalty is a virtue that changes its connotation when the herd out which it springs vanishes. The worker is loyal to the boss because he feels that his bread and butter depends on the boss's favor. All his other loyalties are also motivated by his physical or emotional needs. And the loyalties of classes are similarly traced, and much more exactly.

WHAT worker would not kick over the capitalist traces if he that idle life would be richer after the big forest? He still carries the slave mind around in his head and this is not surprising, he lacks class confidence as well as class consciousness. He is the product of many generations of slaves and of a historical environment that goes back to the days when the savage with the heaviest club and the best fed ego forced others to dig their spuuts into the earth and bring him the choicest roots or whatever was the favorite article of diet those days. He is getting over this inherited mental malady and as he is beginning to realize that there is not much more room at the top for a new crop of exploiters, he is tending to fall back on organization and collective effort in this struggle for more of the product of his toil. The scalpel of evolution is lifting his brain pan and the revolutionary propagandists are helping to separate his gray matter from the gudgeon grease.

The Gas Attack

Thus far the most successful method of warfare employed by our army divisions has been The Gas Attack.

What is the Gas Attack? The Gas Attack consists of a deluge of Daily Workers covering the enemy's camp, and distributed to the soldiers in the ranks whom we must win for our cause.

The Gas Attack is directed chiefly against important factories, employing masses of workers, and also in proletarian residential neighborhoods.

We want at least one Daily Worker Gas Attack in each city where the Daily Worker has friends and supporters. This method has shown its merit in New York, Boston, Chicago and other cities.

The General Staff calls upon every Daily Worker Army division in every city to follow their example with special editions of the Daily Worker, prepared for the attack.

THOUSANDS TO PROTEST AT SACCO-VANZETTI RALLIES TO BE HELD THRUOUT THE COUNTRY

A meeting to demand the immediate and unconditional release of Sacco and Vanzetti will be held at the corner of Palisade and School streets, Yonkers, at 3 p. m. today.

Other meetings have been arranged for Cleveland, July 31; Avella, Pa., July 31; Pittston, Pa., July 31; St. Louis, Mo., July 31; Denver, July 31; Martins Ferry, Ohio, July 31; Seattle, July 31; San Francisco, July 31; Duluth, Minn., July 31.

Great Falls, Montana, is preparing a meeting.

Housing Scheme to Net Large Returns For Big Investors

Tammany's Board of Estimate, without a dissenting vote, okays its own plan for wholesale "condemnation" of east side slum property, by means of which the administration's favorites will be able to dispose of speculated property and receive high prices from the city's treasury. All this will be done by means of condemnation proceedings soon to be legalized by the Walker bill. For purposes of camouflage this is known as a "housing plan."

After all these years Tammany has suddenly become aware of the congested and unsanitary state of affairs on Allen Street and vicinity. This sudden awareness is manifest in Walker's preamble presented to the Board of Estimate. It reads, "Whereas it is now generally recognized that congested and unsanitary housing conditions which exist in certain parts of the city of New York are a serious menace to the health, welfare and comfort of the people of the whole city."

"Whereas such conditions have arisen for the most part on those older portions of the city which are marked by dark, narrow streets and by the absence of park, playground and other open spaces . . . and so on.

Safe Bet.

Under the new law which makes possible "excess condemnation" proceedings, Paul Block, August Heckscher and other capitalists will build new tenement properties.

Waitresses Paid $15 For Six Day Week, Says Union

That waitresses receive $15 a week for a six day week and a nine hour day was revealed by testimony submitted by William Lehman, secretary-treasurer of the Waiters and Waitresses' Local I, at a hearing before the State Industrial Survey Commission. The average wage of waiters is $20 a week.

Because of such low wages, he said, waiters and waitresses must subsist "on the charity of the public" by accepting tips, to which policy the union strongly objects.

"The union is opposed to tipping and wants a living wage," said Lehman.

The union, according to Lehman, had a difficult time in establishing even the $20 and $15 basic demand. There will be no support by the union of any bill to abolish tips until a minimum wage scale is put into effect by law. To show in what light tips are regarded by our food-servers, Mr. Lehman told of a restaurant on Second avenue having a "no tipping" policy and paying $15 a week. He said 150 union waiters applied for a recent position, showing that the waiters preferred to earn their own living to having to depend on the generosity of customers.

did not prove their guilt, and that the American public should be given an opportunity to know the full facts through a public investigation.

(Signed) Rose Baron,
Acting Secretary of the Sacco-Vanzetti Emergency Committee.

The following resolution was also adopted at all the meetings and sent directly to Sacco and Vanzetti:

"We hereby express class solidarity with you in your protest against the secrecy enveloping the investigation of your case by the governor's committee, and pledge ourselves to do all in our power to bring pressure to bear upon the governor for a public investigation and retrial, because we are convinced of your innocence."

Police Fail to Stop Meeting.

In spite of many attempts by the police to break it up, more than 1,500 workers attend the meeting at Girard St. Extension, Brooklyn.

When the meeting started two patrolman and several detectives who were present objected to four of the banners that were displayed and made the committee take them down. Two of them read: "Break the Bars," and "Down With Massachusetts Justice."

Another tactic on the part of the police was to prevent any one from speaking who was not on the original list. They obtained a list from the chairman and made him strictly adhere to it.

The speakers were: Pascal Costanzo, Rebecca Grecht, J. Louis Engdahl, A. Bimba, Clarence Miller, Thos. De Fazio, M. Springfield, I. Dridzo.

Want Freedom.

Three thousand workers, cheering the speakers, enthusiastic and determined to fight for the release of Sacco and Vanzetti, crowded the two Brownsville (Brooklyn) meetings. The meeting at Hopkinson and Pitkin Ave. was the largest. The speakers were loudly applauded when they hammered away on the theme, "We don't want the sentence merely commuted. We want absolute freedom for Sacco and Vanzetti. They are innocent of every crime. They were not arrested for a crime, but for being radicals whom the mill owners of Massachusetts want put out of the way."

The speakers at both these meetings were: Pat Devine, Morris Taft, Frankel-minarda, Chester A. Burns, George Powers, I. Wexsberg, D. Petrelli, P. Patterson, John Partalella, and P. Martarano.

Big Harlem Gathering.

The largest meeting ever held at 116th St. and Fifth Ave. took place last night. More than 5,000 workers packed that famous corner and listened eagerly to the speeches. Many police were present but did not disturb the meeting.

Not Gangsters.

Banners were carried by the aroused workers. One of them displayed the drawing appearing in The DAILY WORKER showing the electric chair; others demanded, "Free Sacco and Vanzetti," "Sacco and Vanzetti Must Not Die," and still others had similar slogans.

"Sacco and Vanzetti were not gangsters," Juliet Stuart Poyntz told the crowd, to the accompaniment of loud cheers. "Sacco and Vanzetti were workers, and had the psychology of workers. The psychology of gangsters is a master class psychology. You find it especially down at Wall Street; it demands the death of labor leaders. But workers must determine that these two shall live and go free."

Other speakers were Charles Kier, editor of "I Fiore"; P. Natale, who spoke in Italian; Julius Todkind, Richard B. Moore, H. Gordon, and Ludwig Landy. The chairman was Edward Stanley, and the arrangements committee, M. Nemser.

Applaud Speakers.

More than 10,000 workers attended the meeting at Rutgers Sq., with banners flying demanding the release of the two framed-up workers. Those assembled loudly applauded the various speakers: William F. Dunne, J. Louis Engdahl, Phillip Frankfeld, Sylvem A. Pollack, Rose Wortis, L. Quintillano, A. Ramuglia, Bert Miller and T. S. Weller. Arthur Smith presided.

Literature Distributed.

The meeting at Prospect Ave. and 163rd St. was attended by 1,000 workers who attentively listened to the speakers. A great quantity of literature relating to the case was distributed.

The speakers were Leonard Abbot, Jack Stachel, Charles Krumbein, Sam Nessin, D. Benjamin and Otto Huiswaud.

The following resolution was also adopted at all the meetings and sent directly to Sacco and Vanzetti.

"We hereby express our class solidarity with you in your protest against the secrecy enveloping the investigation of your case by the governor's committee, and pledge ourselves to do all in our power to bring pressure to bear upon the governor for a public investigation and retrial, because we are convinced of your innocence."

1,200 At Tenth St.

Twelve hundred workers assembled at Tenth St. and Second Ave. and listened to speeches by J. Louis Engdahl, editor of The DAILY WORKER, Roger Finnemon, Rose Baron, William W. Weinstone and Ludwig Lore. A Spoonie was chairman.

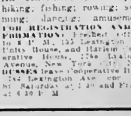
Engdahl pointed out that if the 42,000,000 workers of this country were united they would constitute an irresistible power. The workers of American labor is shown in part by the fact that the leaders of the American Federation of Labor are not in the struggle to save Sacco and Vanzetti.

"Green and Woll," continued Engdahl, "are too busy fighting against militant workers to help in the movement to save the lives of our two comrades. The fight we now are carrying on is not only to save Sacco and Vanzetti. It is also for Tom Mooney and Warren K. Billings and all imprisoned working class leaders. It is part of the whole working class struggle against the capitalist oppressors.

England also told of demonstrations for Sacco and Vanzetti in the Soviet Union, how in all European countries date of executions have been held. In every country except the Soviet Union they have been for Sacco and Vanzetti and against the respective governments. In the Soviet Union they have been for Sacco and Vanzetti and for the workers and peasants' government of Russia.

Ticket Profiteers Save Time by Pleading Guilt In Theatre Tax Scandal

Twenty-three theatre ticket brokers who failed to pay a fifty per cent advance on the box office price of entry today in the federal court in connection with the new tax frauds and were held in $500 bail each.



The profiteers protested that this provision of the law taxing excess profits is unconstitutional, but pounds of guilty to save time and expense, they said.

By agreement with United States District Attorney Tuttle, the agents' cases will henceforth sell tickets at only a fifty per cent advance on the box office price. When they are prosecuted in the future they will be expected to give assistance to the district attorney.

Except for the decision of the high court on the constitutionality of the excess profits tax, today's action brings to an end the operation of the theatre ticket gougers.

Report Kansu Earthquake Terrible Disaster; Over Hundred Thousand Killed

SHANGHAI, July 29.—News is just coming in from Kansu that the earthquake there on May 23 was really one of the world's worst natural disasters, in loss of lives. The cities of Sining, Lanchow, Kulang and Tumentse were utterly and instantly destroyed, with a total number of 100,000 killed. The Catholic mission at Lanchow was wrecked, and worshippers, nuns and the mother superior killed. The suffering among the poor workers of the cities, deprived of their homes and employment, is terrible.

Vacuum Oil May Have U.S.S.R. Concession

New Jersey and the Royal Dutch Shell Oil Company have been negotiating together, following the failure of the Royal Dutch to secure a Russian concession, it appears that the Vacuum Oil Company has been active on the Bolshevik grounds in excellent chance of obtaining the exploitation rights to fields in the vicinity of Baku, the second richest in the world.

Concessions of Great Importance.

The negotiations are believed to involve the lease of extensive oil-fields, drilling machinery, refinery construction and the sale of petroleum products in Russia and outside.

"Several American corporations are considering concessions of greater importance than the biggest concessions granted heretofore," M. Krasnikoff said today. "There has been great interest by American capital in the Soviet Union since the British break. German firms are also negotiating. Swedish firms have recently contracted for the exploitation of an electrical appliance factory at Yaroslavl."

Call It "Peaceful Competition."

PARIS, July 28. That the Royal Dutch Shell Co. and the Standard will continue their policy of "peaceful" competition in the markets of the world is said to be the result of the conference held here last week between Sir Henri Deterding, director general of the Royal Dutch Shell and Walter Teagle, president of the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey.

While the two oil chief discovered that they were still in agreement as to the advisability of investing in Soviet oil, it was admitted that the Standard Oil Company of New York, as an independent company is entitled to make whatever purchases it sees fit. The Standard Oil Company of New Jersey will maintain its traditional policy of boycotting Russian oil.

No Further Concessions.

At membership meetings of the union on Thursday evening, it was the sentiment of the workers that the Joint Board leaders should not give any further concessions to the right wing in any future peace negotiations.

Speaker after speaker took the floor to express their opinion on this matter. They all agreed that the attitude of the Joint Board has been unusually liberal towards people who do not have the interests of the union at heart. That in the future the Joint Board should be more strict in its dealings.

End Strike Assessments.

It was also decided that this will be the last week of strike assessments. That all workers should pay up this week as beginning Monday no more assessments will be levied against the members.

The formation of the labor bureau was hailed by the assembled workers as a great step forward for the workers in the industry.

A meeting of the shop chairmen of the fur union will be held Tuesday evening, right after work at Stuyvesant Casino, 142nd St. near 9th St. Important questions will be taken up and all chairmen must attend.

Women Faint in Rush To Look at Lindbergh

ROCHESTER, N. Y., July 29. Six women fainted and a child was injured today during a stampede of some 75,000 persons who gathered to greet Charles A. Lindbergh on his brief visit here. Lindbergh arrived here at 11 a. m. and left an hour later for Buffalo.

MORGAN BUS DEAL JAMMED THROUGH WITHOUT PROTEST

Scheme Will Cost Bus Rider 50% More

Olvany, Grover Whalen and Mayor Walker have succeeded in stilling all opposition to their bus scheme. The Board of Estimate has granted a nice juicy charter to The Equitable Coach Company for operation of crosstown lines in Manhattan and Brooklyn. At the same time the Bronx franchise went to the Surface Transportation Company.

Spokesmen for the mayor had this as a great victory and the stage is all set for Walker's triumphant tour abroad during which the nifty mayor will call on the king of England.

Significant in the unnerving by which preceding the final vote was the switch made by Borough President James J. Byrne. Right idolize ever since Tammany Hall has been engineering this deal, Byrne opposed the granting of the Brooklyn franchise to the Equitable clique. As Byrne is a Brooklyn man, and for many other reasons, he favored the granting of the franchise to the Coney Island and Gravesend Bus Corporation, a subsidiary of the H. M. T., and the Brooklyn City Railroad Company. Byrne's opposition to the Brooklyn deal has blockaded the passage of the bill for some time past.

Another one of those eleventh hour Walker deals was put over to jam the deal through. It is said that Olvany got Byrne on the telephone a few hours before the hearing and warned him that unless Byrne voted for the Equitable franchise that he would order Walker into Brooklyn to campaign against Cuney, the Brooklyn political chief, at the next election.

In addition to this it is rumored that a consideration changed hands and the stage was all set for the vote. Following the Olvany-Byrne telephone conversation Walker had a talk with Byrne for publicity purposes and the conversation was made to look like another "victory."

William Woeden, chairman of Walker's Reception Committee, is very much interested in the Equitable Coach Company. The coach company is under contract to buy its buses from the American Car and Foundry Corporation, Woeden is one of the big shots of this concern and has enormous holdings in its stock. The American Car Corporation is one of the Morgan subsidiaries. It is affiliated with General Electric.

That the car contract is a big one was admitted yesterday when officials of the Equitable Coach Company said that they have an order for 250 buses of the latest type. The contract involves over $14,000,000.

How effective the Tammany steamroller has smoothed out all opposition to its bus scheme was evidenced by the fact that Julius Miller, Manhattan borough president, who has been holding out in favor of the New York Railways Corporation, a subsidiary of the Fifth Avenue Coach Company, was won over to the Equitable idea. Miller is president of the Fifth Avenue Coach Company. Deals and counter-deals marked the bus scheme since its inception some eight months ago.

High handed political tactics characterized the taking of the vote on the franchise resolution. Skinning several Bems in the procedure Walker suddenly announced, "The chair moves the adoption of No. 11. The clerk will call the roll."

The roll was called instantly. All members of the Board voted for the resolution. Walker then said, "The president of the Board of Aldermen moves the adoption of No. 12 as far as it refers to the Surface Transportation Corporation." This was passed by a similar vote.

No one in the room, except the vitally interested, realized just what was taking place. So speedy was the action. When an opponent to the Walker bill, Herman A. Bayern, arose to object, Walker ordered a police man to silence him.

Cloak and Dressmakers Hold District Meetings

In view of the approaching season in the cloak and dress industry, the Joint Board has arranged a series of district meetings. These are scheduled as follows:

On Tuesday, August 2nd, at 8 p. m. there will be a meeting of all cloak and dressmakers residing in Harlem and Park View Palace, 110th Street and 5th Avenue.

On Wednesday, August 3rd, at 8 p. m. there will be a meeting of all cloak and dressmakers residing in Coney Island at Pythian Hall, 21st Street and Mermaid Ave.

On Thursday, August 4th, at 8 p. m. there will be a meeting of all cloak and dressmakers residing in Bronx at Prospect Mansion, 425 Hoe Avenue.

Louis Hyman, Chas. S. Zimmerman and J. Rosenberg will report on the present situation at all these meetings.

WORKMEN'S SICK AND DEATH BENEFIT FUND
United Branches of Brooklyn and Queens
GRAND VOLKFEST
at GERKEN'S CYPRESS HILLS PARK, Cypress Avenue, and Fulton St.
SUNDAY, JULY 31st, 1927
Ticket, in advance, 10c; at the gate, 25c; after 8 P. M., 50c.
DIRECTIONS Take Cypress Ave. car at Brooklyn Terminal (Fulton and Pitkin Ave.)

Tammany's Board of Estimate, without a dissenting vote, okayed its own plan for wholesale "condemnation" of east side slum property, by means of which the administration's favorites will be able to dispose of revalued property and receive high prices from the city's treasury. All this will be done by means of condemnation proceedings soon to be legalized by the Walker bill, for purposes of camouflage this is known as a "housing plan."

After all these years Tammany has suddenly become aware of the congested and unsanitary state of affairs on Allen Street and vicinity. This sudden awareness is manifest in Walker's preamble presented to the Board of Estimate. It reads, "Whereas it is now generally recognized that congested and unsanitary housing conditions which exist in certain parts of the city of New York are a serious menace to the health, welfare and comfort of the people of the whole city."

"Whereas such conditions have arisen for the most part on those older portions of the city which are marked by dark, narrow streets and by the absence of park, playground and other open spaces . . ."—and so on.

Safe Bet.

Under the new law which makes possible "excess condemnation" proceedings, Paul Block, Augustus Heckscher and other capitalists will build new tenement properties.

That waitresses receive $15 a week for a six day week and a nine hour day was revealed by testimony submitted by William Lehman, secretary-treasurer of the Waiters and Waitresses' Local 1, at a hearing before the State Industrial Survey Commission. The average wage of waiters is $20 a week.

Because of such low wages, he said, waiters and waitresses must subsist "on the charity of the public" by accepting tips, to which policy the union strongly objects.

"The union is opposed to tipping and wants a living wage," said Lehman.

The union, according to Lehman, had a difficult time in establishing even the $20 and $15 basic demand. There will be no support by the union of any bill to abolish tips until a minimum wage scale is put into effect by law. To show in what light tips are regarded by our food-servers, Mr. Lehman told of a restaurant on Second avenue having a "no tipping" policy and paying $15 a week. He said 150 union waiters applied for 5 vacant places, showing that the waiters preferred to earn their own living to having to depend on the generosity of customers.

REPARTEE.

REPARTEE, July 29.—Premier Count Bethlen, of Hungary, is ill at his country estate. He was unable to attend the funeral of the late Cardinal Csernoch, indicating his condition is serious.

Police Fail to Stop Meeting.

In spite of many attempts by the police to break it up, more than 1,500 workers attend the meeting at Grand St. Extension, Brooklyn.

When the meeting started two patrolman and several detectives who were present objected to four of the banners that were displayed and made the committee take them down. Two of them read: "Bronk the Bars" and "Down With Massachusetts Justice."

Another tactic on the part of the police was to prevent any one from speaking who was not on the original list. They obtained a list from the chairman and made Run strictly adhere to it.

The speakers were: Pascal Cosgrove, Rebecca Grecht, J. Louis Engdahl, A. Bimba, Clarence Miller, Thos. De Fazio, M. Springfield, I. Brimdos.

Want Freedom.

Three thousand workers, cheering the speakers, enthusiastic and determined to fight for the release of Sacco and Vanzetti, crowded the two Brownsville (Brooklyn) meetings. The meeting at Hopkinson and Pitkin Ave. was the largest. The speakers were loudly applauded when they hammered away on the theme, "We don't want the sentence merely commuted. We want absolute freedom for Sacco and Vanzetti. They are innocent of every crime. They were not arrested for a crime, but for being radicals whom the mill owners of Massachusetts want put out of the way."

The speakers at both these meetings were: Pat Devine, Morris Taft, Frank Crannrad, Chester A. Dirks, George Powers, I. Weyselberg, D. Petrelli, P. Patterson, John Partigella, and P. Martarano.

Big Harlem Gathering.

The largest meeting ever held at 116th St. and Fifth Ave. took place last night. More than 3,000 workers packed that famous corner and listened eagerly to the speeches. Many police were present but did not disturb the meeting.

Not Gangsters.

Banners were carried by the assembled workers. One of them displayed the drawing appearing in The DAILY WORKER showing the electric chair; others demanded, "Free Sacco and Vanzetti," "Sacco and Vanzetti Must Not Die," and still others had similar slogans.

"Sacco and Vanzetti were not gangsters," Juliet Stuart Poyntz told the crowd, to the accompaniment of loud cheers. "Sacco and Vanzetti were workers, and that the psychology of workers. The psychology of gangsters is a under-class psychology. You find it especially down in Wall Streets; it demands the death of labor leaders. But workers must not determine that these two shall live and go free."

Other speakers were Charles Kies, editor of "Il Fiore"; P. Natoli, who spoke in Italian; Julius Gellert, Literature Distributed.

The meeting at Prospect Ave. and 163rd St. was attended by 1,000 workers who attentively listened to the speakers. A great quantity of literature relating to the case was distributed.

The speakers were Leonard Abbot, Jack Stachel, Charles Krumbein, Sam Nessin, D. Benjamin and Otto Huiswoud.

The following resolution was also adopted at all the meetings and sent directly to Sacco and Vanzetti.

"We hereby express our class solidarity with you in your protest against the secrecy enveloping the investigation of your case by the governor's committee, and pledge ourselves to do all in our power to bring pressure to bear upon the governor for a public investigation and retrial, because we are convinced of your innocence."

1,200 At Tenth St.

Twelve hundred workers assembled at Tenth St. and Second Ave. and listened to speeches by J. Louis Engdahl, editor of The DAILY WORKER, Roger Fetterson, Rose Baron, William W. Weinstone and Ludwig Lore. A Spessone was chairman.

Engdahl pointed out that if the 42,000,000 workers of this country were united they would constitute an irresistible power. The weakness of American labor is shown in part by the fact that the leaders of the American Federation of Labor are not in the struggle to save Sacco and Vanzetti.

"Green and Wall," continued Engdahl, "are too busy fighting against militant workers to help in the movement to save the lives of our two comrades. The fight we now are engaging in is not only to save Sacco and Vanzetti but also for Tom Mooney and Warren K. Billings and all imprisoned working class leaders.

It is part of the whole working class struggle against the capitalist oppressors.

Engdahl also told of demonstrations for Sacco and Vanzetti in the Soviet Union, how in all European countries monster meetings have been held. In every country except the Soviet Union they have been for Sacco and Vanzetti and against the respective governments. In the Soviet Union they have been for Sacco and Vanzetti and for the workers' and peasants' government of Russia.

The psychology of gangsters is a under-class psychology. You find it especially down in Wall Streets; it demands the death of labor leaders. But workers must not determine that these two shall live and go free."

Other speakers were Charles Kies, editor of "Il Fiore"; P. Natoli, who spoke in Italian; Julius Gellert, four hours. Judge Mack held Thursday evening, at the settlement of the workers that the Joint Board leaders should not give any further concessions to the right wing in any future peace negotiations.

Sigman after speaker took the floor to express their opinion on this matter. They all agreed that the attitude of the Joint Board has been unduly liberal towards people who do not have the interests of the union at heart. That in the future the Joint Board should be more strict in its dealings.

End Strike Assessments.

It was also decided that this will be the last week of strike assessments. That all workers should pay up this week as beginning Monday no more assessments will be levied against the membership.

The formation of the labor bureau was hailed by the assembled workers as a great step forward for the workers in the fur industry.

A meeting of the shopchairmen of the fur union will be held Tuesday evening, right after work at Stuyvesant Casino, second floor, near 9th St. Important decisions will be taken up and all chairmen must attend.

Vacuum Oil May Have U.S.S.R. Concession

New Jersey and the Royal Dutch Shell Oil Company have been negotiating together, following the failure of the Royal Dutch to secure a Russian concession, it appears that the Vacuum Oil Company has been active in Russia and stands an excellent chance of obtaining the exploitation rights to fields in the vicinity of Baku, the second richest in the world.

Implications of Great Importance.

The negotiations are believed to involve the lease of extensive oil-fields, drilling privileges, refinery construction and the sale of petroleum products in Russia and outside.

"Several American corporations are considering concessions of greater importance than the biggest concessions granted heretofore," M. Krasnikoff said today. "There has been great interest by American capital in the Soviet Union since the British breakthrough. PARIS, July 29.—That the Royal Dutch Shell Co. and the Standard will continue their policy of "peaceful" competition in the markets of the world is said to be the result of the conference held here last night between Sir Henri Deterding, director general of the Royal Dutch Shell and Walter Teagle, president of the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey.

While the two oil chiefs discovered that they were still in agreement as to the advisability of investing in Soviet oil, it was admitted that the Standard Oil Company of New York, as an independent company is entitled to make whatever purchases it sees fit.

Baldwin and Wales On Junket.

QUEBEC, Que., July 29.—Preparations were going on apace here today for welcoming the Prince of Wales and his party, which includes Premier Baldwin and Premier Stanley Baldwin, on their arrival Saturday morning aboard the Canadian Pacific liner "Empress of Australia."

It is present it is claimed that the prime minister of Quebec province, members of the Canadian Parliament, and other officials of the government, shall meet the royal party at King's wharf. The party will remain in Quebec until Sunday afternoon, at which time they will leave for Montreal by steamer.

Spokesmen for the mayor had this as a great victory and the stage is all set for Walker's triumphant tour abroad during which the nifty mayor will call on the king of England.

Significant in the maneuvering which preceding the final vote was the switch made by Borough President Richard Byrne. Right along, ever since Tammany Hall has been engineering this deal, Byrne opposed the granting of the Brooklyn franchise. Finally, however, Mr. Byrne is a Brooklyn man, and for many other reasons, he favored the granting of the franchise to the Long Island and Gravesend Bay Corporation, a subsidiary of the B. M. T., and the Brooklyn City Railroad Company. Byrne's opposition to the Brooklyn deal has blockaded the passage of the bill for some time past.

Another one of those eleventh hour Walker deals was put over to jam the deal through. It is said that Olvany got Byrne on the telephone a few hours before the hearing and warned him that unless Byrne voted for the Equitable franchise that he would order Walker into Brooklyn to campaign against Cooey, the Brooklyn political chief, at the next election.

In addition to this it is rumored that a consideration changed hands and the stage was all set for the vote. Following the Olvany-Byrne telephone conversation Walker had a talk with Byrne for publicity purposes and the conversation was made to look like another "victory."

William Wooden, chairman of Walker's Reception Committee, is very much interested in the Equitable Coach Company. The coach company is under contract to buy its buses from the American Car and Foundry Corporation. Wooden is one of the big shots of this concern and has enormous holdings in its stock. The American Car Corporation is one of the Morgan subsidiaries. It is affiliated with General Electric.

That the car contract is a big one was admitted yesterday when officials of the Equitable Coach Company said that they have an order for 1,500 buses of the latest type. The contract involves over $11,000,000.

How effective the Tammany steamroller has smoothed out all opposition to this deal was evidenced by the fact that Julius Miller, Manhattan borough president, who has been holding out in favor of the New York Railway Corporation, a subsidiary of the Fifth Avenue Coach Company, was won over to the Equitable idea. Miller is president of the Fifth Avenue Coach Company Dealers and counter-deals marked the line scheme since its inception some eighteen months ago.

High handed political tactics characterized the taking of the vote on the franchise resolution. Spinning several floors in the procedure Walker suddenly announced, "The chair moves the adoption of No. 11. The clerk will call the roll."

The roll was called instantly. All members of the Board voted for the resolution. Walker then said, "The president of the Board of Aldermen moves the adoption of No. 20, so far as it refers to the Surface Transportation Corporation." This was passed by a similar vote.

No one in the room, except those vitally interested, realized just what had taking place, so speedy was the action. When an opponent to the deal, Walker bill, Herman A. Bayern, arose to object, Walker ordered a police man to silence him.

Current Events

By T. J. O'FLAHERTY.

THE Geneva conference has blown up and our pacifists are quite disappointed. As if it mattered a damn for the cause of peace whether the pirate powers came to terms or not. If the great powers agreed it would bode no good to the workingclass and subject peoples of the world. The robber empires would then be in a more favorable position to parcel the spheres of exploitation, not already parcelled among each other. As it is possible that they may irritate each other by encouraging trouble in each other's colonies, just as England did in French Morocco and in Syria, in an effort to bring France to Downing's Street's policy.

AS we already predicted that the conference would turn out to be a fiasco there is no disappointment in our office. We did not make the prediction because Gibson chewed tobacco or Bridgeman wore a monocle, but because of the keen rivalry between British and American imperialism. The New York World is tearing its pseudo-pacifist hair because the so-called Anglo-Saxon nations have been unable to come to terms. It urges Coolidge and Baldwin to get together and reach an agreement. As if these two servants of their respective ruling classes had supreme power.

IF we were as concerned with peace between England and the United States as the World is we would suggest that the finance capitalists of both countries hold a joint caucus and divide the spoils between them. Unfortunately for such a proposal there are too many conflicting interests inside of each imperialist capitalist group to make the caucus anything else but a dog fight. And inside the caucuses there would be opposition blocs which would render unity impossible. This is a fundamental weakness in the capitalist structure. It is a house divided against itself and only unites when the whole robber system is threatened with ruin.

LET no militant worker assume, that because the United States and Great Britain have not been able to reach an accord on naval limitation that they are not capable of reaching a limited agreement against the Soviet Union and against the Chinese revolution. Enmity to the U.S.S.R. is the dominant note in imperialist world politics just now and no matter how they may quarrel with each other they are in perfect agreement as to the advisability of blotting the Soviet Union off the map. The hostile British and American admirals could sit down over a glass of champagne and smoke the pipe of peace over a

CAROL DECLARES HE IS KING YET; ARRANGES COUP

Rumanian Fascists Wait For Return of Exile

PARIS, July 31.—Declaring that if the Rumanian people address an appeal to him to return to rule them, he will answer the call, Carol of Rumania last night announced that the renunciation of his rights to the Rumanian throne were forced upon him by persons and under circumstances which he refused to discuss, and that he considered himself the legitimate king.

The "Dear People."

"The situation in Rumania gives me a right to intervene," Carol declared. "I could never fail to obey the wish of my people and respond to its appeal if it be addressed to me."

Carol is supported in Rumania by the National Peasants' Party, a party with fascist tendencies, of the rich peasants. Its leader, Julio Maniu, has just attacked the Bratiano government in the press, demanding a new election and a guarantee that it be "free." Professor Jorga, a member of the party, has appealed to the American minister, William S. Culbertson, to ask his aid in forcing a new election from the Bratiano government, his grounds being the notorious methods of the Bratiano party during the election in July.

TEAGLE GAMBLED ON SOVIET FALL IN OIL SWINDLE

Wanted New Czar to Protect Interests

BULLETIN.

BERLIN, July 31.—The outstanding event in Germany's industrial life this week was the threat of an oil price-cutting war between the U. S. S. R. Naptha Syndicate and the Royal Dutch Shell interests, which would draw Germany into the controversy emanating for the disagreement among the units of the Standard Oil family in the United States as regards the policy to be pursued in trading with Soviet Russia.

"Deruaft," the German-Russian company which retails oil products in Germany, initiated the price-cutting campaign by reducing the price of gasoline by four cents a gallon.

This challenge is indicative of the purpose of the Soviet Union to pursue the advantage which they have gained by their newly achieved relations with the Standard Oil of New York and the Vacuum Oil.

Wall Street is interested in the oil war that is raging between the Standard Oil of New York and Vacuum Oil on the one hand and the Royal Dutch Shell and New Jersey Standard Oil on the other. The combination in the second group, that is the one between the Royal-Dutch, the British oil trust, and the Standard of New Jersey, is not one of mutual interest, but a question of competition between the two. Of all the Standard group the New Jersey concern is the one that comes into the keenest competition with the British trust, hence Walter Teagle, head of the Jersey branch of the Standard, lines up with Sir Henry Deterding, head of the British trust, against the New York Standard Oil coherent and the Vacuum Oil concern.

A Many-Sided Warfare.

Again Walter Teagle and the New Jersey concern tried a bit of speculation on the collapse of the Bolshevik revolution in Russia and bought an equal partnership with the Noble brothers, Russian citizens, whose great oil holdings were nationalized by the revolution. Unable to realize the money they desired from their nationalized oil fields, the Noble outfit sold a half interest to Teagle and the American capitalist thought he would be in on the ground floor when the Soviet government fell and some relative of the czar ascended the throne made amends by action of the workers and peasants of Russia.

Mr. Hughes Steps In.

One of the ironic facts of history is the fact that Mr. Charles Evans Hughes, former United States supreme court justice, later secretary under the Harding-Coolidge-Daugherty administration and who was one of the most fanatic opponents of recognition of Russia, is now the attorney for the New York and Vacuum concerns. Hughes has long been a lackey of Standard Oil. While he was secretary of state the policy of Standard Oil was the same as that of the New Jersey branch—to carry on international intrigues against the Soviet. That policy failed and the majority of the Standard group realizes the futility of longer fighting along the old lines. Standard of New York and Vacuum Oil are doing business with the Soviet Union and have a distinct advantage over Deterding and his Royal-Dutch.

Hughes Opposes Teagle.

About a year ago the Standard Oil of New York and the Vacuum Oil conferred with Hughes on the legal questions involved in pursuing Russian oil. Hughes' job was to safeguard them in their desire to enter the Russian field.

At that conference Walter Teagle, president of the Standard Oil of New Jersey, was present. He presented there the same argument that was presented by the Standard Oil of New Jersey and Dutch Shell in their public statements the last two weeks: that no good American company ought to purchase "stolen" oil.

Hughes' reply was that as executives of companies with large numbers of shareholders they should concern themselves solely with the question of whether the business would be profitable to their stockholders.

Mr. Hughes probably remembered that the highest British court in 1921,

"IF YOU WERE ONLY BACK ON THE JOB" Drawn by Fred Ellis

ANTI-WAR WEEK AUGUST 1 to 6

At the beginning of August, 1914, the European capitalist powers let loose the destructive forces of the conflict in which millions were slaughtered, many more were maimed and incapacitated for life, and billions of dollars worth of useful property was destroyed. It is now thirteen years since this terrible catastrophe, and the world still feels the deep-going effects of this mad orgy of destruction.

The last World War has taught class conscious workers a lesson which they will never forget. And therefore they have firmly resolved that the last imperialist World War shall be the last, and that never again will the workers be forced to shed their life's blood in the interests of Wall Street and the international bankers.

In this fight against a new World War, The DAILY WORKER will play an important role. It will be the leading voice of the workers in the struggle. It will be the workers' most effective weapon against the war mongers. The Dollar Patriots fully recognize this fact and therefore they are seeking to crush The DAILY WORKER through the Federal Grand Jury indictment.

We ask all workers to commemorate the week of the opening of the previous world slaughter by giving their utmost support to the GUARD THE DAILY WORKER FUND. Certificates have been sent to all subscribers and supporters. During this solemn week, it is up to every class conscious worker to do his bit against the recurrence of another world-wide slaughter. The best way to do this is to protect The DAILY WORKER the sharpest weapon against a new World War. Send in your contributions to the GUARD THE DAILY WORKER FUND.

Plan Probe Into Trust Move By General Motors

WASHINGTON, July 31. — The Federal Trade Commission today ordered an investigation into the "close financial relationship" between the U. S. Steel Corporation, the General Motors Corporation and the E. I. Dupont de Nemours Company.

The inquiry was ordered on motion of Commission Abram F. Myers, following newspaper reports that the Dupont company had purchased a large number of shares in the other two concerns. The commission decided that under the law, it had a right to learn whether the stock negotiations were prefacing steps toward establishment of an interlocking directorate between the three companies.

Discover Bodies of Men Killed As Officer Led Them Into Losing Fight

MONTFAUCON, France, July 31.—A little relic of the pomp and glory of war has just been unearthed from a shell hole in the Meuse sector of the great war, as a result of seven years' search.

The bodies of seven members of the American expeditionary force have been discovered, all killed in action, in 1918. One body was that of a prominent Columbus, Ohio, lawyer, who left the district attorney's office to become a lieutenant of infantry in the world war; the other bodies were those of men drafted into a war they had no interest in. But they were all killed together

Editor of "John Bull" Now Out of Prison

MAIDSTONE, Eng., July 31.—Horatio Bottomley, who stirred the British war time public to such depths that he came within an ace of being Premier, was secretly released from Maidstone Prison today, having been paroled after serving five years of a seven year sentence for fraudulently converting to his own use money subscribed to the Victory Bond Club which he founded.

Bottomley was a jingo and a yellow journalist, but a savage critic of the administration's incompetence. It is freely charged that he was sacrificed as a lesson to critics, for doing what many other public men were doing in England.

POLICE BATTLE DEMONSTRATION AS MARCHING THOUSANDS DEMAND THAT VICTIMS OF FRAME-UP BE LIBERATED

Workers Sing "The International"; Police Arrest Three in Effort to Break Up Parade

Singing "The International," thousands of workers marched thru the streets of New York to City Hall Square yesterday afternoon and demonstrated before the City Hall in their demand for the immediate release of Sacco and Vanzetti. The march followed a huge protest demonstration, attended by ten thousand persons at Union Square.

Three workers were arrested as a result of the demonstration. As the parade swung into City Hall Square after marching down Second avenue thru the Lower East Side and the Italian quarter, police and detectives of the Oak street station broke into the parade, many of them swinging clubs.

The parade started at Union Square and proceeded down Broadway to 13th street where it turned into Second avenue. It continued along Second avenue to Chrystie street. It then started to rain but that did not have any effect on the marchers. From Chrystie street the workers proceeded to the Bowery, then to Grand and Mulberry street.

Harry Kalis, 28, of 257 West 28th street and Joseph Horowitz, 18, of 215 East 13th street, were placed under arrest charged with organizing a parade without the permission of the police—altho it is well known that no such permission is required.

As the marchers, after leaving Union Square, turned into 13th street singing "The Internationale" and waving banners, policemen stepped up and arrested Anthony Madrigon, a parade leader, 32, of 1672 83rd street, Brooklyn, a laborer. Madrigon, who was arrested by Patrolman [illegible], refused to stop the parade.

After Madrigon's arrest, Marie Madregano took his banner and lead the marching workers amid loud cheers.

Shouts of "Save Sacco and Vanzetti" and "Down with Fascism" arose from the marchers as they swung down Mulberry street into the Italian quarter.

Throngs of workers lined the sidewalks on the line of march cheering the paraders. Many of them joined the ranks of the marchers.

Thousands Brave Rain in Mighty Demonstration

Ten thousand people braved the rain yesterday afternoon to demand the immediate release of Sacco and Vanzetti at a mass demonstration held in Union Square.

Representing many various political views, a score of speakers from two platforms united in branding the death sentence passed on Sacco and Vanzetti as a brazen injustice and in urging that the frame-up workers be immediately and unconditionally freed.

Among the speakers who addressed the meeting were Leonard [illegible], former editor of The [illegible]; Jacob Margolies, District Attorney Marcelino Greco, M. Ginsberg, Schuck, Pascal Cosgrave, Feld [illegible], B. G. Signan, Ludwig Lore, A. Wittenberg, Rose Pastor Stokes, Jennie Baer, Lillie Sarenoff, H. Van Vanderburgh and J. Louis England.

A telegram which was addressed to Sacco and Vanzetti and which was unanimously adopted at the meeting read:

"Thousands of friends in a public demonstration in New York today send their greetings. Keep up your undaunted courage, comrades. The solidarity of the working class will make you free."

Branding the partiality with which Sacco and Vanzetti have been tried, the meeting sent the following message of protest to Governor Fuller of Massachusetts:

Send Protest to Fuller

PROTEST ALONE CAN SAVE US", WRITES SACCO

ENEMY RUTHLESS, SAYS WARNING TO ULTRA-OPTIMISTS

Frame-up Victims Weak From Hunger Strike

Scores of Meetings to Demand Their Freedom

Warning the working class of the world against blind optimism and stressing the fact that a mighty international protest can alone save him and Vanzetti from the electric chair Nicola Sacco, in a reply to a letter from an over-optimistic sympathiser declares, "It is most certain that they will kill us if the voice of comrades and friends does not become a mighty one and is not backed up with the will to do whatever is necessary to achieve the victory."

"You must not forget," he says, "that the enemy does not fight fair, that it will stoop to any infamy and it already has. It isn't safe to be optimistic with such scoundrels to deal with. I only hope for a demonstration that will frighten them and prevent such a crime as they have done to us ever again being committed upon someone else."

Scores of meetings were held throughout the country yesterday to demand the immediate and unconditional release of Sacco and Vanzetti. A meeting of 10,000 held in Union Square at 3 p. m. sent a telegram to Fuller demanding the release of the framed-up workers.

Paris General Strike.

A general strike in Paris is likely again today, only an international clamor, a protest-can free us. And yet, while we are so near the tomb, your letter amazes me with its unwarranted optimism, saying, 'You must not despair, dear Nicola, for, though the suffering be long and weary, it is soon to end in freedom!'

Life Not Monuments.

"How you are deluded! This is not even common sense, coming from you. I would say nothing if such talk came from a man in the moon, but from you, who are also in the struggle for liberty, this is too much. Do you not know the evils to which the defenders of the decrepit old society will go? Under the circumstances it pains me to see such blind optimism in a comrade. Are you waiting to see them kill us first so that you can build us a monument?

"And it is most certain that they will kill us if the voice of our comrades and friends does not become a mighty one and is not backed with the will to do whatever is necessary to achieve the victory. I have always had faith in the men who toil for their bread, but they are often slow to see real danger and sometimes need urging. It is cowardice to face danger from a safe distance and not shoulder one's share of responsibility.

Force the Enemy's Hand.

"Aside from the fact that staring Bart and me in the face, I would not here to know that labor has not the courage to face the battle with a showing of solidarity that will force the hand of the implacable enemy to desist from what it plans to do. It is not to scold you not to say that we do not appreciate what the friends have already done for us, this is not at all!

"But you must not forget that the enemy does not fight fair, that it will stoop to any infamy and it already has. It isn't safe to be optimistic with such scoundrels to deal with. I only hope for a demonstration that will frighten them and prevent such a crime as they have done to us ever again being committed upon some one else.

"That is all. I am not writing this out of prison irritation, nor yet because of their cruelty in bringing us back to this stifling place to torture us some more before they burn us, but I want the comrades to know what kind of creatures they are dealing with.

"Well, without Union, be of good cheer, comrade. Best wishes to all friends from Bart and me.

"Yours, sincerely

"NICOLA SACCO."

Weak With Hunger.

BOSTON, July 31.—While Sacco and Vanzetti are growing weaker as the result of their long hunger strike, plans for their forcible feeding are being made by the prison authorities.

Seven long years in prison coupled with their long fast have weakened them considerably. Death by starvation or death by electrocution face Sacco and Vanzetti within the next eleven days—unless the workers of the world free them thru a mighty international protest.

The internationally known French writer, Romain Rolland, and a number of other French writers, sent the following telegram to Colonel Charles Lindbergh, the first aviator to make the non-stop trans-Atlantic flight:

"At the moment when the people of France are welcoming you with great enthusiasm, we draw your attention to two innocent men, Sacco and Vanzetti, who have been threatened with execution for six years. We appeal to your noble heart to present petition to the American government in favor of a review of the trial, or their pardon."

Bullets Show Confession False.

WHITE PLAINS, N. Y., July 31.—Sergeant John Harrison of the Scarsdale police force, who was shot to death in June 1923 while attempting to apprehend an automobile thief, was slain by bullets from two different pistols, probably in the hands of two men, it was learned here today.

This fact, known to the authorities here for some time, but revealed publicly for the first time today, throws an entirely new light on the brutal slaying, the blame for which Arthur Barry, confessed jewel thief, placed on the shoulders of his former accomplice, "Boston Billy" Williams, in a spectacular confession to the police shortly after his arrest.

Unite! O Ye Workers for Action

(Dedicated to the freedom of Sacco and Vanzetti.)

By ELLEN WETHERELL.

Mutterings of deep discontent,
Sound of a brave warfare
Stout hearts speed to the front
To mingle their blood in the fray;
Red lightnings flash from the West
Thunders prophetic resound.
A white star gleams thru the night.—
Star of a Victory profound.

O, Ye Workers:—Ye men and ye women:—
Ye mothers with babes on your breasts
Do ye not hear the bold bugle blowing
The march of brave feet thru the land?
Then it is the call to your duty,
United in spirit and deed!
The world lies before you to conquer,
For yourselves and humanities' need!
We are mighty in Truth and in numbers.
Our foes, they are few in their lies,
We will break every chain by our courage,
Courage for Truth never dies!
The masters are drunken with power,
Their souls are glutted with greed,
By the sweat of our bodies in slavery
We toil that their bodies may feed,
The masters are sweating the children,
They rob for profits and gains,
They sneer at our laws and our protests,
They laugh at our anguish and pains!
The masters are feasting in splendor
The children are crying for bread!
We are beaten, we are jailed, we're deported,
We are hung by the neck till we're dead!
Then Unite O Ye Workers for action!
And up! To the call of your union!
Up! from the shops and the factories
Up! every man, every woman,
Up! from the mines O Ye Toilers.
Up, from your blood and your sweat!
Aye! Up, from your blood and your sweat, workers.
Up! Up! Lest we forget.
Our heritage is ours for the taking.
O, workers, it's we who are robbed!
Awake! Men of Action from slumbers!
Be the bonds of yourselves and your jobs!
The hour is at hand for our rising.
Arms folded—a red flame in our hearts.
Strike out; each and all! All together!
Strike out! This is our part.
Hark not to the voice of the siren,
Beguiling with promises fair,
Beneath is the hand of the Tyrant.
The mailed fist of the slave drivers there,
Hark not to the voice of the siren
A serpent lies coiled in the song
The serpent of greed and oppression
The serpent of hate and of wrong
Injunctions—child labor and profits!
Open shop—gunmen—and strife!
The enemy presses hard on our ranks, workers,
Unite! Unite, for your lives,
Unite, O Ye Workers for Action.
We have nothing to lose but our chains, comrades.
And a world—a world to gain.

Teagle Gambled Soviet Union Would Fall

in the Tangor timber case settled the question as to whether certain timber sold in England by the Russian government had been "stolen" when it was nationalized in 1918, just as all other private property in Russia was nationalized.

The British court said that a government, being sovereign, has a right to take property as it chooses. The British government, the court said, had taken in taxes up to 85 per cent of earnings, which means up to 85 per cent of the value of the property.

In any case, Standard of New York and Vacuum proceeded to arrange their purchases from the Soviet in accordance with the advice of Hughes.

Nobles Buy "Stolen" Oil.

Moreover, the Nobles, who are Walter Teagle's partners in a claim to nationalized oil property in Russia, are buying "stolen" oil. In January of this year they made a contract to buy 50,000 tons annually from the Russian government.

There is another game that Sir Henry Deterding—seconded by Walter Teagle of the Standard Oil of New Jersey—is playing in his appeal to American public opinion, asking it to turn against the Soviet Union for New York and Vacuum for buying Russian output.

Spain, France and Italy have either established or are establishing state monopolies to deal in petroleum products. The plan is for these monopolies to buy, refine and distribute cheap Russian crude—cheap because it need stand only the low freight from the Black Sea instead of the high freight from our gulf ports. Spain, France and Italy are the domain of Royal Dutch and the Standard Oil of New Jersey. Sir Henry Deterding saw this development coming and tried to prevent it by an entire year of negotiation with the Soviets, attempting to get a monopoly of the Russian output for himself and Standard of New Jersey. That would have shut the budding state monopolies off from their expected source of supply.

MILITARISTS IN DRIVE AGAINST CHINESE MASSES

Fear Communists As Mass Leaders

HANKOW, July 31.—The political committee of the Kuomintang has become completely subservient to the military council and is carrying out its orders in every detail. The principal activity of this counter-revolutionary clique today is directed against the Communists who are the only well-organized opposition to the betrayal of the revolution.

Plenary Session Called.

August 15 is set as the date for the plenary session of the central executive committee of the Kuomintang at which time the question will come up for discussion regarding the future relations between the Kuomintang and the Communist Party.

It has been recommended to the plenary session to approve measures against the Communist Party pending the third congress of the Kuomintang. But these measures are to be immediately effective.

Counter-revolutionary Proposals.

The demands of the reactionary agents of the militarists are that all members of the Communist Party who are at the same time members of the Kuomintang and who work in Kuomintang organizations or hold posts in the Nationalist government or army must leave the Communist Party, otherwise they will immediately be removed from office. Also members of the Communist Party must not carry on Communist work under the cover of the Kuomintang. An additional demand is one prohibiting members of the Kuomintang joining any other political party under penalty of facing accusations of rebellion against the Kuomintang. All this is in direct violation of one of the principles of Sun Yat Sen that specifically stipulated that Communists should always have the right to work within the Kuomintang.

MILITANT GROUP IN MINER UNION ISSUES BULLETIN

Demands Strong Drive To Win Coal Strike

CHICAGO, Ill., July 31.—Calling for organization of non-union fields for nationalization of the mines and the railroads, for relief for the striking miners, but especially for a more militant and aggressive policy by the strikers themselves, the Progressive Miners Committee, an organization of rank and file miners belonging to the United Mine Workers of America, has issued here the first number of "The Miners' Strike Bulletin".

The nature of this movement of progressives among the miners is shown in a statement put out by the committee, on the first page of its strike bulletin, in which under the title "Why the Strike Bulletin" they say.

The strike of the bituminous miners is now in its fourth month. The operators have carried on a vicious campaign, in their attempt to enforce a wage cut and to materially worsen the conditions of the miners. This campaign applies equally to the anthracite miners, where the check-off system is not being enforced, and where the miners are compelled to strike against wage cuts and lengthening of the work-days.

This strike bulletin is issued by the Progressive Miners' Committee for the purpose of rallying the rank and file to militantly struggle against these attacks, to fight against the weak-kneed begging policy of the Lewis administration, and to demand that the real fighting spirit and strength of the Miners' Union be organized, that the grievances and demands of the anthracite miners be linked up with that of the striking bituminous miners, that the struggle be made jointly and the strike brought swiftly to a victorious conclusion.

Many left-wingers and progressives labor under the illusion that it is wrong to criticize the Lewis administration during the period of strike, even though they know that the policies being pursued leads, not to victory, but either to defeat, or at best a demoralizing compromise.

This is the main reason why the Progressives have not issued a statement dealing with the strike situation. This position is wrong and must be combatted. The left-wing with the progressive forces in the Miners' Union must compel the leaders to follow a militant struggle policy.

The Lewis administration have thrown away the national agreement. They are doing nothing to organize the non-union territory. No attempt is being made to enforce the check-off system in the anthracite. They refuse to set up relief committees, in spite of the fact that many miners' families are going hungry. They simply refuse to organize the real strength of miners for a fight. Under these circumstances, the struggle is twofold, the progressive must carry on a struggle in the union to compel the Lewis administration to carry on a real fight against the coal operators. Then the solidified organization must throw its complete strength into the struggle against the coal operators.

The "Save the Union" program which is also our program and which was endorsed by the majority of the members of the Miners' Union, can and will win the strike.

Coal miners demand action, you are facing a great responsibility. Now is the time to act.—Progressive Miners Committee.

The bulletin commends the marching miners of District 2, John Brophy's district, and stands by the slogans of the "Save the Union" ticket in the last miners' elections.

It carriers news of the struggle, of evictions, of attempted strike-breaking, of barbed wire entanglements around mining towns, and calls for defense of Sacco and Vanzetti.

The bulletin sells for five cents a copy, or $1.50 a hundred, and is published at 127 Belden Ave., Chicago.

New American Marine Base At Olangapo Has Strongest Pacific Unit

MANILA, July 31.—Olangapo, the site of America's new marine base in the Far East, is booming like a western village. One month ago it resembled Sleepy Hollow and today it resembles the center of a baby gold rush. Fifteen hundred marines were landed at Olangapo on their way to China. Subsequently about 1,000 of them were taken to Shanghai, but the important fact is that the government is building barracks and making other improvements which leave no doubt of its purpose.

Bars which cluster outside the limits of the new reservation are thriving, there is new paint on the swinging doors and the brass foot rails have been polished. Everything will be ready for the Marines when they return from China.

A total personnel of 2,500 men and officers will be stationed in Olangapo before the end of the year. Together with the personnel of the navy base previously established there, and the Filipino population of the town, there will shortly be a metropolis of some 5,000 or more.

Marines now stationed at Olangapo are the best equipped fighting unit ever brought to the Pacific. Aircraft, tanks, artillery and gas equipment are included.

Milwaukee Communists Picnic on August 7

MILWAUKEE, July 31. — The Workers (Communist) Party, Local Milwaukee, has arranged a picnic with outdoor dancing and games for Sunday, August 7, at the Areadian Inn, Greenfield Ave., West Allis. Prominent speakers just returned from the Soviet Union will address the crowds.

Take the Waukesha Rapid Transit trams marked "Local" leaving the Public Service Building 15 minutes past the hour. Get off at Sunny Slope station and walk three blocks north. You can also board trains at 6th and Michigan, 16th and Clybourn, 27th and Clybourn, and 35th and Clybourn. By auto or bus up Greenfield Ave. to the door.

Four women were injured, one of them seriously, when the engine backfire of a motor launch docked at the foot of Bedford Ave., in the Sheepshead Bay section, set fire to the craft.

SENATOR IGLESIAS OF PORTO RICO, TOOL OF AMERICAN IMPERIALISTS

By J. Nevarez, Organizer, Communist League of Porto Rico.

Santiago Iglesias, honorable senator and leader of organized labor in Porto Rico, shares with Don Antonio Barcelo the political leadership of the island. In Porto Rico, Senator Iglesias is hailed as Barcelo's future rival for the office of governor should the colony be granted political autonomy (which the two above mentioned are jointly campaigning to secure from congress) or as the logical senator from Porto Rico, should the impossible happen and Porto Rico be admitted to statehood. In the convention of the Pan-American Federation of Labor, however, Iglesias presents a pitiable picture, a meek and most perfect flunkey of the leaders of the American labor bureaucracy, an interpreter for President Green to whom he bows with meek reverence at the slightest nod.

It was at the last convention of the Pan-American Federation of Labor that Iglesias was given the post of Spanish secretary to that body, a job which he deserves for his services to American imperialism in Porto Rico. Iglesias has proved his ability to stem the tide of anti-imperialism developing in the labor movement of Latin America.

Faker Betrays Latin Labor.

On the island of Porto Rico, the first of the colonies secured in the war with Spain, to be completely subjugated to the will of Wall Street, it served as a sort of experimental laboratory for the American imperialist. With Gompers' aid, the scheme was conceived of bringing the labor movement of Latin America under the domination of Wall Street's labor lieutenants. Santiago Iglesias is a by-product of this experiment staged in Porto Rico, and its organization was in 1918 of the pan-A. F. of L. is the result.

Porto Rico, previous to the Yankee invasion, was a country of small, diversified agriculture, the land being, for the most part in the hands of small land owners, with huge families and tenants depending on them. The semi-feudal social terms of old Spain prevailed there.

With the American invasion in 1898, the change from a colony of semi-feudal Spain to that of a modern highly developed imperialist power, effected an immediate economic revolution in the island. The immediate penetration of American finance, thru the National City Bank of New York and others, led to the hasty expropriation of thousands of landowners, estimated to date at about 40,000 titleholders plus their dependents. Thousands of the island's best and most fertile acreage fell into the hands of American and other foreign corporations, who devoted these lands to large agriculture, sugar, tobacco and coffee cultivation. The thousands expropriated were forced into wage slavery, to labor in the plantation sugar mills and tobacco factories. Porto Rico then became the scene of the most brutal exploitation of workers; hours, sunrise to sunset; wages 60 cents per day, together with the plundering of the wealth created, by the stockholders, coupon clippers, in the form of profit and "earned" dividends.

Exploited Workers Revolt.

Such conditions did not long prevail without creating a feeling of revolt among the mass of exploited, which gave birth to the desire for workers' organization. This movement for workers' organization came under the leadership of Santiago Iglesias, an anarchist emigre from Spain, who because of his experience in the anarchist movement in Spain, and wider experience in work of agitation among the masses, became outstanding in the workers' movement in Porto Rico and was trusted by the workers of Porto Rico.

American economic and political rule in Porto Rico is not entirely free from resistance on the part of the Spanish and native capitalist class. On the contrary, the resistance offered the Americans by the native bourgeoisie, primarily of a political nature, was one that worried the American authorities. Thus the outstanding political leader of the Porto Rican and Spanish bourgeois, Luis Munoz Rivera, fought the American political administration, demanding political independence for the island, until 1915, when he capitulated to American political rule. The Americans in turn redoubled efforts to organize the workers, and creating a labor organization whose avowed aim would be to strive to eliminate the class conflict which is opposed to the masses, and raise the standard of life of the Porto Rican masses to that of the American workers on the continent. The American authorities cooperated with the A. F. of L. in offering Iglesias protection in his mission, a thing of which Iglesias speaks with the contempt of almost childish gratefulness and admiration.

Thus, by such methods of bribery the American rulers won over the leader of the workers' movement and the masses of workers. Iglesias to this day is an ardent exponent of American "democratic" institutions, a pro-archer in Latin America of Gompers and the good intentions of the Yankees. The full-wing shows how Iglesias bows until his nose touches the tips of the Yankee boots; thus in upholding American administration he speaks to workers in Porto Rico:

"In office where questions affecting laborers are to be passed on, we need Americans who are accustomed to treat laborers like people, not caciques (native bourgeoisie) who believe laborers to be inferior beings." (Union Obrero Free Press, 1912.)

Hence followed the creation of the Free Federation of Workingmen of Porto Rico, affiliated to the A. F. of L., whose policies are dictated by the A. F. of L. executive council and administered by Iglesias and his gang of retainers.

The workers of Porto Rico, however, took the organization of the Federation Libre seriously, considered it as a means by which they could organize and struggle for better conditions. Thus the workers rallied around the Federacion Libre, until its ranks in 1926-7 counted 50,000 members. And, during the war years, Porto Rico became the scene of great mass strikes in the sugar, tobacco, and all other industries on the island.

Starvation for Workers As Japanese Seek Cheap Labor Supply in China

HONOLULU, July 31. Declaring that the United States is warring against Japan, Tatsuo Furuno said that Japan is no longer antagonistic to the Soviet government. Yu shin Furuno, Japanese political orator, jolted the imperialistic assembly at the Institute of Pacific relations yesterday, by announcing that Japan intends to hold the lease of the Kwantung peninsula and the South Manchurian Railway zone and denounces its right to own and operated in any place not dependent on, while Japanese are to have full right to travel, reside and trade in Manchuria. He further insisted on the Joint Sino-Japanese operation of the Hanyan Pinnan mines.

He frankly states that Japan's imperialist policies in China are actuated by Japanese need for raw materials and announced the "natural rights" of peoples to seek the best means of livelihood.

While admitting that the "stabilization" of China and its penetration by Japanese imperialism would create a desirable and unlimited source of cheap labor, from which starvation unemployment was acute in Japan and the poverty of the people would be further increased by Japanese imperialism in China.

Dr. Shinobi Nasu of Tokio University addressed the conference on the Japanese cooperation movement, produce figures showing that there are now 14,000 cooperative locals in Japan with a membership of 9,000,000. The peasant organizations number 4,000 with 310,000 members.

FAMOUS REACTIONARIES COMPETE FOR HINDENBURG'S TITLE

Five German leaders are being regarded as possible successors to President von Hindenburg as his eighteith birthday, on Oct 2, draws near and talk of his resignation persists. He is an old man and many believe he thinks it is time for him to retire. Those most prominently mentioned to succeed the man who has exerted tremendous power in Germany for many years are Gen. Hans von Seeckt, Hjalmar Schacht, former chief of the army; Walter Simons, chief justice of the supreme court; Foreign Minister Gustav Stresemann, and Hans Luther, president of the Reichsbank.

SOME GIRL UNIONISTS OF CHINA

By ANISE.

HANKOW, China, July 31. (FP)—In the great 4th congress of the All-China Labor Federation meeting in Hankow, I was struck by the face of some women delegates. Girl delegates, I should have said, since they were clearly not over 20. One of them, whom she had her soft round face and soft bobbed hair over the desk to write her notes, might have been a frequent old in a primary school, so gently childlike was she. Later I learned that she was Wang Ken-Yin, head of the Shanghai women's delegation, who delivered on the second day of the congress a most fiery speech against Gen. Chiang Kai-Shek's suppression of workers.

Ardent Speakers.

There was another girl who sat directly below the platform. At first I was hardly sure if she were a girl at all and not some grown-up young boy in his teens, full of ardor and devotion. Her boyish bob, the swinging gesture with which she hurled her clenched fist into the air, crying out the slogans, and especially the embarrassed grin with which she sank back when once she had shrieked a slogan all alone, were all boyish rather than feminine. At high moments of the congress her taut uplifted face showed a determined willingness to walk straight into machine guns whenever demanded. Only when she turned at the meeting's end to offer her arm around the two girls behind her, and I saw her entire figure, was I certain of her sex.

I invited the women delegates to dinner, on behalf of the workers' press of America. We talked for hours together, and they told their stories. Of 20 women from 4 provinces attending as labor delegates, 17 were workers direct from the shop.

Direct From Shops.

Wang Ken-Yin, the child-faced orator from Shanghai, is 20. From the age of 8 she has worked in spinning mills. For the first 8 months of labor she got no wage at all, being merely an apprentices. Then she began to get 6 cents a day. Miss Wang has worked in 4 different factories through the days of her youth. She gets now the magnificent sum of 21 American cents a day.

Miss Wang told me the benefits of the union, organized two years ago in the great explosion of labor activity after the May 30 shooting by the British in Shanghai. "Formerly we had half a day holiday on Sunday; now we have all day Sunday because of the union," she said. "When I was young and made mistakes, the foreman beat me; the older girls he did not beat, but fined them very high. Now the union protests the beatings and does not allow big fines.

Studied in Lunch Hour.

Twelve hours a day is the time Miss Wang must work. But other girls from Shanghai told me they worked 16 hours, from 4 a.m. to 8 p.m. In the modern factories which work two shifts the day is 12 hours.

I asked the Shanghai girls how many could read and write. Three out of eight said counting the students, said they could read but not write. Since most had begun their factory life at the age of 9 and had worked 12 hours or more each day, I asked when they had learned.

"Ah, Chiang came the union sent teachers to the factories at lunch time," they explained. "It was the one free moment in the day and we used it to learn to read."

Even though illiterate, they were fully aware of the work of their trade union. "We held public meetings before Gen. Chiang Kai-shek started his oppressions," said Miss Wang, "but now they are secret."

Asked what they expected from the Nationalist government and from their union fight, they outlined parts of the answer.

"From the Nationalist government we get the union, for without it the employers are always suppressed and the leaders shot. The union is all of us, so it fights for what we need. We expect an 8 hour day and better wages. This is especially needed for women who are most oppressed of all human beings. We only must the woman who bore boys in the factory, but the girls, wash and watch at home and also look for fire and such things. We expect the Nationalist government to found the factories' fine schools for us to learn things. And also a special room to feed babies in. And also hospital care when we are sick, because we can't get the money to pay for doctor's care. And also vacation with pay before and after babies are born. Also to abolish child and shameful punishments."

Chiang Kills Girls.

Cruel and shameful punishments they defined as being that in a little wooden cage at night that you could not lie down in for making a mistake."

All of these girls face capture and death if they return to Shanghai where Chiang Kai-shek's lieutenants are executing hundreds of workers for alleged Communist tendencies. They smile. It is evident that they are too full of life to take the thought of death seriously. Yet girls as young as these have already gone bravely to death at the hands of the counter-revolution in China's coast cities.

They all send greetings to America's workers. It would be incredible to them if I should explain that girls here of American workers are not at all interested in world revolution. I do not tell them. I send back and convey their greetings.

Prison Made Shoes Stamped as Munson Last Army Product

WASHINGTON, July 31. (FP)—Shoes made in the Indiana state penitentiary are being sold on the market as United States army Munson last shoes, asserts the federal trade commission in ordering the Commonwealth Manufacturing Co. not to place the letters "U. S." on its products. These shoes, made by forced labor of unpaid prisoners, compete on the open market with union-made shoes, disrupting unions of workers and adding to the glut of footwear now congesting the market.

The Commonwealth firm, whose stockholders profit from prison labor and fraud, is also ordered not to represent itself as a "manufacturer" to hide the fact that its shoes are prison-made. The firm secretly sells its shoes wholesale. The Commonwealth's prison shoes are "greatly inferior in quality and workmanship to the army shoes they are made to imitate," the commission states.

Big Croton Dam Overflows

CROTON, N. Y., July 31.—Never before in mid-summer has there been an overflow of water at the big Croton dam of the New York City's chain of reservoirs in Westchester, but today a waterfall three inches in depth is flowing over the wide spillway of the dam, and being lost in the gorge of the old Croton River bed 150 feet below. The daily water loss is about 300,000,000 gallons.

American Doctor In Soviet Union Finds Health Bureau Good

LENINGRAD, July 31.—Dr. W. Horsley Gantt, a physician of Charlottsville, Va., has just finished a large two volume work on his medical inspection of the Union of Socialist Soviet Republics. Gantt finds that while there is an increase in the number of cases of tuberculosis and trachoma, and a wave of malaria is just now sweeping the marshy regions, other diseases show a marked decrease, due to continual improvements of the methods of the public health departments. The diseases thus markedly reduced are especially smallpox, typhus, cholera, and influenza.

Infant mortality is reduced to 177 deaths per thousand births, a point much lower than in the United States. The Moscow birth rate is thirty-a thousand and the New York rate is twenty-one per thousand.

Dr. Gantt has the highest praise for the State Health bureaus of the Soviet Union and for the individual physicians who work for the state.

Amsterdam Disliked By Iglesias, But One Delegate Will Risk It

WASHINGTON, July 31.—Samuel G. Yudine, who has been acting as a member of the Mexican delegation at the Pan-American Federation of Labor convention here, has left for New York, whence he is to embark for Amsterdam, as a fraternal delegate to the forthcoming congress of the International Federation of Trade Unions. Yudine is a member of the Mexican chamber of deputies, and also a member of the executive committee of the Mexican Confederation of Labor of which Luis Morones is head. Yudine, in discussing the fact that Santiago Iglesias, Spanish-American secretary of the Pan-American Federation of Labor and right-hand man of Paul Gitton in Latin America, is frequently of late expressing views in his newspaper upon his attendance with what he calls "the manipulations of the Amsterdam International as the American continent."

Hays in Radio Talk Says Legion Leads Attacks On Liberty

Certain secret military agencies, including the American Defense Society and the National Security League were attacked as "inimical to" by Arthur Garfield Hays, in a radio address broadcast Monday night by station WHN at Park Central Hotel, New York City.

Mr. Hays, who is a member of the Executive Committee of the American Civil Liberties Union, also handled the American Legion. Women's Temperance Society and Ku Klux Klan as "censorship organizations."

Losing Liberties.

"While by little the liberties of American citizens are slipping away," said Mr. Hays, "and the process is so gradual as to be hardly noticeable. However, we are gradually losing even the fundamental rights of free speech, free press and free assemblage.

"You can speak and write on any subject you please in Pennsylvania, West Virginia and New Jersey, in fact, everywhere, the subject concerned specifically in times of crisis.

"In California the I. W. W. are jailed for expressing their views. In Tennessee, you can't [illegible] on anything [illegible] which [illegible] the leaders of the people [illegible].

No Redress Here

"Freedom of speech as a fundamental right and yet in 1926 for the Sacco and Vanzetti case, Negroes in Detroit were put on trial for murder, by defending themselves against a mob of white men who tried to force them from their homes.

"We are told to respect the courts, the supreme court of the nation, the highest tribunal, but how can we respect a court of justice which allows the accused no opportunity in America. We are not even the country of political refuge. We send anti-Fascists to Italy, communists [illegible] and [illegible] to Germany.

Legion Worst

"Reformers like Jane Addams, Oswald Garrison Villard, Dr. Norman Thomas have been a fairly active agency of intolerance and repression. Twenty-seven states report that there were more than 500 Ku Klux Klan. An investigation of the record should be made of Villard, Dr. Norman Thomas and a few others who began their activities as pacifists, who advocated non-resistance to the draft, but who have been a party to hatreds more than radicalism. But many of our former soldiers regard themselves as natural guardians whose duty to protect present conditions is more important than the obligation to defend eternal principles."

The Fight Against Another August 4

Thirteen years ago the workers of the world were confronted with the terrifying prospect of a World War. This war lasted for three long years, which cost us millions of dead and wounded, and heavy financial burdens placed upon the working class. August 4th has burned a lesson deep in our hearts. We have resolved that there shall never again be another August 4th, that never again shall the workers of the world become cannon fodder in the interests of the J. P. Morgan, John D. Rockefeller and the rest of that pirate crew. The drive for Five Thousand New Readers for the Daily Worker is one effective way to fight against the danger of another August 4th, which is daily and hourly threatening us. Already our gunboats are in China. Already our marines are in Nicaragua. Already the clouds of the capitalist offensive against the Soviet Union are gathering. We must build our army to fight. We must spread the knowledge of the new disaster which threatens to overwhelm us. We must do this by securing Five Thousand New Readers for the Daily Worker.

The Stock Market Responds to Geneva.

Half a hundred separate issues of investment stocks have reached their best prices of the year on the market. For the third day the market at the close of the week witnessed the movement of more than two million shares. With such velocity were stocks moving that the close presented a bewildering spectacle. When the market closed and the movement was analyzed it presented interesting and instructive as well as frightfully ominous developments.

The cause of this rapid movement and sky rocketing of stocks is not to be found in any present streak of prosperity in this country, but is solely due to speculative investment in certain kinds of stock—STOCK INSAVAR INDUSTRIES. This dealing in futures is due to the collapse of the Geneva naval conference, for what might more correctly be called a war conference. The disagreement between the United States and Britain over relative strength of naval crusers and the break-down of the Geneva conference is the signal for the most ambitious competition in armaments the world has yet witnessed. This competition will not be limitrul to crusers, but will be extended to include every instrument of destruction. The orders for armor plate for battleships will mount to millions of dollars, the manufacturers of high concentrated explosives will work over time, the chemical industries will produce ever more deadly gases and perfect its devastating liquid fire, arms manufacturing industries will turn out billions of guns to belch forth the message of imperialism on a thousand battlefields in every part of the inhabitable globe.

At this moment the imperialist powers and their agents are waging war against the Chinese revolution and conspiring to wage war against the Soviet Union, which stands as the outpost of the world revolution and as the one formidable enemy of imperialism. But at the same time Britain and the United States and their vassal nations engage in predatory wars against the workers and peasants of the colonial and semi-colonial countries they strive for supremacy against each other. This policy must inevitably lead to an open conflict between them. When they can no longer carry out their imperialist ambitions through diplomatic tricks the fight will break forth with the elemental violence of another and more frightful war. In preparation for the conflict the war industries will work full blast and the stocks in those concerns will continue to soar ever higher. The munition profiteers see visions of mountains of gold—blood money—flowing into their hands. Simultaneous with the announcement of the determined stand of the British war-mongers against any compromise at Geneva there seems in America the merging of United States Steel, the E. I. du Pont de Nemours ammunition trust and the General Motors concern; the manipulators of this giant merger are also heavy stockholders in chemical and dye concerns. This is a 100 per cent war combination. It will be recalled that two years ago Elbert H. Gary, head of the steel trust, initiated the program of reorganizing the great industrial plants of the nation so that they could be changed from a "peace time basis" to a war basis within forty-eight hours. General Motors accepted the proposals, as did also Henry Ford; the powder trust is always on a war basis.

Friday's rise in the market on these stocks is indicative of the fact that the war-mongers have drawn the proper conclusions for their class from the fiasco at Geneva.

It is up to the working class to draw its conclusions and prepare for the most determined fight against these new conspiracies against us. We cannot effectively oppose war by mere pacifist yearnings, by longing for peace in a world in which there yet remains too much that must be destroyed by blood and fire. We must prepare to fight against war by creating organizations that will make it impossible for the conspirators to carry out their dastardly conspiracies against us. Thirteen years ago the world was plunged into the last world war by the conflicting imperialisms of Europe. Today we face another war situation and it is the imperative duty of every revolutionist and every class-conscious worker to help to organize for the fight with every weapon at hand or that can be devised against the imperialist master class of his own country in order to weaken and if possible cripple them so that they cannot enter into the arena for another world war.

Sacco Warns Against "Blind Optimism"

It is amazing to see the childish confidence that many people calling themselves radicals place in Governor Fuller and his committee that is supposed to have investigated the Sacco and Vanzetti frame-up, when even the most paltry understanding of the case ought to convince one that the whole proceeding has been nothing but a farce, a shabby pretense, in order to shield the criminals responsible for the torture of these victims of class vengeance.

Altho many of the so-called friends and supporters of Sacco and Vanzetti yield to the illusions that the class enemies of these men will give them a fair hearing and liberate them so they may return to the ranks of the labor movement, the condemned men hold no such illusions.

Nicola Sacco, in reply to one of these sentimentalists who wrote him that "the the suffering be long and weary it will soon end in freedom," wrote a document that will stand high in the history of labor. Sacco branded the opinions of the correspondent as a "legend of nonsense," and asked, "Do you not know the ends to which the defenders of this decrepit old society will go? Under the circumstances it pains me to see such blind optimism in a comrade. Are you waiting to see them kill us first, so that you can build as a monument."

That reply, printed in full in another part of The DAILY WORKER, should be food for thought on the part of all those defending Sacco and Vanzetti, who have expressed some degree of confidence in Governor Fuller of Massachusetts and his advisory committee. Even the Federated Press has been guilty of such puerile utterances. Only last week it reported that the president of the Massachusetts state federation of labor thought he had "persuaded Fuller" on certain points regarding the credibility of testimony of witnesses for the defense. Such uncritical interpretation of news only aids in lulling the workers into a false sense of security regarding the enormity of the crime against these two workers that will be carried out, unless the protests and organized action of the workers of this and other countries assumes within the next week such gigantic proportions that the malignant powers now conspiring against Sacco and Vanzetti will not dare carry out their plans.

Sacco is aware of the situation and is perfectly correct when he declares that "only an international protest can free us."

Let us spurn further insipid twaddle about the "fairness" of Fuller and the rest of the jackal pack who want to destroy these two victims of class justice in order to terrorize other workers into submission to capitalist despotism and let us exert every ounce of energy in order to mobilize the masses for action in behalf of freedom for Sacco and Vanzetti.

Government Agents Speak as Labor Delegates

By MANUEL GOMEZ.

(This is the second of a series of articles analyzing the Pan-American Federation of Labor and its recent convention at Washington.)

Martinez Lamasks Pan-A. F. of L.

The Washington convention would be a memorable one if only because it furnished the unprecedented spectacle of the rising anti-imperialist protest of Latin America finding its way even into the Pan-American Federation of Labor, where everything was organized against it. The brutal massacre provided the setting but natural accomplishment must be credited largely to the championship of delegate Martinez of Venezuela, whose convention fight, the defeated, could not be annulled.

Martinez's stand in opposition to the rest of the convention was hesitant and faltering but it will have deep-going consequences. For not only did Martinez say his say, at least momentarily, but he obliged Mr. Green and the really decisive forces to own position. Their replies to the Venezuelan "hot head," as they called him, constituted as perfect an example of self-exposure as has ever been witnessed.

Delegates Were Fakes.

Before the convention was four days old it had become plain that the greater part of the parliament were not labor delegates at all but a choice collection of government agents and toadies!

Most of the evidence came out in the discussion on Martinez's general resolution against the Monroe Doctrine and American imperialism. Martinez had attacked Wall Street and Washington for their consistent aggressions against Latin America, pointing out among other things that they had robbed Colombia of the Panama area in 1903 and continued its tyrannize over the republic of Panama to the day that they had Cuba under the Platt Amendment, that they had violated the sovereignty of Haiti, Santo Domingo and Nicaragua, that they had repeatedly conspired against Mexico, that they were supporting the most flagrant and repulsive dictatorships in Latin America such as that of Gomez in Venezuela, that of Leguia in Peru and that of Machado, the notorious assassin of trade-unionists, in Cuba.

As soon as I heard the reading Martinez's resolution I knew it was going to mean trouble, but I was entirely unprepared for the exhibition that followed. It was not Green or Woll but the Latin-American part that jumped first to their feet with execrations upon their lips.

Peruvian Traitors Loudest.

"I understand the report in the resolutions committee was that the rejected amendments were those of Peruvian delegates declared indignantly. "This resolution is an insult to all of us. There is no tyranny of any kind in Peru. I believe the only tyranny that exists is in the hot head of the delegate from Venezuela. We who come as delegates of a free and democratic country, where labor has every legitimate right, cannot consent to a statement being made that the President of Peru is a tyrant."

Now the dictatorship of Leguia in Peru has long been one of the scandals of both labor and liberal circles even vaguely familiar with the conditions in that unhappy land—where there is a labor conscription act under which practically the entire Peruvian working class is conscripted to work a certain number of days each year without pay on the construction jobs of the Foundation Co. owned by Wall Streets interests, with President Leguia himself holding some of the shares!—this speech of the Peruvian delegate is a tell-tale one! That it was no chance utterance was proved the next minute, when the other delegate from Peru rose and elaborated upon it.

The Peruvian delegates had much to say in the convention, both in support of Leguia's government and in support of any reactionary measure that came up for consideration. To complete the mission for which undoubtedly they had been sent to Washington, they virtually "took charge" of the anti-imperialistic resolution on the Tacna-Arica question, denouncing the population of Chile and demanding that the Tacna-Arica territory be handed over to Peru, in "accordance with the patriotic insistence of the Peruvian government."

Peruvians From Paper Organizations

Inasmuch as the Federation of Labor of Lima, the only labor body in Peru having any substantial strength, has refused to have anything to do with the so-called Pan-American Federation of Labor, it is worth while asking what organizations were represented by the two Peruvians at the Washington convention. Their credentials bore high-sounding names: the "Universal Union of Confederations of Artisans and Laborers of Peru" and the "Assembly of United Societies of Peru." This is the first time that either of them has been heard of.

I overheard one of the newspapermen asking delegate Luis Roberto Kiss Castell of Peru exactly what kind of organization it was that he represented. The query was a puzzler, but he answered:

"Oh, a general organization."

"Is it a trade-union organization?"

"No, it isn't exactly a cooperative."

"Well, then, what can it be."

"You see, it is an organization friendly to the working people".

The Peruvian attack on Martinez did not lack delegates to second it. A delegate from Panama took a hand in the debate in order to reply to the statement that the United States government had ever interfered in Panama, and declared proudly of an, convincingly that "the republic of Panama is just as free and sovereign as any country on earth."

Dominican Delegate Terrified.

Then came delegate Pozo of Santo Domingo to say that although the Dominican delegation had originally voted Martinez resolution, it was under a grave misapprehension and to insist that the delegation's name be withdrawn from a document which it now regarded as [illegible] charges and which attacks governments. (President Green arose [illegible] No one suggested that the request of the Dominican delegate would be granted.)

Pozo had no stated here that the Dominican Confederation of Labor is another one of the myths represented at the convention of the P. A. F. of L. There is no such labor movement in Santo Domingo. There has been a small body of intellectuals there known as the "Nationalist Brotherhood" which sent delegates to the Pan-American Federation of Labor,

FUR DYE WORKERS REFUSED AID BY THE RIGHT WING

International Ignores Joint Board Letter

Further proof of the unwillingness of the right wing administration of the International Fur Workers' Union to organize the workers of the trade is seen in their refusal to take any action to help the workers of the Stein Fur Dyeing Co., who went on strike Tuesday, unable any longer to work under intolerable conditions.

On Wednesday the Joint Board sent special delivery letters to Philip Silberstein, international president, and Local 54, Newark and Local 3, Brooklyn, explaining the situation. The letters told how the workers walked out of the shop and came to the Joint Board for aid.

The letter points out that the Joint Board has no jurisdiction over dye shops, it field consisting only of manufacturers, therefore it urges the the international office to take control of the strike, the Joint Board to cooperate to the best of its ubility.

As no answer has been received and as no attempt has been made by the International to help the striking workers, it appears that it has no interest whatsoever in organizing the poorly paid workers in the dye shops.

Workers Angry.

When the workers in the market heard of the lack of interest displayed by the right wingers, they expressed their opinions. Many workers were heard to say that "after it is a question of fighting against the workers for the boss, the right wingers are on the job. When it is a case of fighting for the workers, they take just the opposite position."

Action on over 100 strike cases will be taken in Jefferson Market Court Tuesday morning. They have been postponed from several weeks ago.

Gangster Cases.

Five of the seven right wing gangsters who beat up four strikers over a month ago, and whom they were arrested told the police they were hired by the right wing for $50 a week, will come up Wednesday morning.

The two killers who almost murdered Aaron Gross, will have a hearing in Jefferson Market Court Thursday.

Frank P. Walsh, attorney for the Furriers' Union, is now examining the minutes of the Mineola trial. They consist of 1,600 typewritten pages.

No Further Concessions.

At the membership meetings of the four fur locals held Thursday evening, it was the sentiment of the workers that the Joint Board leaders should not give any further concessions to the right wing in any future negotiations.

Speaker after speaker took the floor to express their opinion on this matter. They all agreed that the attitude of the Joint Board has been unusually liberal towards people who do not have the interests of the union at heart. That in the future the Joint Board should be more strict in its dealings.

End Strike Assessments.

It was also decided that this will be the last week of strike assessments. That all workers should pay up this week as beginning Monday no more assessments will be levied against the membership.

The formation of the labor bureau was hailed by the assembled workers as a great step forward for the workers in the fur industry.

Ritchie, Looking for Candidacy, Raps Dries

DETROIT, July 31.—Gov. Albert C. Ritchie, State's rights champion and a potential democratic candidate for the Presidency, declared here today that "Wheelerism," as it is exemplified by Wayne B. Wheeler, general counsel of the anti-saloon league, is coming to be a real menace to the country."

The governor expressed his opinion of Wheeler in a public letter to the University of Michigan, in which he declined an invitation to debate the prohibition issue with Wheeler.

AUTO LABOR CONDITIONS AS STATED IN HAND BOOK OF U. S. BUREAN ARE BAD AND GROW WORSE

WASHINGTON, July 31. — The corps of organizers, now in Detroit planning union strategy in their campaign to line up the auto workers in the American Federation of Labor, will find a handy statistical guidebook to labor conditions in the industry in the bureau of labor statistics, "Wages and Hours in the Motor Vehicle Industry: 1925," just published.

In contrast to the problem of the United Textile Workers in meeting the union needs of a depressed, low wage occupation, Smith and his coadjutors face one of the world's most vigorous and alert industries, with wages substantially above the general average. In 1925, the average male worker made $36.67, against the general industrial average of about $30, the bureau reports.

Wages Low.

What an auto workers' union can do for the 400,000 men and women in that field is shown by the general comparison with the union level of hours and wages in the United States. Against the auto average of 72 cents an hour place the union average of $1.15 and against the auto average of 50 hours a week place the union average of 45. Even the ding men, who stamp out defects in fenders and hoods and are the highest paid of all auto crafts, made only $1.03 an hour, considerably lower than the average union mechanic's wage. Auto laborers, at the bottom of the pay ladder, get only 57 cents an hour.

Unemployment.

There is sharply fluctuating employment in autos. That a worker averages $36.67 a week by no means indicates that his yearly wage will be fifty times that amount. Instead, there is the disastrous Ford shutdown of 1927, which has thrown at least 50,000 men out of work. The bureau's charts show other disastrous sinking spells in 1922 and 1924. Seasonal unemployment is great, too, although many big Detroit firms are keeping their labor force together in off seasons by reducing the work week to 5, 4 and 3 days. These fluctuations do not appear in the bureau's employment graphic but they are acutely apparent in the payroll curves.

Another disturbing factor which an auto workers' union can correct is the tendency toward increase in hours. The 9-hour day is now the standard in the industry and is becoming more prevalent as the bureau indicates in its figure of 50.1 hours for the 1924 week against 50.3 in 1926. The first big job of the union evidently will be to hoist the standard for the 8-hour day.

Bonus Graft.

Wages are calculated almost exclusively on various sorts of bonus systems and incentives. A standard of production is set in which the worker, in ong system, gets 1 per cent bonus for attaining 75 per cent efficiency. The bonus rate steadily climbs so that the worker gets 20 per cent extra for 100 per cent efficiency and 140 per cent bonus for 200 per cent efficiency. Thus a worker with a base wage of $30 would earn $56 if his work were 100 per cent efficient. Pay for overtime varies from a straight time to one and one-half the regular rate.

Wages Now.

The bureau's study was made two years ago, on the threshold of the industry's most significant development into maturity with the growth of a few great producers. The startling rise of General Motors in the past year as the dominant force in the motor world with one of its products outselling the ubiquitous Ford; the shutdown and revamping of the industry's most important unit, Ford; supremacy in the low-price field; the liquidation of many of the smaller independents and the fierce competition among the remaining companies, is due to foothold against General Motors will mark the entry of the industry into a new period of great consolidations and maturity.

What this new era means for the organization of the auto workers is the problem confronting Smith and his fellow organizers, representing the A. F. of L. internationals. If they interpret the new trends, plan union strategy and then carry the war into the corporations' camps effectively enough to report the unionization of the industry to the 1928 convention of the A. F. of L. If they can, organized labor, and particularly the metal trades will enter another great era of prosperity, rivalled only by the war expansion period of 1918-20.

MORGAN BUS DEAL JAMMED THROUGH WITHOUT PROTEST

Scheme Will Cost Bus Rider 50¢ More

Olvany, Grover Whalen and Mayor Walker have succeeded in stilling all opposition to their bus scheme. The Board of Estimate has granted a nice juicy charter to The Equitable Coach Company for operation of crosstown buses in Manhattan and Brooklyn. At the same time the Bronx franchises went to the Surface Transportation Company.

Spokesmen for the mayor had this as a great victory and the stage is all set for Walker's triumphant tour abroad during which the nifty mayor will call on the king of England.

Significant in the maneuvering which preceding the final vote was the switch made by Borough President James J. Byrne. Right along, ever since Tammany Hall has been engineering this deal, Byrne opposed the granting of the Brooklyn franchise to the Equitable clique. A. Byrne is in Brooklyn man, and for many other reasons, he fa ed the granting of the franchise to the Coney Island and Gravesend Bus Corporation, a subsidiary of the H. T. and the Brooklyn City Rail Road Company. Byrne's opposition to the Brooklyn deal has blockaded the passage of the bill for some time past.

Another one of those eleventh hour Walker deals was put over to spur the deal through. It is said that Olvany got Byrne on the telephone a few hours before the hearing and warned him that unless Byrne voted for the Equitable franchise that he would order Walker into Brooklyn to campaign against Coyne, the Brooklyn political chief, at the next election.

In addition to the it appears that a consolidation changed hands and the stage was all set for the vote. Following the official Byrne telephone conversation Walker had a talk with Byrne for publicity purposes and the consolidation was made to look like another "victory."

William Worden, chairman of Walker's Reception Committee, is very much interested in the Equitable Coach Company. The coach company is under contract to buy its buses from the American Car and Foundry Corporation. Worden is one of the big shots of the concern and has enormous holdings in its stock. The American Car Corporation is one of the Morgan subsidiaries and is affiliated with General Electric.

That the car contract is a big one was made evident today when officials of the Equitable Coach Company said that they have an order in for 700 buses of the latest type. The contract involves over $14,000,000.

How effective the Tammany steamroller has smoothed out all opposition to its bus scheme was evidenced by the fact that Julius Miller, Manhattan borough president, who has been holding out in favor of the New York Railways Corporation, a subsidiary of the Fifth Avenue Coach Company, was won over to the Equitable idea. Miller is president of the Fifth Avenue Coach Company. Deals and counter-deals marked the bus scheme since its inception some eighteen months ago.

High handed political tactics characterized the taking of the vote on the franchise resolution. Skinning several items on the preceding page, Mayor suddenly announced, "The chair moves the adoption of No. 14. The clerk will call the roll."

The roll was called instantly. All members of the Board voted for the resolution. Walker then said, "The president of the Board of Aldermen moves the adoption of No. 25 as it refers to the Surface Transportation Corporation." The was followed by a similar vote.

No one in the room, except those vitally interested, realized just what was taking place, so speedy was the action. Only an opponent of Walker, Bill Herman A. Bayern, arose to object. Walker ordered a policeman to silence him.

Stewart Browne, president of the United Real Estate Owners' Association, who was backing another bus line, said, "The Board of Estimate is so lost to the best interests of the city treasury and the travelling public that it votes for a franchise that will cost the users 50 per cent more in fares, and the city will lose about $1,000,000 in revenue.

"I asked the mayor, What's the nigger in the woodpile?' and he answered, 'Ask me another.'"

Depression Grips All Massachusetts Unemployment Bad

By A. WARREN.

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., July 31. An industrial slump has hit Western Massachusetts. In some cities about a third of the population is on the verge of starvation, the worst sufferers are being the worst sufferers. In Western Massachusetts there is very little organization in any industry. Even political and fraternal labor organizations are few.

The city of Springfield this year is celebrating its 75th birthday in a time of depression unparalleled in 25 years. Mr. Fogarty, secretary of the Central Labor Union states that "approximately 20,000 men and women in the city are out of work and cannot find jobs." With their dependents this means about 60,000 people are affected. There are twice as many more who are working on short time and thus unable to meet the bare expenses of living.

Union Leader Protests.

"I am heartily sick of the false and empty cry of 'prosperity,'" Mr. Gatalo continues in a statement to the Mayor, after outlining a program for providing work for the unemployed. "I believe that the time has come for the press and public to face the fact that times are hard and to seek for a solution to a real and serious problem."

In Holyoke too, great depression is felt. Holyoke is known as the Paper City because its predominant industry is the manufacture of paper. Workers are being consistently laid off from the paper mills, and one large company, the American Writing Paper Company, is running on a 4-days a week schedule. The Paper makers' Union has some organization in several mills, but the bulk of the workers are unorganized, and bound by 5 year contracts which do not permit them to fight for improved conditions. Any sign of organization among the workers results in immediate dismissal from the plant and black-mailing in the city.

Holyoke Textile Situation.

With the exception of some mule spinners and loomfixers who have a union, the workers of the large textile mills such as the Farr-Alpaca and Skinners Silk Mills are unorganized. The largest textile mills of the city are the Lyman Mills, employing 1100. Preparatory to announcing a wage cut, they are terrorizing the workers by threatening removal of their mills to the South. Stockholders are making widespread statements about lowering the wage scale and increasing the working week in order to save the industry for New England. Any further increase of work or decrease of wage will mean greater hardship for the people, who even now hardly average $17.00 a week.

Workers Party Organizing.

In this atmosphere of deep depression there is only one encouraging note. The mass meetings organized by the Workers' Party have been increasingly successful. A Sacco-Vanzetti meeting aroused a great deal of enthusiasm amongst the workers, and a branch of the J. L. D. is in process of formation. The slogan, "Organize the Unorganized" has become a popular call at all workers' meetings.

Can't Exile Misher But Hold His Bond; Suit to Cancel It

(By Civil Liberties Union)

The practice of the U. S. Department of Labor in refusing to cancel the bail bonds in the cases of non-deportable aliens is being attacked by attorneys for the American Civil Liberties Union in a test case involving Ignatz Misher, a Russian.

Misher cannot be deported to Russia because the United States does not recognize the government of that country. In the meantime, the bail bond given for his appearance is being held by the government.

Proceedings have been brought against the Secretary of Labor and the Commissioner of Immigration at Ellis Island for the cancellation of the bond furnished by Isaac Storr and the return of the collateral security deposited with the bond. The United States attorney moved to dismiss the complaint as insufficient in law. Judge William Bondy of the U. S. District Court denied the motion. It now remains to be seen what the government will do as it is considered virtually impossible for them to find any of the allegations of the complaint. The government has been given until August 11 to answer and it will not be known exactly what the situation is until then.

Wisconsin State Labor Federation Reelects

WAUSAU, Wis., July 31 (FP)—The Wisconsin State Federation of Labor convention at Wausau reelected Pres. Henry Ohl, Jr., and Secy.-Treas. A. J. Handley for the coming year. The next convention will be held in Kenosha on July, 1928.

Asbestos Armor

The latest idea in putting out raging oil well fire is to swathe a workman in asbestos and send him into it to plant a charge of TNT, which is afterwards exploded by electricity, if it doesn't go off first and kill the workman. The idea is that the explosive will put out the fire, and save the oil, and if it snuffs out the worker too, ther care lots more workers.

Housing Scheme to Net Large Returns For Big Investors

Tammany's Board of Estimate, without a dissenting vote, passed its own plan for wholesale "remodeling" of east side slum property, by means of which the administration's favorites will be able to dispose of its valued property and receive high prices from the city treasury. All this will be done by means of condemnation proceedings soon to be initiated by the Walker bill. For purposes of camouflage this is known as a "housing plan."

After all these years Tammany has suddenly become aware of the congested and unsanitary state of affairs on Allen Street and vicinity. This sudden awareness is manifest in Walker's program presented to the Board of Estimate. It reads, "Whereas it is now generally recognized that congested and unsanitary housing conditions which exist in certain parts of the city of New York are a serious menace to the health, welfare and comfort of the people of the whole city:

"Whereas such conditions have arisen for the most part on those older portions of the city which are marked by dark, narrow streets and by the obsolescence of park, playground and other open spaces and so on

Safe Bet.

Under the new law which makes possible "excess condemnation" proceedings, Paul Block, August Heckscher and other capitalists will build new tenement properties.

Daily Worker Builders Make Successful Boat Trip to Michigan City

CHICAGO, July 31.—Three hundred real Fifty friends of The DAILY WORKER and the Young Worker took the boat trip to Michigan City Sunday, July 17th.

Comrade Ella Reeves Bloor and Hammerstein headed the procession from the boat to the park, carrying a large DAILY WORKER banner held followed by Gil Greenberg, his wife Lillian and a young army of Young Workers who insisted on singing the Red Flag in the vicinity of K. K. K.'s. The entire committee followed as usual.

So well-did some of our active comrades enjoy themselves that at least half a dozen said: "This is perfection why live longer after this the dodge" and so fitting their actions to their words, tried to end it all while in swimming at Michigan City. A few life savers, not knowing how our comrades felt about the matter, pulled them out in time to save a few "good" votes for the convention.

Modest Paul Reis refused to act as chairman, as after opening the meeting, by having the comrades sing the International, Sam Hammersmark had a chance to give Paul credit for the good works done by him, making the excursion a success and, after telling about the possibilities of a DAILY WORKER Builders' club, introduced Mother Ella Reeves Bloor, who gave a short but inspiring talk.

THOUSANDS GATHER IN SEVEN HUGE MEETINGS; POLICE ARE PROVOCATIVE

Thousands of workers flocked to seven great meetings scattered around New York Friday, in Manhattan, Brooklyn and Bronx. They wanted freedom for Sacco and Vanzetti and they loudly demonstrated that fact, cheering speakers who pointed to the frame-up of the two imprisoned labor leaders, their long martyrdom, the slowly accumulating mass of evidence that proves them innocent, and the trickery of those who pretend to be erring the law on them.

In ringing tones they applauded the two resolutions asserting their innocence and demanding liberty, one sent to Sacco and Vanzetti themselves, and one to Governor Fuller of Massachusetts.

The police did not break up these meetings, as they did the last one in Union Square, but they interfered in petty ways. First of all, no permit was issued the committee for a Union Square meeting.

Police Object To Banners.

In several of the meetings they shaved the crowd around, and insulted it. At Grand Street Extension, Williamsburg, they ordered some of the banners taken down, and refused to let anyone speak who was not on the original list.

But in spite of everything, the workers met, and heard their speakers, and adopted the following resolutions:

Demand On Governor Fuller.

To Governor Alvin T. Fuller, State House, Boston, Mass.:—We, in meeting assembled, pledge our solidarity with fellow-workers Sacco and Vanzetti, in their hunger strike which they enter because of the secrecy enveloping the investigation of their case by your committee. We demand a public investigation of the case, and call upon you, in the name of justice which America pride itself on, to give these two victims of a frame-up, a retrial or a public investigation.

We believe that the evidence presented at the trial of these two men did not prove their guilt, and that the American public should be given an opportunity to know the full facts through a public investigation.

(Signed) Rose Baron,
Acting Secretary of the Sacco-Vanzetti Emergency Committee

The following resolution was also adopted at all the meetings and sent directly to Sacco and Vanzetti.

"We hereby express our class solidarity with you in your protest against the secrecy enveloping the investigation of your case by the governor's committee, and pledge ourselves to do all in our power to bring pressure to bear upon the governor for a public investigation and retrial, because we are convinced of your innocence."

Police Fail to Stop Meeting

In spite of many attempts by the police to break it up, more than 1,500 workers attended the meeting at Grand St. Extension, Brooklyn.

When the meeting started two patrolman and several detectives who were present, pulled down four of the banners that were displayed, and made the committee take them down. The banners read, "Brosse the Hero" and "Down With Massachusetts Justice."

Another factor on the part of the police was to prevent any one from speaking who was not on the original list. They obtained a list from the chairman and made him strictly adhere to it.

The speakers were Pascal Grosgrove, Rebecca Gregit, J. Louis Engdahl, A. Bimba, Clarence Miller, Phelps De Faroe, M. Springfield, I. Dripps.

Want Freedom

Three thousand workers, cheering the speakers, enthusiastic and determined to fight for the release of Sacco and Vanzetti, crowded the two Prospect Ave. meetings. The meeting at Hopkinson and Pitkin Ave. was the largest. The speakers were loudly applauded when they hammered away on the theme that we will want justice, and nothing less than justice will be accepted. We want absolute freedom for Sacco and Vanzetti. They are innocent of every crime. They must be released for a crime, if it is being radicals whom the mill owners of Massachusetts want put out of the way.

The speakers at both these meetings were Pat Devine, Morris Lafl, Frank Cantarella, Hester A. Hicks, George Powers, C. Weissberg, Jo Petrelli, P. Patterson, John Pavlella and P. Martucci.

Big Harlem Gathering

The largest meeting ever in 110th St. and Fifth Ave. was last night. More than 1,500 were packed that lanicus corner listened eagerly as the speakers denounced the Massachusetts police power. Not a single disturb the meeting.

Nut Gangsters

Banners were carried by the assembled workers. One of them displayed the drawing appearing in The DAILY WORKER showing the electric chair, others demanded "Free Sacco and Vanzetti," "Sacco and Vanzetti Must Not Die," and still others had similar slogans.

"Sacco and Vanzetti are not gangsters." Juliet Stuart Poyntz held the crowd, to the accompaniment of loud cheers. "Sacco and Vanzetti are workers, and had the psychology of workers. The psychology of gangsters is a master class psychology, you find it especially down in

WITH AN ORGANIZED WILL, THE WORKING WOMEN CAN FORCE THE BOSSES TO ACCEPT UNION CONDITIONS

The strike of the two big firms, Pechter and Messinger has ended; but that does not mean that we baker women must sit down in our homes, return to our daily house work and become obedient slaves. I say so! This must not be, because the battle that we have carried on with Pechter and Messinger for the last two months have taught us baker women a great deal. Many of us have suffered under the hands of paid gangster and have also learned how to battle against the bosses, how to go in the picket lines and how to carry on the battle successfully.

Fiercer Fighters Than Men.

I want to illustrate a fact which the boss, Pechter, himself told. He said, "that when his workers had gone out on strike, he was sure that with our husbands he would soon be through"; but he forgot about the baker women. With the women the battle cannot get through quickly. They are great fighters, and to conquer such fighters you need iron strength. Pechter says that the women crippled his trade.

Before, Pechter thought that the women would only spoil his trade on the East Side. On the West Side he thought that we could not do anything to him. He forgot that here he had to do with women, who do not stop at any obstacle. The baker women of the Bronx proved it later into the West Side that they organized everywhere. When Pechter's drivers came there with gangsters they were surprised to see the baker women picketing.

Gangsters Can't Cow Women.

But gangsters do not help him. As soon as they dispersed one group, a new group appeared, a third and a fourth one. Pechter thought that this play was for the devil, and because of this he was forced to accept the union agreement, (even though everybody knows that the settlement is not satisfactory) and stop the strike. Pechter was forced to bow, because the women appeared everywhere to stop his scab work.

From this battle, which the women carried on against the baker bosses, Pechter and Messinger, it can be seen that the workingclass housewife plays a big role in the labor movement. Our baker women should remember that our battle has not yet ended. We must not throw away our weapons, because we have to battle many other Pechters and Messingers in our daily life. We women must conquer all exploiters, because we feel them the most.

Fight for Label.

At the annual conference of the United Workingclass Housewives, held on the twenty-fifth of June, a resolution was passed for carrying on agitation for the union label in Greater New York. In other words it means that union conditions must be accepted by all bakeries, where scabs are now employed.

There are many such bakeries. It is the duty of the baker women to carry on this struggle in the same spirit as it has been so far carried on. Because of this, we appeal to you, baker women to join the Baker Women's Council I of the Bronx. Every baker woman must help carry on the work.

Friday, the eighth of July a meeting was held by the baker women's council. How many baker women made it a duty to look up more women and interest them in the work so that they too would join the ranks of our council and further the work, so that our baker council should stand out bravely in the labor movement, like many other councils that exist today.

Women Must Rally.

In the name of the Baker Union, Local 500, we print a thanks to all women councils for their active part in the past bakery strike and we hope that they will continue their agitation for the union label. The boss, Gotthelf says, "that he does not need the union label," therefore, we women must see to it that he settles with the union.

Formerly his was a union-shop, therefore we must demand that our grocers do not keep Gottfried's scab bread in their stores. We trust that our work will be rewarded with success as at Pechter's and Messinger's. At first Pechter and Messinger were conceited and would not give in, but thanks to the public, who demanded union labeled bread, they were forced to settle with the union. We, women must organize in order to force the baker bosses to come across with the demands of the workers.

FROM now on the United States and England will build battleships against one another. England's historic policy has been one of enmity against her nearest commercial rival, which now is the United States. This is written in no jingoistic spirit but in recognition of facts. The British Empire is on the decline; American imperialism is in the upgrade. Wall Street is now doing in South America what Threeneedle Street was doing in Africa and the latter half a century ago. The United States is not obliged to seek a war with a big capitalist power because it holds the whining hand. If permitted to continue its depredations at the expense of the workers and colonial peoples it finds profitable to exploit, our eagle will evolve like a dove, but if interfered with Uncle Sam will frown and snarl as he used to back in 1917 and 1918 when he loaned almost the rape of another Belgium or French convent by the hordes of the Kaiser.

NOT unconnected with the Geneva naval conference, or the battle royal now being waged in the newspapers, in the foreign offices and in the oil markets of the world between the gigantic petroleum octopuses of England and the United States. There appears to be a division of opinion between the Standard Oil of New York and its big brother of New Jersey. The former is doing a land office business in Soviet oil while the New Jersey trust declares the stuff is "untouchable." This is the bunk. It may appear inexplicable to many that such a devout foe of the Soviet Union as Charles Evans Hughes should be the legal counsel who advised Standard Oil of New York that trading in "stolen" Russian oil was much more ethical than stealing it from our own naval oil reserves ex-Secretary and Sinclair dal. An honest dollar knows no father.

ITS oil monopoly is a powerful political weapon in the hands of the Government of the Soviet Union. The profit mongers are as thirsty for it as a dope fiend for a shot in the arm. They may rave about Bolshevism until dry in the mouth, but they crave for the naphtha over which the red flag flies. The British oil interests, that failed to secure a monopoly on exportable Russian oil are now raising their hands in holy horror over the action of the virtuous Standard Oil of New York in contracting to buy 100,000 tons a year of the stuff for its eastern markets. But John D. will continue to give dimes to promising youths and his son John D. Jr. will teach Sunday school even if the capitalist god may be angry because the dimes and the Sunday school subsidies may be begotten out of damned Soviet oil produced by the sanctimonious Johns. But as a good American I am ready to assert at any time that one cent or cost is good if not better than the British god, whether behind the cannon or the pulpit.

AMONG the lesser things that our readers should be interested in is the federal injury into the General Motors-Du Pont-Fisher Body merger. As reported over I stated for an investigation, my candidature for the job is the writer of this paragraph. I know how all the ins and outs are easily to be somewhere will permit. And a federal investigation of this giant merger would unfold a man-investigating himself. Henry Ford would like to have something to say in the probe, but—I doubt if his say would be decisive.

AND this brings us to a further consideration of the ups and downs of life and its uncertainties. Until last month Henry was having the time of his life building the fighting Hebrews, the most troublesome race on earth barring none. Suddenly he repented and pounded salt into his anti-Semitic sores until even a blackjack's hard heart would be touched with the wand of pity. Less sophisticated persons attributed Henry's change of heart to the awakening of his alleged social conscience or to political ambition. But General Motors was the reason. Hegley is now fighting for his life and Wall Street is out to make the defiant flivver magnate come wriggling on its knees to its financial portals with hat in hand, tears in his eyes and repentance in his heart. Ford is now fighting with his back to the wall and with a four billion dollar trust at his front.

FORD must spend millions of dollars to put his new model on the market. The General Motors' Chevrolet, sold at a price only a little above the rattling tin can known as a Ford, gave Henry something to think about besides the Hebrews and the czarist emigres who were milking him from his profusion. He probably spent in the vicinity of a million making peace with the wily Hebrews who sued him for libel. Now he has nothing to particularly worry him except Wall Street. But that is enough. Should the genius of the American automobile industry see a looking farina he may agree to sell out or join a rival Wall Street to the group that controls the most formidable industrial merger in American history. The struggle will prove much more exciting to our readers than the recent Dempsey-Sharkey fight.

Results of the Plenary Session of the Executive Committee of the Communist International Speech by Nikolai Bukharin.

And yet, in spite of the open challenge made to Comrade Trotzky, he has uttered no word on all these matters, and we are still in the dark as to what he thinks about "defeatism" and about all his former errors. According to Comrade Trotzky's conceptions, Bolshevism was "re-equipped" as early as the spring of 1917, and, having become "Trotzkyfied," it drew all its weapons from Trotzky's arsenal. Perhaps Comrade Trotzky advanced similar pretensions with regard to the war questions?

Here a definite answer is required. But this definite answer has not been given us.

More than this. We have been given no answer whatever, either definite or indefinite. And this in spite of the unusual energy shown by the comrades of the Opposition, who have let off innumerable quantities of essays, speeches, declarations, explanations, "unheld" speeches, etc., etc. for the benefit of the masses. They have placed on this occasion on record documents to the extent of about 500 pages. But in all this voluminous written matter no room has been found for the most important questions of all, no room for a reply to the most fundamental problems, no room for a spark of courage to acknowledge opportunist errors.

In place of this we find Comrade Trotzky touching upon one question only: the unreliability of the Anglo-Russian Committee. To Trotzky this appears to be the sole question worthy of attention, and his reply to it is all he considers necessary in connection with the war preparations! And these are the comrades who pretend to political farsightedness! I too must, however, devote a few words to this question. Everyone of us is able to understand that among the enormous arsenal of defensive weapons at the disposal of the International labor movement, the Anglo-Russian Committee is only one among many. There are other weapons than these in the Comintern, there is the Red Internationonl of Labor Unions, there are about 60 Communist Parties; there is the C. P. S. U., there is the dictatorship of the proletariat, the Soviet Union, there is the Chinese revolution, etc., etc. All these weapons must be mobilized against the danger of war.

But our comrades of the opposition ignore all these factors with the sole exception of the Anglo-Russian Committee, and have concentrated on this one question the whole of their eloquence, their temperament, their "indignation," their slanders, and the rest of virtues, with the object of persuading our foreign comrades that the C. P. S. U. has been acting the part of a traitor to the proletariat. It must also be observed that the tone adopted by the Opposition, and by Comrade Trotzky, at this meeting, has been extremely strange. Every word, and every second printed line, contains accusations of "treachery" of "unfaithfulness," of "crime," etc., hurled against the C. C. of our Party and against the Comintern, and this sympathy was speedily destroyed, and Tritzky aroused general indignation against himself.

This you may see from the resolutions passed on the attitude taken by the Opposition. The comrades of the Opposition advanced an urgent demand that the Anglo-Russian Committee should be dissolved. We replied that we must not delude ourselves that the British section of the Anglo-Russian Committee would help much during or before the war, but that in the given historical situation, under the given circumstances, it is better to avoid a rupture, because such a rupture would have made an extremely unfavorable impression in view of the various other "ruptures" which we have to record. The Opposition retorted what they said long ago, merely using stronger expressions: You are co-operating with the scoundrels who betrayed the General Strike, etc., and therefore you too are traitors to the working class!

The arguments brought forward here by the Opposition differ solely from their former arguments in being more "definite," more "decided," and more violent in their attacks on the leaders of our Party and on the Comintern. And yet it is obvious that the problem is not solved by designating both the "Left" and Right leaders of the General Council as opportunists, reformists, scabs, servants of imperialism, etc. These are sacred and entirely elementary truths. The question is, whether it would have been right to dissolve the Anglo-Russian Committee in the midst of an extremely difficult international situation. We are of the opinion that the situation obliged us to make a number of concessions. This did not by any means signify that our trade unions abandoned their right to criticize. The interview with Comrade Tomsky shortly after the Berlin Conference showed this plainly enough.

Those were the considerations (and not illusory considerations expecting active help) which led to our approval of the tactics pursued by the All-Russian Central Trade Union Council. This does not exclude the possibility that the leaders of the General Council may be induced by our attitude to betray us. The Anglo-Russian Committee themselves. This is not impossible. Our criticism is perfectly necessary. And the English workers will be fully able to realize that our action forces the traitorous leaders to unmask their own treachery, whether they name themselves Right or Left.

THINK OF THE SUSTAINING FUND AT EVERY MEETING!

Marx-Engels Institute in Moscow an Aid in Exposing the Renegades to Marxism

By J. LOUIS ENGDAHL.

THE last time that I had seen Edmund Peluso was at the congress of the German Social-Democratic Party in Germany, in 1910, at Magdeburg. We were both there as Socialist journalists.

This congress was the scene of the historic struggle between August Bebel and Ludwig Frank over the policies to be adopted by the German social-democracy on the eve of the then threatening world imperialist war.

Bebel had changed since 1870-71, when he joined Wilhelm Liebknecht, the father of Karl Liebknecht, in refusing to vote credits for Bismarck's war against France. In the midst of the thunder and lightning of the gathering war storm, Bebel joined with the defendants of the "vaterlandist" but he died before the murderous assault could get under way at 13 years ago.

Frank, on the other hand, one of the leaders of the ultra-revisionists, joined the hosts of the kaiser in the main in Belgium. He was one of the first to die "for the fatherland," in August, 1914.

It is over, but the thoughts, of a moment as I again met Edmund Peluso, after a lapse of 17 years, this time in the United Soviet Republic of U. S. S. R. Peluso had been in the Italian prisons of Italy. He had served two prison terms under Fascism, finally making his escape across the border. He was now in Moscow as one of the workers at the Marx-Engels Institute. It was thru Comrade Peluso that I became acquainted with the Marx-Engels Institute, living monument of the loyalty of Russia's workers and peasants to Marxism.

Peluso is now in charge of the section of "The Institute." Friedrich Engels was the General Secretary for Italy of the First International. He wrote many letters in Italian, with which he was familiar, also articles, which are of great value to the student of the correct estimation of the Italian situation, which holds good even today.

It was in the present period of the development of the new war against the Union of Soviet Republics that it becomes necessary for the Communist vanguard in all lands to show all workers that the Soviet Union is the real torchbearer of Marxism. It is necessary to show the social-democratic traitors, as in most of the countries of Europe, still exert considerable influence over masses of workers. This is true to a much lesser extent in the United States.

Alexander Trachtenberg, in his article on "The Marx-Engels Institute" in the November, 1926, issue of the Workers Monthly, showed how Eduard Bernstein, the German revisionist, had deliberately garbled Engel's Introduction to Marx' "Class Struggles in France, 1848-50." The object of this falsification was to create the impression that Engels had forsaken the path of revolutionary action, and had joined the reformist and pacifist camp.

Bernstein was placed in an excellent position to play this traitor role because he, with August Bebel, were made the executors of the literary heritage of Marx and Engels that had been placed under the guardianship of the German Social-Democratic Party following the death of the Engels in 1895.

Bernsteinism is typical of the perversion of Marxism that has been carried on ceaselessly by the social-democrats. Their energies in this direction were redoubled during the world war against the Soviet Union.

Kautsky, who is still one of the chief theoreticians of the Second (Socialist) International, had an article in the July 13th issue of Vorwaerts (Berlin), the official organ of the German Social-Democratic Party, in which he appeared as openly endorsing the attempts of counter-revolutionaries to foment uprisings against the workers' and peasant power in the Soviet Union, in the face of the threatening attack now being prepared by the imperialist powers.

It appears that this Marxist renegade, Kautsky, has been visited by emigre counter-revolutionists from Soviet Armenia. They sought his social-democratic opinion as to the possibility of Caucasian "counter-revolutionists" taking action in the event of an outbreak of hostilities between Great Britain and the Soviet Union. The doddering Kautsky, who is spending most of his declining days in Vienna, did not hesitate to give his encouragement to the Armenian traitors. He said:

"Contrary to the opinion of some of my comrades, I believe that it is very probable that the Bolshevik dictatorship will not give way in any other manner than to a formidable uprising of popular masses.

"I believe that it is false and dangerous to condemn such an uprising as counter-revolutionary."

He concludes by declaring that he would oppose any move "to call upon the social-democracy of the world to defend the Soviet Union."

Thus Kautsky, the renegade, descends to the level of the British imperialist agent who murdered the Soviet ambassador, Voikov, at Warsaw, Poland; he associates himself with the creature who threw two bombs, wounding scores in a Workers' Club in Leningrad; he becomes the ally of Chamberlain's protogeators who caused a railroad wreck near Minsk, that resulted in the death of the provincial head of the "G. P. U." and one other comrade; he also has his hand upon the incendiary torch that seeks to destroy factories and workshops within the Soviet Union so laboriously built by emancipated labor in Russia during the present period of reconstruction.

Concerning Kautsky's role in the present struggle, as revealed in his article in Vorwaerts, Pravda, the central organ of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union, points out that, in the face of the imminent war danger Kautsky has consented, to become the mouthpiece, to voice the wishes of the British reactionaries, especially when he alludes to the necessity of an uprising against the Soviet Power.

"This viewpoint of Kautsky," says the Pravda, "is the same viewpoint that is now held by the entire clique standing at the head of the German social-democracy. They are the 'heroes' of the Fourth of August, 1914, and are attempting to duplicate that role in the present and future.

"There are two tendencies taking place at the present time in the camp of the Second (Socialist) International. One of these tendencies is that of Otto Bauer, who stands for the defence of the Soviet Union, in words, and the other is that of Kautsky, who supports, in part, with the idea of an insurrection, to the reactionary aims of the imperialists and their allies against the Soviets. This is no more than a division of labor in the ranks of the social-democracy.

"The Kautskys and Hilferdings accept the phrases of Otto Bauer and the deeds of Kautsky. A united front, beginning with the British reactionaries (the Tories) on the one hand, down to the mensheviks, is being built. The social-democracy is preparing for its next August fourth."

In the quiet reading rooms and extensive libraries of the Marx-Engels Institute, at Moscow, however, there is being prepared material that is continually shattering in the minds of the workers of the world, the social-democratic illusions fostered there by the traitors of the Second (Socialist) International, by the Kautskys, the Bernsteins, as well as the Scheidemanns in Germany, and others of their breed in all capitalist countries.

Here revolutionists like Edmund Peluso are ever busy upon this intellectual battlefield. It was D. Riazanov, the head of the Marx-Engles who exposed Bernstein's effort to falsify Marxism. Their task, however, cannot be fulfilled without the energetic spreading of a knowledge of Marxism in every capitalist land, especially in the United States of America.

CO-OPERATIVES

CO-OPERATIVE COLONY FORCES UNIONIZATION OF ALL EMPLOYEES IN FIRMS SERVING THEM

By ESTHER LOWELL.
(Federated Press)

Cooperatives Force Unionization.

Unions where none were before have been formed because the United Workers Cooperative insists on union service in its new apartment house near Bronx Park, New York. Business from 300 cooperating workers or families—800 people—was attractive enough to a bus milk dealer and to a large steam laundry to win their recognition of unions among their workers as the despised of the cooperative.

In the eight stores in the apartment the cooperative will have union retail clerks. Its restaurant will be thoroughly unionized. The teachers in its school, just starting a summer session, will be members of their organization. Every working member of the colony must belong to the union of his trade or try to organize his shop if there is none. Women at home join the United Council of Workingclass Housewives and labor organization work.

Of course the cooperative can't force unionization of all concerns serving it. The telephone company and the subway system are not recognizing unions yet.

Fresh Air For Children.

Flowers boxes hold their blooms in the wide windows of the first and second apartments, now all occupied. Grass parkings edge the red brick buildings on the streetside and the inner courtyard shows signs of a bright garden planning. Later a statue will be erected in the center, with fountains surrounding it.

Babies and children of cooperators enjoy the advantages of fresh air and sunshine outdoors on the roof of every room of the 12 apartment buildings, forms of the cooperative's plan sometimes of the single room apartments have proved the most popular. The rooms are larger than in the usual housing apartments.

Already the second unit of the colony is being built by 100 per cent union labor. It will house 350 families—nearly 1000 persons. It has more 2 and 3-room apartments and fewer 4-room ones. Renting in the third block has won 40 families in the first month. The second of course is full.

Colony Governs Self.

The colony runs itself, subject only to the board of 25 directors of the United Workers Coop., its parent. The house committee is sub-divided for reception and information, sanitation, grievances, education, sport, management, and for Section K—furnished rooms. A cultural committee keeps colonists living up to the rules they make. The colonists assemble in their auditorium for business or for concerts, lectures or movies.

A store-school is working on the ground floor plot of the youngsters' playground, which will be adequately equipped. A gymnasium has been furnished in the light and airy basement of the first building. The stores are being finished modernly to sell groceries, delicatessen, meats, hardware, fruits and vegetables, and drugs and to handle hand laundry. Arrangements are being made with Vedre Long of the Cooperative League for cooperative wholesale buying with other league organizations.

Rates Reasonable.

The entering charge is between $13 and $14 per room a month. The initial investment is $250 per room. Each adult colonist is figured as a United Workers Coop. Consumers Finance Corp., a subsidiary, has floated a quarter million dollar 6 per cent gold bond issue in place of a second mortgage to finance further building. Workers throughout the country have bought the first mortgage, guaranteed by the established returns of the building, is held by Guaranty Trust.

Charles Nemeroff is manager of the apartments, Peter Rothenberg of the stores.

FARMERS

FARM BUSINESS IS GOING TO THE BOW-WOWS

By IRELAND OLDS (Federated Press).

While corporate profits were soaring to unprecedented heights the American farmer's income for the year 1926-27 fell below the unsatisfactory level of the previous year. His income was considerably below the amount necessary to maintain the self-sustaining farm unit and to yield a minimum return on his capital investment. This is the conclusion of a statement of agriculture and economics of the department of agriculture, based on figures compiled from reports of 1,600 cooperating farmers.

It is true that the gross farm income will fall off 5 per cent and net farm income more than 10 per cent as compared with 1925-26, the report says. The left the average farmer $600 to cover the labor of himself and family, interest on investment, depreciation and a return on his management and a return on his investment. Only about half of this $600 was in cash, the remainder being in products consumed on the farm.

Two-thirds to Parasites.

The report makes another fact that the farmers and landlords of the country leaders in interest a total of $1,742,000,000, nearly two-thirds of what the farmers received for their labor and capital they put into the operation of the farms.

The country's gross agricultural income for the year ended June 30, 1927 was $12,000,000,000, compared with $12,750,000,000 the preceding year. Such income from sales for 1926-27 is estimated at $8,649,000,000 after the value of food and fuel consumed on the farms is figured at $2,400,000,000. The cost of operation was $6,071,000,000 leaving a net income including food and fuel produced and consumed on the farm of $8,328,000,000.

Big Decline from Last Year.

In the report of the bureau of agricultural economics, which compiled the annual report, would appear as follows:

Income	1926-27	1923-26
Gross cash receipts	$8,649,000,000	$10,110,000,000
Food and fuel	2,328,000,000	2,568,000,000
Total income	10,977,000,000	$12,678,000,000
Expense
Hired labor wages	$1,740,000,000	$2,216,000,000
Cost of operating	3,331,000,000	3,076,000,000
Taxes	653,000,000	636,000,000
Rent	412,000,000	727,000,000
Interest	940,000,000	1,428,000,000
Total expenses	$7,071,000,000	$8,812,000,000
NET INCOME	$3,906,000,000	$3,858,000,000

The term "cash receipts" includes sums paid for labor and services of the farmer and family and management, and a return on investment. Only about half of this $600 was in cash, the remainder being in products consumed on the farm.

The Percentage Drop.

If the percentage drop in farm income as the return on the investment, as the capital investment, is considered, there is indicated a decrease in the return from that between January, 1927 and January, 1927, the value of agricultural capital was shrinking at the rate of $69,712,000,000 to the average.

HANDS OFF THE DAILY WORKER!

By JOSEPH R. BRODY.

CHICAGO, July 31.—At the annual meeting of the Workers (Communist) Party, in session here, the question of the DAILY WORKER will be discussed in connection with the situation facing the Communist Party. The DAILY WORKER is the only English language daily of the Communist movement in America. It is the recommendation of the Central Executive Committee that a special effort be made during the month of August to increase the circulation of the DAILY WORKER. Every party member is pledged to get at least one new subscriber to the DAILY WORKER during the month of August.

The Communist Party is the party of the working class. It is the party of the class struggles and of the class war prisoners. And the DAILY WORKER is the only English language daily Worker which thoroughly supports the Communist Party. It is the DAILY WORKER fights the battles of the working class, the Communist Party and the revolutionary labor leader and it fights for them every day in the year. It is the DAILY WORKER that is tirelessly battling for the freedom of Sacco and Vanzetti and all class war prisoners." And it is the DAILY WORKER which thoroughly supported the Communist Party in its fight against the Trotzkyite opposition.

This is the reason that the workers and friends of Labor: Hands Off The DAILY WORKER! For the organ of labor cannot die, but must live to continue the fight for the workers.

NICOLA SACCO asks: "Are you waiting to see them kill us first so that you can build us a monument?. . . You must not forget that the enemy does not fight fair, that it will stoop to any infamy and it already has. It isn't safe to be optimistic with such scoundrels to deal with. I only hope for a demonstration that will frighten them and prevent such a crime as they have done to us ever again being committed upon some one else."—WHAT IS YOUR ANSWER?

BISHOP William T. Manning of the protestant episcopal church of New York is using much of his time while in Paris deploring the general laxity in morals thruout the world. We doubt very much if the bishop's fulminations will make the boulevards less morally hazardous for the visiting rube from Hicksville as wicked but beautiful Paris as withstood the shock of many a clerical blast and should Manning be successful in his campaign against what brings the dough to the gay city on the Seine he might have the American Legion on his neck.

THE theological snout shooter, it is true, did not place all the blame for the wickedness rampant in the world on Paris. In fact, Manning attributes it to a plot hatched in Moscow and carried by agents to the farthermost corners of the earth. Perhaps it was a Moscow germ that bit King Benjamin of the House of David or implanted the virus of lasciviousness in the emotional bumps of thousands of Manning's coeleries whose animadversions make such good copy for harrassed city editors on dull Sundays.

WE are willing to bet a bale of Polish zlotys that the reverend mouth organ of imperialism was not so much concerned over the number of souls that might go to hell gladly as a result of following the path of pleasure as he was over the damage the existence of the Soviet Union is doing to the social order which fills his guts with food and covers his parasitic hide with the best of raiment in return for his services as inspector of religious dope into the brains of the workers. And in addition to the reverend gentleman's devotion to capitalism in general he has a soft spot in his heart for England in particular where his episcopal opium joint was bred and damned.

THE war between two of the Standard Oil babies and the British oil companies is going on merrily. This rivalry and the general commercial competition between the United States and Great Britain is chiefly responsible for the failure of the Geneva naval conference. The tone of moral indignation assumed by the British oil magnates is highly unusuning to the initiated. They accuse the Standard Oil company of New York of entering into an unprincipled alliance with the Soviet government for the sake of filthy lucre. Can anybody imagine a virtuous British capitalist pulsecring morality to profits?

IT so happens that the Royal Dutch Shell did his royal chandest to make an unprincipled alliance with the Soviet Union oil monopoly but failed. It wanted a monopoly on this "stolen oil" but could not make the grade. The British oil companies do not seem to be getting any more benefit out of the diplomatic break with the Soviet Union than the rest of British industry.

HEROIC ATTEMPT AT RESCUE MADE BY ZINC MINERS

NEWTON, N. J. Aug. 2.—One man is dead and another in grave danger; still another is sick in the hospital; all because the New Jersey Zinc Co. mines at Franklin insist on making their men go into the smoking places before the powder fumes are cleared away.

Harry Sheldon, a miner, was made sick by fumes following a blast and started to climb from the pit to the surface and from the fifth level to the fourth, but warned the men of the crews. When they reached the surface, they missed Sheldon.

Thereupon another laborer, Dick Cundy, took a rope and went down. He found Sheldon, but was himself overcome before he could drag him around obstructions.

Mike Kiski, another employee of the company, with three more men then went down and completed the work of rescue. Sheldon died soon, Cundy nearly died, and Kiski was ill, but expected to recover.

...pine Legislature Kicks at Paying Wood's Expense on Dakota Trip

MANILA, August 1. — Major General Wood's little trip to the summer White House in the Black Hills of Dakota to plead for another chance to "civilize 'em with a Krag," will not be paid for out of public moneys if the Insular House Committee on Appropriations has anything to say.

That body has just rejected on application by Wood's secretary that his "discretionary fund" of $15,000 be increased this year to $25,000, to cover an expected deficit brought about by Wood's voyage to America.

operatives, and the control would rest in the hands of official Washington, responsible to the big bankers. The role of the co-operatives would be limited to that of banks, borrowing money from government and individuals, and turning it over to the government controlled corporations for use in cornering the market.

What For Farmers?

The bill is shrewdly being criticized by such farmers as know of it, and who want to know what they would gain out of the financing of a new group of middlemen, with no provision either for higher prices to agriculturists for their products, or lower prices on goods the farmer has to buy.

The measure is being planned as a straight out administration bill—the first that has yet been offered.

Mechanism of Control.

Sponsors of the measure outline its purposes as follows:

1.—A federal farm board of three members to be appointed by the president and the secretary of agriculture. The board to "assist in stabilizing" farm products against excessive fluctuations much as the Federal Reserve Board influences interest rates and stabilization of financial conditions.

2.—Advisory councils consisting of seven members for each commodity would be selected by the board from names submitted by co-operative associations, to "help the farmer carry out a 'constructive' production program."

3.—"Stabilization."

Commodity stabilization corporations would be established by the board and in order to centralize control and responsibility, only one corporation would be established for each commodity unless the board should determine that more effective results could be secured by more than one.

The board of directors would consist of five members, three representing the co-operatives subscribing the capital stock and two to be named by the board to represent the public interest.

Loan Co-operatives.

Capital stock would be kept at a minimum to make governmental participation unnecessary and would be subscribed by co-operatives.

Opponents of the bill point to the fact that this the co-operatives have one majority on the boards of the corporations, there are advantages, for which, in return for loans from the "revolving fund" will vote with the board's representatives in directors' meetings.

SHOE OFFICIALS NOW IN ROLE OF STRIKEBREAKERS

Continue Union-Wrecking Campaign

Officials of the general office of the Shoe Workers Protective Union who have been waging a union-wrecking campaign against the organization in New York in a desperate effort to stifle all opposition before the election of the general president are now openly playing the role of strike-breakers. General Secretary Daniel J. Fitzgerald of Boston and one of the incompetent organizers of the New York district, Tom Kelly, have been visiting the employers who have agreements with Local 55, one of the locals having its charter revoked, and informing them that they do not have to observe any agreements with the local.

Urge Smashing Of Strike

There has been for some time a strike in progress against the Majestic Overgarter and Felt Slipper Co., 633 Broadway, New York, and the general secretary and Kelly, the organizer, visited the firm and told them the pickets had no right to be on the line and in other ways tried to discourage the strike. But the rank and file have rebuked this latest piece of irresponsible sentinery on the part of the general officials and the shop crew is solid behind the strike and is receiving aid from other members of the local.

Kelly Is Former Scab.

Tom Kelly, appointed organizer by General President John D. Nolan last winter is an ex-scab, having worked as a cutter during the period of the Wolnicket strike a few years ago. But the reactionaries will appoint any sort of rat so he plays their game of keeping them in office and fights against ry militant expression on the part of the membership.

to make any concessions. Bridgeman's reply was in the negative.

Bridgeman called today on the Japanese delegates and asked if they saw any sign of a possible agreement. The Japanese reply was in the negative.

Gibson's Speech Reads.

After this series of rebuffs, those who had hoped for some new development that might save the conference, admitted that the situation seemed hopeless and only await a formal end.

Hugh Gibson his already prepared the speech he will deliver at the end of the session and it is understood President Coolidge has approved it.

Japs Say Conference Is Over.

It was learned today that in the course of a private dinner yesterday Viscount Admiral Saito, chief Japanese delegate, told his colleagues that the conference had failed to fulfil its tents and purposes.

The reasons that the American delegation published the text of the suggested safeguard clause was stated today to be only for the purpose of showing to all countries what they were prepared to do.

Secretaries of the various delegations are meeting this afternoon to fix the date of the final plenary session, which will probably be Thursday.

Lloyd George Heard From

LONDON, Aug. 1.—A vigorous attack on the Baldwin government for permitting the Geneva conference "to be conducted to an inevitable finish," was delivered today by Lloyd George at the summer school in Cambridge.

"I hardly care to dwell on the possible effects of the failure to come to terms with the United States on a ship building programme," said the former premier. "I sincerely hope it will not be the beginning of a rivalry which will more and more alienate the two nations, upon whose good will, friendship and co-operation the peace of the world depends." Thus Lloyd George continues his old role of using peace issues for political effect and when in office shouting in the front ranks of the jingoes.

PICKET THE HEARST NEWSPAPERS!

UNDER the pretext of "fairness" and "impartiality" the Hearst newspapers of the country are indulging in the most loathesome apologies for the conspirators against the lives of Sacco and Vanzetti. So widespread is the belief that these two victims of capitalist class vengeance are innocent and so insistent is the demand for their liberation that not even the Hearst papers dare come out openly in favor of their death in the electric chair, so they conceal their hatred of the workers by declaring: (1)—That the condemned workers had a fair trial, "by due process of law." (2)—That Governor Fuller, because of the extraordinary demands for their liberation, is investigating the case himself. (3)—That his advisers, consisting of President Lowell of Harvard, Judge Robert Grant and President Stratton of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, are impartial, whereas the latter two are avowed enemies of Sacco and Vanzetti in particular and foreign-born workers in general. They have already publicly denounced these frame-up victims.

The local Hearst tabloid sheet, the Daily Mirror, asks: "What more impartial, brand and fair-minded survey of their case could Sacco and Vanzetti ask?"

If the investigation were fair, conducted by the "peers" of Sacco and Vanzetti there would have been a majority of labor men or women on the committee. But under such conditions the facts revealed by the investigation would come to light, instead of being suppressed as everyone knows they are suppressed by the present committee.

The excuse for this piece of murderous journalism was the brilliant letter that Sacco wrote to one of the supporters of the men who expressed almost childish optimism. Sacco declared that only the world-wide protests on the part of the working class will save them. That is absolutely correct. But the Hearst sheets, defending the enemies of Sacco and Vanzetti lectures Sacco on the impropriety of writing such a letter. Such an attitude gives aid to the executioners and reveals its authors as enemies of the working class and potential assassins because those who encourage Fuller and his prejudiced committee are equally guilty with them.

In defense of Sacco and Vanzetti and to prove the deep hatred intelligent workers feel for such malignant attacks against them the Hearst publications thruout the country should be picketed by masses of workers.

Boston Workers Demonstrate In Rain

In the most enthusiastic demonstration yet held here since the Sacco and Vanzetti case began, 10,000 workers assembled in the rain on Boston Common to protest the innocence of Sacco and Vanzetti. The meeting was held under the auspices of the Sacco and Vanzetti Defense Committee. Alfred H. Lewis presided while the speakers were Harry Canter, Workers Party; John Sclanos, Amalgamated Clothing Workers; Frank Foyle, Painters' Union; Mary Donovan and Jack Sonn, Sacco and Vanzetti Defense Committee. Judge Thayer and District Attorney Katzmann were attacked for their flagrant mismanagement of the case.

One demonstrator carried a placard on which was a quotation from John Adams asserting the right of every citizen to be tried by an impartial court, while underneath was Judge Thayer's alleged statement, "I will see those b——s get good and roasted."

Paris Workers Await Decision

PARIS, France, Aug. 1. Thousands of workers here and in other industrial districts are as fever heat as they await the decision of the governor of Massachusetts in the Sacco and Vanzetti case.

A protest strike to take place during the first week in August is being seriously considered. It is reported that Mme. Curie and the celebrated lawyer Torres may accompany Dreyfus to the United States in a final effort to save Sacco and Vanzetti from the clutches of the Massachusetts courts.

All the Paris papers today carried announcements that application must be for conclusion that Sacco and Vanzetti will not be electrocuted. This is a result of the failure of the French press to understand the real nature of the frameup. It is declared that Governor Fuller would not have dictated any committee had he intended to carry out the death sentence, whereas the committee was really put to work as a safety valve to fend off the increasing protest of world labor.

The case is arousing immense interest throughout Europe where the killing of the two victims would be regarded as one more indication of American hypocrisy.

LAKE PLACID, N. Y., Aug. 1.—At a meeting that completely filled the Bantist Church here today, Dr. Sidney E. The governor must give men and women a chance to study the complete testimony, Dr. Goldstein said.

Sacco and Vanzetti Meetings of Miners On Strike in Ohio

YORKVILLE, O., July 31. A series of Sacco and Vanzetti protest meetings in the Ohio Valley terminated here with a rousing meeting in the open air. Comrade J. Autar, was the speaker at the four meetings that were arranged, by the I. L. D. and which met with fine response among the miners and steel workers.

The following resolution was adopted at the three meetings, and also at Bellaire, where an indoor meeting was held:

We declare that these two men are being falsified to the electric chair on a shameful frame-up, because they dared to fight for the working class.

We declare that the evidence produced against them in Dedham court was so flimsy that not only workers but liberals, progressives and members of parliament in all parts of the world have protested. We declare that these two men have suffered torture for seven years and the only amend that Governor Fuller can make is immediately to set them free, so that they may again take their places in the ranks of the working class.

RANK AND FILE MINERS FORMING RELIEF GROUPS

Officials Would Allow Them to Starve

CHICAGO, Ill., Aug. 1. The need for relief among the striking miners of the soft coal region is so evident, says the Progressive Miners Committee in its first strike bulletin, issued at 423 Belden Ave., that the rank and file of the union is going ahead in some places to organize it, in spite of the passively hostile attitude of the administration of international President John Lewis, of the United Mine Workers of America.

Zeigler Men Help Themselves.

"For instance," says the strike bulletin, "the miners of the Zeigler, Illinois, sub-district, known thru the union coal region as the most militant section of the Miners' Union, have begun to assist their members by buying $50,000 worth of flour, bacon, potatoes and plum fruit preserves and distributing these to the fifteen thousand striking miners, with plans being made to give more assistance after this is gone.

"In other sections of Illinois scores of local unions and many hundreds of miners' families are demanding and are in need of financial assistance. The Indiana miners are calling committees to the larger cities for the purpose of collecting funds from other labor unions so that their families may be taken back home can carry on the strike. In Pennsylvania thirty-four striking local unions held a conference at which a permanent relief organization was formed and appeals sent to both President Green and the general labor movement for strike relief. Twelve box-car shipments of fifty thousand dollars' worth of foodstuffs were distributed to over fifteen thousand union miners in the Franklin and Jefferson counties in the last week.

Twelve Cars of Food.

"The food was dispensed through the various local unions affiliated with the sub-district organization. Long lines of miners with baskets and sacks lined up in front of the food ration stations on the days of the distribution of the provisions to receive their share of flour, lard, potatoes, beans and other plain food necessities.

"The provisions were purchased out of the funds that had been accumulated in the sub-district treasury. A militant fight had to be made in the sub-district convention by the progressive forces before expenditure of fields would give relief.

"The twelve box-car shipments by which the sub-district have arranged to make the strike in the coal fields a success are the first single strike the Miners' Union had paid for in combatting the operators who are trying to starve the miners into submission. They miner should demand that John L. Lewis, the national miners' relief committee and that a call be sent out to the entire labor movement to rally to the aid of the striking miners.

Demand Officials Act.

After calling attention to these facts of the miners in their own behalf, the strike bulletin goes on to say:

"These are only a few instances, similar conditions exist thruout the striking bituminous area. Yet why aren't John L. Lewis and the International officials considering this problem of getting the support of the American labor movement, when the striking mine workers have sent in many appeals to them for financial assistance? Proper and systematic strike relief can be provided for the striking miners if the resources of the Miners' Union and the aid of the organized labor is mobilized. The progressives and the militants in the Miners' Union must raise this question and force John L. Lewis and President Green to get the whole labor movement behind this life and death struggle in the Miners' Union.

"The setting up of a national relief committee, with a general appeal to the entire labor movement to aid us in our struggle, means the thousand organizers called into the anthracite weapon against us effectively. A militant and widespread campaign of strike relief will strengthen our ranks tremendously.

Politics Institute Learns Bankruptcy Of Pan-Americanism

WILLIAMSTOWN, Mass., Aug. 1. —As an agency of political co-operation, Pan-Americanism has proved incapable of realization, Prof. William R. Shepherd, of Columbia University, asserted today at the institute of politics here.

Apparent successes in adjusting international disputes regularly have been short lived, Shepherd continued, adding.

"On the other hand, failure has attended every effort of the United States to invoke cooperation with its southern neighbors for the settlement of internal difficulties in any of them, as

Needle Trade Defense

A Letter From Moishe, the Painter.

Dear Friends:

I am enclosing a check for $42 and have to how it obtained it. I was painting an Afro-Amer's apartment in Brooklyn. When I got through with the kitchen the lady discovered that the color would not match her furniture and became excited. So I thought that here was a good opportunity to make some extra money for the Defense. My proposition to her that I should repaint her furniture and that the money should go to the Defense was gladly accepted, for she loved to show that she was sympathetic to the prisoners. At the same time thinking that here was a good opportunity to exploit me at the expense of the Defense. I made all the necessary preparations to repaint the kitchen furniture accordingly. When I finished this job she wished up other work for me giving me one piece of work after another. Finally, when I was through she gave me $19. Although I told her that the work would cost $20. At this she commenced to scream and scold calling me a Left disturber and disrupter and that I was robbing her, and finally offered to give me another $2. Not wishing to leave her with the feeling of being a benefactress when she paid me $10 for $20 worth of work, I refused to take the other $2 and donated this amount out of my own pocket. So I am forwarding you the whole $42 which is amount that she would have given you anyway.

Fraternally yours, Moishe."

Dirigible Does Long Flight.

BELLEVILLE, Ill., Aug. 1. The army dirigible RS-1, largest semirigid aircraft in the world, returned to Scott Field here just before midnight completing a week's cruise which took it and its crew of 15 officers and men over Norfolk, Va., Buffalo and Cleveland. Maj. John T. Pargelow, commanding of the field who was in charge of the flight today said he was satisfied that the big ship had shown its reliability by passing through storms safely on the way here from Lakehurst, N. J., landing field. The RS-1 made no stops between Lakehurst and here.

LEAGUE COUNCIL DEMANDS VIENNA GUARDS DISBAND

Catholics and Socialists Bureaucrats Struggle

VIENNA, Aug. 1. The Ambassadors' Council is understood to have asked for the dissolution of the Viennese municipal guard, whose formation by the socialist mayor, Seitz, has been opposed bitterly by the non-socialist parties and by government.

The Ambassadors' Council holds that the municipal guard is in violation of the St. Germain treaty.

Socialists Legalize Municipal Guard.

The antagonism between the catholic bourgeois and the social democratic masses of the Vienna governments threatened to become an open split yesterday when the Vienna municipal council, in a session that lasted most of night, legally established the permanence of the municipal guard, the Burgerwache, created by the social democratic mayor, Karl Seitz, during the recent uprising.

This organization which is under the leadership of the social democrats has an enrollment of 1,000 which in case of necessity can easily be increased to 25,000 by calling out the civil employes.

Socialists Hope To Seize Government.

In the conservative papers this action of the social democrats is seen as an attempt to seize full power in Vienna in the interests of the social democratic bureaucracy by an appeal to arms if necessary. Kunschak, the leader of the opposition, during the course of the debate on the legitimizing measure, accused Seitz of "spiel-paring for a civil war" in an effort to secure the slipping allegiance of the workers who are becoming aware that the struggle is not there but in a fight between the catholic bourgeoisie and the social democrats for the possession of the Viennese government.

Catholic Peasantry Under Arms.

The prevailing catholic and conservative peasantry in the provinces are recruiting their opposition battalions whose number has almost doubled in the last fourteen days, and proclaim that they are ready to "undertake the defense of the law-abiding inhabitants" of Vienna.

The governor of Steiermark has forbidden a parade of the Schutzbund, the national republican defense organization of the social democrats in Graz.

CHINESE WORKERS BRAVE DEATH TO ATTEND HANKOW CONFERENCE; SOVIET SENDS AID

(By ANISE, Federated Press)

Soviet China Only Friend.

HANKOW, China, (By Mail).—It is not without reason that Chinese labor looks to the Soviet Union as to its guide and friend. In the first place the Soviet Union is the only country that pay any attention to Chinese labor. I sat in the great convention of the All-China Labor Federation, delegates from 2,500,000 organized workers. No one looking into the faces of that group could doubt that they represent power, intelligence and genuine aspiration of workers. Seldom have I seen a group as vital. There were smiling faces, serious faces, good-humored faces, and stern faces, faces active with youthful illusions, and faces which had faced all the troubles life offers and were still struggling on. All kinds of faces, but with one common element, a glowing, relentless determination.

Yet what foreign organization sent them greetings on this, the 4th annual congress, which many of these delegates have taken chances of death to attend? Was there any cable of congratulation from the American Federation of Labor? No. Yet they might with profit have sent a fraternal delegation. Did Amsterdam send a representative? The Chinese told me that 2 years ago when they asked for a commission to give advice, Amsterdam refused, "since there is no labor movement in China."

Lozowski Aids Chinese.

But the Russians had fraternal delegates. Very excellent ones, chosen with great care to be of utmost use in the present problems of Chinese labor. Russia sent Lozowski, head of the Red International of Labor Unions. She sent some of her highest representatives from the railway workers, the metal workers, the education workers,—the three unions most adapted to give advice in China's revolutionary situation since transport, munitions and propaganda are 3 major problems. Russia sent the chief secretary of the far eastern regional conference of trade unions, who from his post in Vladivostok has dealt successfully with organizing of Chinese, Korean and Japanese immigrants and knows oriental workers.

These Russians delegates, all able trade union workers who rose to their posts through the testing experience of revolutionary days, came prepared to spend several weeks in China. I saw the delegate from the metal workers in action at the Hanyang arsenal. He told the chairman and secretary of the Chinese union that one or two district heads everything they wished to know about the experience of Soviet metal workers in the revolution. Afterwards at a meeting of metal-workers delegates from all the unions in the district he gave them a talk on the metal workers of Russia.

Such is the work done by the Russian delegates of labor. They are not here as propagandists to influence China; they are here for friendly interchange of knowledge. They have the prestige of a successful revolution and a dictatorship in which they feel themselves dictators. The Chinese workers listen eagerly to their most technical discussions of tactics.

Yesterday I heard Andreichik of the Railway Workers of Russia explaining carefully to the delegates how they must regard their present temporary united front with the petty bourgeois, how they must "never be taken in by middle class ideas, but always remain the leaders with a definite program, a program in which, due to the present backwardness of China, certain specific concessions must be made to the small traders."

Lozowski On Revolution.

Lozowski gave the congress an hour's talk on the nature of revolution, the classes involved, the point at which counter revolution is most to be feared, the demands they must make of their revolutionary government. It was not oratory, but careful technical reasoning, a heavy speech in the midst of 3 hours of other speeches. He even ventured to criticize the revolutionary Hankow government for indecision in putting down the militarists of Hunan. I looked for some dissent; I saw none. Whether his diagnosis was correct or not, it was clear that to these Chinese workers, engulfed in the seething problems of revolution, he came as an outside voice of experience and authority, as a world figure offering them his comradeship and knowledge.

If other labor figures in the broad world of labor have comradeship and a better ideology to offer, why are they utterly silent about it?

Russian Workers Send Aid.

I saw also the spontaneous help offered by the local Russians in the drive for helping wounded soldiers. They collected swiftly among their own small numbers over $5000 as a beginning. They enmassed their personnel and found 4 doctors, whom they offered, to handle a ward of 200 patients. Such offers were made without any urging and other foreign group has been a splendid example of sympathy.

But the Russians, instead of demanding the right to handle the work in their own way and to spend their own funds as they chose as we Americans always do, offered the money direct to the Chinese Relief Council under Mrs. Sun Yat-Sen, and did not even ask an accounting.

In political, economic, labor or military planning, the Russians act as equal comrades, sharing an older experience.

Against the War Danger

The International of Ex-Servicemen and Its Fight Against Imperialist War

By HENRI BARBUSSE (Paris).

The entire activity of the International of Ex-Servicemen (I. A. C.) focusses at present in the fight against imperialist war, against the menace of the Soviet Union by the capitalist powers, and against the intervention of the colonial powers in China. This was most clearly and definitely expressed at the recent congress of the I. A. C. in Berlin, the most important resolutions passed on the occasion in question outlined this struggle and the tasks it involves. The bringing together the ex-servicemen in an association of international scope, of opposing a repetition of an imperialistic war and of preparing preventative measures in this connection.

The initiative for the foundation of the I. A. C. was given by a number of comrades of the French association of ex-servicemen, the A. R. A. C., among them Raymond Lefevre and myself. The A. R. A. C. itself had already been in existence since the beginning of 1917. In contradistinction to other associations of ex-combatants, then in the process of formation, it was based on a program which was not limited to material demands of the war-victims, cripples, and ex-combatants but rather set itself the task of organizing and conducting an opposition to militarism. Now was this opposition envisaged in its vague pacific form, but aimed at attacking not only the results but primarily the causes and roots of war which. These causes are of a social character and are inherent in the Valdorder of things; on the one side the ruling classes that delight in the profit by war, and on the other the suppressed classes that have to bear the brunt of the war and pay for it with their lives and fortunes.

Basis of Class War.

We have, therefore, from the very beginning been of the opinion that, both in the A. R. A. C. and in the I. A. C., our anti-militarism was a matter to be fought out on the basis of the class war and in its entire political significance. In France we were the first association of ex-servicemen to repudiate the formula of "political neutrality" adopted by other similar organizations. For we were fully aware that any such attitude would involve complete submission to the official policy of a maintenance of the capitalist, nationalistic, and imperialistic system.

International Fight.

The A. R. A. C. took occasion to declare, at its congress at Lyon in 1919, that the fight against militarism and imperialism must needs be carried on on an international scale. To this end the associations of ex-servicemen in other countries, whose statutes embodied similar principles to those of the A. R. A. C., were to be united in an international organization. The appeal of the A. R. A. C. met with general approval. In 1920 our first international congress was convoked at Geneva, and in the course of time we were joined by a number of associations in Germany, England, Italy, Austria, Belgium and so forth.

The Geneva congress of the I. A. C. resolved on a "charta," or constitutory program, which established that the fight against war is inseparable from the fight against capitalism. Since then, all the announcements of the I. A. C. have been inspired by the same spirit of the class war.

Organized United Front.

The associations which had joined the I. A. C. comprised members of various political parties, Communists, socialists, anarchists, etc. We were of the opinion that in spite of differences of standpoint it would be possible to organize a united antimilitarist action and to wage war against war at all costs in the sense already outlined. It was our desire to raise the lamentably forgetful masses by means of systematic agitation, to show them the economic consequences of war and the sanguinary fraud which the imperialistic policy of industrial and banking capitalism covers, to bring them to an understanding of the danger of new wars such as are being fomented by the bourgeois authorities in the world every day, to persuade them to resist any such attempt.

In this connection, however, we had no intention to take the place of any other organization already in existence, for it was, and is, our sole desire—parallel with such organizations as oppose the bourgeois system of militarism—to make our reputation and influence practically known and felt among the victims of and combatants in the imperialistic war of 1914-18 and all subsequent wars.

A Fighting Organization.

On various occasions, the I. A. C. has already performed an effective and rousing work of agitation; it has been the moving factor in various oppositional movements and revolts against the existing order.

Despite, or perhaps rather just on account of, our militant attitude, we have naturally from the very start been exposed within our own international organization to the more or less overt opposition of various national associations. They accuse the executive committee of the I. A. C. of being in tow of the Communist Party and the Communist International. We have not allowed ourselves to be deterred at all in our activity by these cheap "accusations," for it is well-known that there is no organizatory connection between the I. A. C. and the Comintern. True to our Geneva program, we have waged our antimilitarist fight in the proletarian and revolutionary spirit. This it came to pass that we were often acting hand in hand with the Communist parties, merely because we had common aims and employed common means to attain them. On the other hand, socialdemocratic organizations frequently refused to act in concert with us.

Had to Oppose Socialists.

The I. A. C. moreover, was often obliged to oppose certain acts and measures of the social-democratic ministries, as for instance, when it protested emphatically against the militarization law of Paul Boncour, even though they were clouked by the social-democratic fraction in parliament. War and is it not our duty to put our whole influence against colonial expeditions and against intervention in China, irrespective of the fact that social-democratic leaders have on occasion advocated such campaigns.

The social-democratic parties have most viewed our actions with great displeasure. They encourage certain unions of ex-combatants, on which they exercise a decisive influence, in their opposition to the leaders of the I. A. C. Thus it came about that at the Brussels conference the reformist Workers' and Peasants' Union of Militated War Victims in France (F. O. P.) seceded from our movement (The A. R. A. C. naturally remained within the ranks of the I. A. C.). In spite of the numerical loss suffered, the I. A. C. has in a certain sense been strengthened by the desertion in question, since the F. O. P. was at all times not so much a help as a hindrance. The Austrian association likewise left the I. A. C. some time ago). The F. O. P. attempted to carry with it the Belgian section of the I. A. C., but the congress of Belgian ex-combatants on July 10th will, it is to be hoped, have frustrated this treacherous act.

At the same time we may observe all the world over, in America as well as in France, that there is a tendency to strengthen the International of Ex-Servicemen, in the face of the ever renewed menace of war. Furthermore, the Russian union of ex-servicemen has joined us, a fact of no small importance.

Thus the International of Ex-Servicemen both can and will set itself with renewed force to fulfil the great tasks with which it is faced under the present highly fateful situation.

and the oil men could seize what they rashly exploit under the constitution of Queretaro which gives the subsoil products, oil, to the Mexican people.

It is only by an armed revolt that the church can hope to re-establish her hold over the Mexican people and seize again the lands which were confiscated by the religious acts of the Calles government. Catholic worship is not forbidden in Mexico, but mass can be celebrated only by permit of the government in government buildings, and the priests are required to register with the local authorities.

PORTLAND, Ore., Aug. 1. In line with its policy of agitation against the existing Mexican government, the catholic church will devote most of the discussions of the convention of the Knights of Columbus, which opens here Tuesday, to propaganda discrediting the Calles administration and favoring a return of the catholic dictatorship to Mexico. At the convention of the K. of C. last year in Chicago, resolutions were passed calling in veiled terms for American intervention. Special importance attaches to the actions of the catholic working against Mexico in the United States in the light of the forth-coming elections where two catholic candidates will make an effort to recall the reactionaries.

Nine Hundred Thousand New Members For the Defence Society

In the Ukraine.

In the Ukraine last week there was a great increase in the membership of the Defence society. Numerous demands were made at the All-Ukraine Soviet from neighbouring organizations for membership tickets for the Defence Society. The whole stock of tickets in hand locally (250,000) was exhausted.

Success Of the "Week" In Siberia.

The Defence Week is meeting with unusual success in Siberia. The number of members of the Defence Society (Aviakhim) is increasing everyday. Ninety per cent of the workers and employees in the various enterprises and factories joined the society. Women are being organized for Red Cross work.

Defence Week "Sunday."

The Defence Week is being carried out with great enthusiasm in the Dnepropetrovsk. In several enterprises "Sundays" are being held which are raising thousands of roubles for the defence fund. Thousands in the enterprises are joining the circles in connection with the Defence Society.

Power Saw Mills.

In Vladimir the building of a new power saw mills has been begun. All the latest technical improvements will be installed.

New Spinning Factory.

Shortly in Vladimir the construction of a new spinning factory for 100,000 spindles will be begun. Already a supply of building materials has been prepared.

Donetz Fuel.

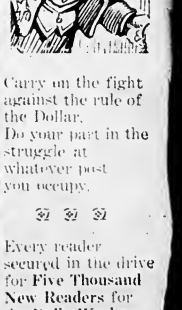
In the coal centres in the Don Basin, the output of the house coal and anthracite mines for the first 9 months of the current year equals 75.5 per cent of the output in the corresponding period last year and also more than the export of Donetz fuel in pre-war times.

Large-Scale Fish Enterprises.

At the hydro-station near Volkhovsky the erection of an elaborate factory in connection with the fisheries is in process.

Campaign For Reduction Of Prices

Generally speaking, the State and cooperative trading houses have complied with instructions in connection with reduction of prices by 10 per cent by the first of July.



The saving to the population from the reduction of prices for the period January 1st to October 1st is 230-250 million roubles. The reduction made in retail prices has resulted in a 9-11 per cent increase of real wages.

Unemployment.

In pre-war days Russia took first place amongst the European States in respect of child mortality. In 1911 the death rate amongst children up to one year oscillated between 242 to 35 per cent with a 26 per cent average. Since the October Revolution mother and child welfare has become the business of the State. Special institutes have been established for the protection and care of infants. The number of urban clinics in the U. S. S. R. has increased fully 1925, was 705 and in the R.S.F.S.R. 447.

The reports of clinic work in the bigger towns (Moscow, Leningrad, Rostov-on-Don, Samara) showed that it was possible to attend to 90 per cent of new born babies and that mortality amongst these children had been greatly reduced—the death rate in Moscow prior to the revolution was 26 per cent, it is now 13 per cent. In Rostov on Don it was 21.1 per cent now it is 10 per cent.

Shadow Boxing Against Trustification of War Industries.

Exceedingly laughable are the sombre speculations in the columns of the capitalist press regarding the attitude of the federal trade commission toward the recent colossal merger of the duPont Powder Trust, the General Motors, United States Steel and the chemical and dye trust. That this action is a violation of the letter of the Sherman anti-trust law no one can doubt, but the enforcement agency, the department of the government that is supposed to supervise combinations of industrial capital, has filled with loyal lackeys of the great combinations.

The federal trade commission has been systematically reorganized within the past decade to such an extent that it is merely an apologist for great mergers. Never before in the history of the world have combinations of capital developed at such a rapid pace as in America since the world war. Under the aegis of finance capital enormous mergers in industry and public utilities have taken place and all of them have been sanctioned by the government thru its federal trade commission.

To imagine for a moment that this latest and greatest of mergers will meet with the disapproval of the commission, is in dulging in fantasies. This is not an ordinary merger—it is a merger of war industries. The United States government, as the executive committee of the imperialists and big capitalists, is not going to interfere with the consolidation of the industries of the warmongers. Incidentally there is another industry that duPont is heavily interested in and that is the aircraft trust. Already General Motors is in a position to turn out the great motors for planes By a few changes that will enable it to reconstruct its plants from a "peace" basis to a war basis in a few days.

It is also noteworthy that these great trusts all maintain an aggressive anti-labor policy. There is no effective labor organization among any of them. They employ hundreds of thousands of semi-skilled and unskilled workers, among the lowest paid in the country, and the American Federation of Labor officialdom is doing nothing to organize them. The majority of these industrial slaves are foreign-born and denied even the privilege of the franchise in elections. Hand in hand with the enormous concentration of these industries grows the demand for registration of foreign-born workers and other means of regimentation so they can be held in subjection thru tyranny, thereby assuring subjection to the warmongers.

Certainly under such conditions the labor officialdom, if it served the interests of labor, instead of crawling in the most abject manner before the imperialist butchers, should launch a nation-wide drive for the organization of the millions of workers in these industries. Since we can expect nothing from them, it is strictly up to the left wing, the militants in the labor movement, to take the lead in an organizational drive that has the twofold objective of building up the labor movement and creating organizational machinery with which to wage an effective fight against the war danger.

Geneva and "International Ill-Will"

The Geneva conference hangs on apparently for but one reason, i. e. neither Great Britain nor America is willing to take the public blame for the failure to reach agreement and the formula which is to be given out as the reason for adjourning the conference, has not been agreed upon.

The Geneva conference has failed only in the sense that it has not been able to fool the masses into believing that the great powers sought to disarm or even limit armaments below the level which each nation desired for itself. Called by the American government, the Geneva conference was in the nature of a diplomatic offensive against its most powerful rival—Great Britain—and it has failed only by not being able to make as clear as American imperialists desired, the need for huge naval armaments.

A dispatch from Rapid City gives the view of Coolidge as follows:

"Even if it fails, as is believed almost certain, the Administration expects the conference to end without producing any international ill-will."

Had President Coolidge said "without producing any additional international ill-will," he would have been wrong, but his statement would have had some shadow of realism. The truth of the matter is that the Geneva conference was the result of "international ill-will" growing out of the world rivalry of the two great imperialist nations, with each seeking to appear as the innocent victim of the other.

The ending of the conference will not of itself create "international ill-will." But the conference has made clear to millions that Great Britain and America are fighting one another for world domination. The extent to which this conflict develops in tensity in the near future depends upon the course which the struggle for oil, for trade routes and for hegemony of the Pacific area will take.

The "international ill-will," the euphemistic phrase which the president uses to describe a life and death struggle for world power, was present at Geneva in a sharp form and the end of the conference will be simply one more milestone on the road to imperialist war and whose outbreak only the revolutionary action of the working class of the world can prevent.

The Question of Leadership in the Coal Miners' Strike

By WILLIAM F. DUNNE.

THE Boston Transcript, in a recent long editorial dealing with the coal mining situation, remarks:

"Since the first of April the strike of the union miners in the bituminous coal fields has been under way. Up to this time, it has been the strangest miners' strike on record. While it was in effect during three of the first six months of the year, the total production of soft coal from Jan. 1st to June 30th was larger by 5,000,000 tons than the production in the same period last year."

IT is indeed a strange strike of which one of the leading organs of capitalist reaction on the Atlantic seaboard can speak with such cynical assurance. The strike is under a leadership (John L. Lewis and his official family) whose loyalty to American institutions cannot be questioned, a loyalty which has been proved in the long campaign against Communists and left wingers which this leadership has waged.

THE strike then is a regular strike and lins not "been fomented by trouble-seeking elements"—the usual official excuse for the lack of efficiency of a strike—and it is to be assumed that the United Mine Workers of America are getting the full support of the American Federation of Labor and that the strike is being conducted in the "practical" manner which is the boast of American labor officialdom.

THE strike, however, is not stopping the production and the bosses are not worrying. It has been in progress for four months yet the capitalist press can report that a plentiful supply of coal is in sight and that the non-union mines of record can produce 50 per cent more tonnage than at present.

It is obvious that the "practical" methods of the official labor leadership are not getting results for the miners. It is no longer possible for the Lewis machine in the United Mine Workers of America to conceal its incompetency by hurling bromides at the "reds."

THE organization of the unorganized fields is the problem around which the whole question of policy and tactics in the miners' strike hinges. The Lewis machine cannot claim that it has not had this issue brought to its attention since it was the principal demand of the "Save the Union" slate headed by John Brophy in the last election. The machine, however, has failed to prepare in any way for the campaign with the result that after four months of striking the union miners see production increasing instead of decreasing.

THE Boston Transcript continues:

"Up to this time, there has been a demonstration of the ability of the country to get along without the help of the United Mine Workers. Not least in interest among the questions raised by this strike which the public has so largely forgotten, may relate to the future of that organization and the fate of the policies which it has pursued under the leadership of John L. Lewis. The fact remains that the American people are not in the mood that they are at the mercy of the union miners and mention of a coal strike does not throw them into a panic."

THIS then has been the result of the Lewis policies. The once powerful United Mine Workers of America, whose strikes have made labor history, under the Lewis leadership has become an organization which instead of being denounced by the capitalist press, has become an object of ridicule.

The Lewis machine makes no serious attempt to organize the non-union fields, it does not declare a genuine national strike and call upon all coal miners to join its struggle but it does make war upon the militant section of the membership.

INSTEAD of fighting the coal operators it fights those members who point to the danger the union faces and demand that the full strength of the union be thrown into an organization drive in the non-union fields.

The United Mine Workers will lose its strike and suffer a disastrous defeat which will have a devastating effect upon the whole labor movement unless it turns to fight in the way it did before the strangling grip of the Lewis machine was placed upon it.

AND here it is necessary to say a few words relative to the attitude of some of the progressive leaders—an attitude reflected in some sections of the rank and file. This attitude is that nothing can be done until the Lewis leadership, having ruined the union, has discredited itself to the point where it will collapse.

This attitude is extremely dangerous because it is based upon the theory that loss of the present strike is inevitable and that it will be possible to build the United Mine Workers of America up to its previous strength in a short time following the loss of the strike.

IN practice this attitude is translated into inactivity which plays into the hands of the Lewis machine and the coal operators. It is the exact reverse of what must be done if the United Mine Workers of America is not to become a shadow of its former self.

The militant elements of the Union Square marched to City Hall carrying banners. They were attacked and beaten by policemen. It did not matter that the procession was orderly. They were punished for daring to bring the plight of their fellow-workers dramatically to the attention of the masses. * * *

ARTHUR BRISBANE is a happy mortal. He is convinced that America—he means American imperialism—is just. Here is a gem from his famous and remunerative column: "We want nothing that belongs to anybody else and we don't let anybody take anything that belongs to us. Eventually we shall have a government that will approve of spending money wisely for defence and preparation, as well as of saving it unwisely for no reason in particular. Then everything will be O. K." How consoling.

OF course we don't want what the Nicaraguans have or the Filipinos or the Porto Ricans. Or the Haitians or the Mexicans or the Panamanians. Or the Chinese or the Cubans. We don't slaughter Latin Americans and Chinese when locals because we wish to rob them but for the same reason that Oliver Cromwell slaughtered the Irish. Cromwell killed to save souls. No doubt Wall Street has an equally altruistic motive. And as for allowing others to take what we have away from us, bis on that stuff Arthur. What do they think we are? Christians or somethin'? Yes, sir, we'll be O. K. when we have a government that will provide for hundreds of thousands of war planes that can rain death on those who rebel against our kindly ministrations. Had we had enough airplanes Arthur, those pesky Nicaraguans would have never rebelled. So you see war planes are not war planes after all. They are peace planes, but only when you have enough of them. This is enough of "Shubhead" for [illegible].

Mechanized Warfare

By WILLIAM PICKENS.

According to a recent press story, England and her inventors are planning to use fewer men and more mechanism in and machinery in war.

That's good news; instead of drafting so many human lives for war, we can then draft more iron and steel, and other hard goods and munitions. Battle "tanks" can be controlled by radio and sent toward the enemy's lines with no man aboard. Even the guns can be directed and fired by radio. And when the enemy blows up the tank, perhaps also by use of his man-less artillery, we will lose only a tank. The day will be won by the side whose tanks and other materials may last the longest. Airplanes, with no human flyer aboard, controlled by radio station somewhere on the ground, can be sent over the enemy's lines to drop deadly bombs into his territory. Perhaps we can get more "iron rails" and other officers to engage in the fighting, when the fighting can then be done from far back of the lines and out of reach of the enemy's guns, except such guns and bombs as the enemy might send forward as in the tanks and planes. Anyhow, I would take much fewer men to conduct a war, the generals, admirals and lieutenants of which is about sufficient. The war of machines could stay back at home and go to it until and to the mess.

One fellow has even invented a model of a battle-fleet which can be entirely controlled by radio, with no sailor or marine aboard! It can be steered, reversed, backward, in any direction, and it guns can be elevated, directed and fired. When such warships as that are put on the ocean, there will be some point in limiting naval armaments to certain maxima of tonnage, for the result of the war will depend chiefly upon who can last longest in explosives and floating steel. War will be reduced to its lowest and truest terms: the survival of the biggest.

But, won't it be fine to have naval battles without any men and land battles with nobody but the generals and other officers? Then, indeed, we shall not have to conscript men but only to conscript property. "Conscript" will then consist, not of lives, but of materials: the steel trust will have to supply its quota of steel; the munitions trust its quota of munitions; the water power trusts their quotas of electricity, etc. And whenever war thus attacks property as almost its only victims, war will become a crime, and will stop, or be stopped. When every casualty list begin to relate, not how many sons, brothers have been killed, but how many tons of the steel trust's steel, how many gallons of the oil trust's oil, and how many kilowatts of the power trust's electricity have been expended in the last great battle, there will be a different attitude toward war. For property is sacred. When the products of the "peace" can be converted instead of being sold on war, instead of their wasting to bring on a war for profits they will avoid a war as they would an all a commercial and financial panic.

Here's hoping that England and her sister will continue mechanized war methods to such a degree that there will be no more human slaughter but only property destruction, only "machine" and "CAUSE" of war will be always been goods. Why not let goods become the sole VICTIM of war?

If we can have mechanism and avoid men in all the fighting and "dying," then perhaps the chief horror of war will be shifted from the multitude to the millionaire, and instead of sacrificing millions of "doughboys," we will need to sacrifice only a few dozen "dough-men." A war that destroyed only the property of the rich, would do more to prevent war than would any treaty. As a peace-maker, we here may ultimately prove to be superior to religion.

is a fitting reply to the pacifists, socialists and liberals who have been protesting against the holding of demonstrations in favor of the two condemned men. The Communists have right along insisted that only the mass power of the workers exerted thru demonstrations and strikes would force the judicial killers of Massachusetts to halt the executioner's hand. Sacco mercilessly flays those who would put their faith in the capitalist hangmen. He scourges the present social system on the threshold of doom in language that scars and blisters. What a contrast between this revolutionary soul and the canting hypocrites who express implicit faith in the governor of Massachusetts, the tool of the New England capitalists?

IN last week's New Leader the Reverend Dr. Norman Thomas, once a preacher of the word of his particular christian god, now a preacher of the word of the great god Hillquit, writes: "I am a bit skeptical of the psychological effect of big demonstrations with the clanbe they give to the lunatic fringe during these days when the governor and his commission having finished their hearings are working on their separate decisions." The socialist Thomas is opposed to demonstrations lest they disturb the judicial spirit of the members of the governor's commission. The rebel Sacco has no faith in the justice of capitalist commissions. It's faith is in the working class.

Letters From Our Readers

About Blacking Streets.

Dear Sirs and Brothers:

Having read in the Worker the article "Garages Crowd Street, Chauffeur Bits Child," I want to congratulate you on the sharpness of your story. Even the garage owners' monthly magazine, "The Protective Review," which attacks sections of the workers, has frequently pointed to the police against the congestion of traffic in the streets. The City administration, especially the Mayor and his Commissioner, are responsible for this condition and for every death that is recorded.

Where we are at 124th St. and 8th Avenue, a butcher and market and Five and Ten Cent Stores and vaudeville-like garages have the street blocked all the time. But unless the wage earners pull together and protest, no lasting improvement can be had to change this condition. And to show how Labor is hated I have on my shelves four years of the Protective Review issued to over ten thousand garage owners and attacking the efforts of the workers who are struggling to organize. There many times when the workers what they have to do if they are to free themselves from the bosses. Thomas Foster, Garage Employers' Ass'n, Inc., 2001 8th Avenue, N. Y. C.

To The DAILY WORKER:

Just got through reading your paper and seeing where the good Mr. John F. Hylan the former mayor of the City of New York is taking a hand in the subway strike and has much to say. And criticising mayor Walker and is warning Mr. Walker, and this appointed police commissioner Warren, that the people of New York will not tolerate any police violence towards the striking subway workers; it is but enough to be compelled to strike for a living wage, but to have the police acting under orders from Warren—brutally clubbing peaceful strikers is a condition that the people of New York will not tolerate.

It was good enough in 1921 when the milkmen of New York went out on strike compelled to strike for a living wage—Mr. Hylan then mayor of New York also Mr. Copeland then Health Commissioner, and some of the tools of the capitalist who call themselves A. F. of L. told the workers the night before the strike at a meeting which was held at the Madison Square Garden to go home and go on a fishing trip and that they will get a big enough to be compelled to settle the strike for them, which resulted in having a policeman on every wagon. Not only did the policeman protect the rat, but acted as a rat himself by delivering the milk to the door; the result was the strike was lost as a company union was formed. Mr. Hylan is pulling enough wool over the workers and the people eyes to make it look like a tug of war. From a worker. M. Schwartz.

GREEK FURRIERS SEND LETTER TO WILLIAM GREEN

The Greek furriers have sent a letter to William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor pointing out how they have been organized in spite of his opposition.

The communication shows how as a result of Green calling the Greek workers guerillas, they have been arrested and mercilessly beaten up by the police. How since they have been organized, they have improved their working conditions.

The letter, in full, reads as follows:

Contents of Letter.

"The Executive Committee of the Greek Branch of the Joint Board Furriers' Union of Locals 1, 5, 10 and 15, deems this the proper time to call to your attention the tragic state of affairs now existing in the fur industry, subjecting thousands of workers and their families to untold suffering. We wish to state herewith that we hold you responsible for this present plight of the fur workers, and for the suffering that is yet in store for them in the future.

"To begin with, may we recall the fact that you officially branded the Greek fur workers as a band of sluggers and guerillas. As a result of this unwarranted accusation, when several Greek fur workers were arrested for their strike activities, they were mercilessly and brutally beaten up by the police. Yet in spite of this outrageous treatment, none of them was even accused of being a gangster. They had records as honest workers, and not as criminals as you charged.

Unjust Accusation.

"We vigorously protested against this unjust accusation at the time you made it—against the Greek fur workers who are honestly making a living from their hard labor in fur shops. It is now obvious to every Greek fur worker that in your campaign of slander against the Joint Board you were making a political foothall of the hundreds of Greek workers.

"Instead of the Greek workers being guilty of gangsterism, it was a group of professional thugs hired by the A. F. of L. Committee appointed by you who were found to have police records, who committed assaults with iron bars, blackjacks and knives upon peaceful picketing workers, who were arrested for merely killing workers and who acknowledged that they were hired for this work.

Honest Union Workers.

"The Greek fur workers have proven that they are honest union workers and that your accusations against them are criminal and false. No one can accuse the Greek workers of being sluggers; but everyone can now openly accuse Vice-president Matthew Woll of criminal activities against our union members and brand him as the one responsible for the hiring of gangsters.

"During the fifteen years existence of the furriers' union, neither the A. F. of L. nor the International officials made the slightest effort to organize the Greek fur workers. We were forced to work under the worst conditions imaginable; long hours for starvation wages. The Greek shops dates ena raise no fanciful issues since only the tellers will know the returns.

Appointment of a permanent committee to revise the federation's constitution will soon be made by President Harry W. Coll.

THINK OF THE SUSTAINING FUND AT EVERY MEETING!

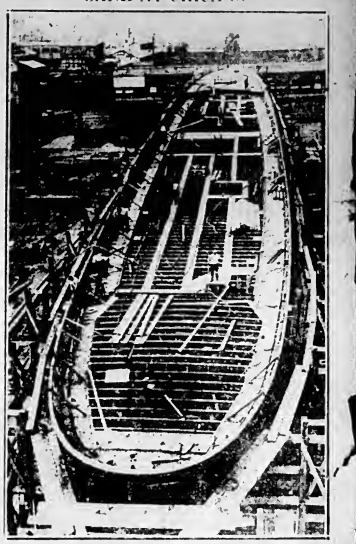
F. of L. their weekly per capita dues, but you did not in any way help us when we were starving. Why didn't you at least issue an appeal to the American workers to help us win our struggle against the fur manufacturers?

Force Secret Agreements.

"Yes, we did hear about you those days—when you attempted to force upon us your secret agreement with 42 hours instead of 40; and when your organizer Hugh Frayne, tried to smuggle thru this shameful secret agreement at the Carnegie Hall meeting where the workers so splendidly repudiated you. What a fine reputation you have gained among the fur workers. It was difficult for us to understand at that time why you, who were being paid from our hard-earned pennies, who were supposed to represent us, should be so interested in breaking our strike. Now we understand the situation more clearly. You wanted not to help the fur workers but to smash their union, to bring back the sweat-shop evil, piece-work, the speed-up system.

"The fur workers now mention your name and that of Matthew Woll with contempt. It is because of you that the workers face unemployment and starvation in the future.

See the Truth.



"The Greek fur workers see the truth clearly. They realize that when you say that you are fighting Communists, you are merely trying to cover up your own reprehensible policies. You stand now unmasked before the entire furriers' union and the whole labor movement. You will be steadily fought and your methods of intimidation and force will not succeed. The ranks of the furriers are being reunited. We are determined to maintain our rights and hold fast to those gains which without you we won and in spite of you we shall continue to hold fast."

RECOVERING BODIES FROM EXCURSION BOAT SUNK OFF CHICAGO

At least thirty-eight men, women and children were drowned when a loaded excursion boat, the "Favorite" turned over in Lake Michigan, a mile off shore. Most of the victims were workers or members of worker families, seeking a little coolness after torrid days in the mills and factories of Chicago. Investigation shows the boat overloaded, the life preservers too rotten to float, and many of them tied so tight they could not be pried loose from the railings.

Labor Federation Labors To Reform Ballot Confusion

CENTRALIA, Wash., August 1.—In an attempt to abolish conditions such as caused confusion and misunderstanding in the recent elections, the executive committee of the State Federation of Labor has issued special instructions to clarify every point in the ensuing election for president and vice-president.

According to the arrangements arrived at by the committee, the call for nominations will be issued in 10 days together with a document clearing up all doubtful points in balloting. Ballots will be mailed thirty days after so that the election can be held in November.

The convention finally reached a decision to vest final authority in the board of election tellers an that a repetition of the late controversy when the tellers passed the decision to the executive committee and the committee passed it back to the convention may be avoided.

A period of 15 days will intervene after the tellers tabulate the returns, so that any unionist who wishes may question the manner of the election and the supporters of losing candidates ena raise no fanciful issues since only the tellers will know the returns.

Appointment of a permanent committee to revise the federation's constitution will soon be made by President Harry W. Coll.

Building trades workers should prepare within a year to meet attacks on the wage standards they have won since the war. Signs are multiplying that the building boom will be let down sufficiently to provide the surplus labor that may be used to undermine union conditions. Bricklayers, carpenters, electrical workers, lathers, plasterers etc., may be the next victims after capital has satisfied with the once powerful wrecking breech of the A. F. of L.

The second half of 1928 sneers the building activity on the downgrade, according to reports received by W. Straus & Co. from 181 cities and towns. Building permits the first half year fell from $2,215,626,000 in 1926 to $2,004,686,979 in 1927, a drop of nearly 10 per cent. For June 1927 the figure was $431,270,008, compared with $411,984,500 in June 1926, a decline of 15 per cent.

From these official records, says the Straus report, it is apparent that operations are not quite up to the standards of the last 2 years. Among the larger cities it shows material decreases in building in New York, Detroit, Cleveland, Washington, St. Louis, Philadelphia, San Francisco, Los Angeles, Boston, Baltimore, Pittsburgh, Seattle and Houston. The 5-month total gained in Chicago, Minneapolis, Cincinnati, and Portland, but by June permits had fallen below 1926 in all except Milwaukee, Indianapolis, Newark and Minneapolis.

"Labor demand in the building trades for the coming months," says the report, "may be expected to be less, thus during the last 6 months of last year. While there are cross-mosaic demands for increased wages, labor generally seems inclined to accept present scales. If prices generally decline, wages in the building trades will be the last to be affected."

This outlook is confirmed in the monthly review of the American Land & Mortgage Co. which suggests that the peak of wages in the building industry has been reached and that some sections of the country may see slight recessions in labor costs during the next 6 months. It says:

Prepare to Resist Wage Demands.

"The upward swing of wages in the construction industry is gradually losing its momentum and there is little likelihood of any further substantial rise. Contractors are preparing to resist wage demands and are making every effort to prevent the building activity from declining. Reductions in wages are not expected in the near future."

Workers Ready to Fight.

The report point out that building activity continues sufficient to prevent any serious decline in the near future. It says:

"Further reductions are expected in the South and other sections of the country as the building activity expands here. Building costs are not expected to increase materially."

Workers Ready to Fight.

These facts bear out the statements of leaders in Akron, Buffalo, Fall, Dayton, Memphis, Milwaukee, New Haven, Portland, Maine, San Antonio, Seattle, Sioux City, Wichita Falls and other cities, that building labor is expected getting about the same or higher wages than in 1926. But in many cities demands for higher wages are meeting stiff resistance precipitating strikes. Some overstock of building labor is indicated in reports from Birmingham, Detroit, Philadelphia, Boston, San Francisco and Seattle.

Machinists' Local Denounces Green's Attack on Furriers

CLEVELAND, O., Aug. 1.—President Wm. F. Green's communication requesting local unions affiliated with the A. F. of L. not to give support to the New York Furriers' strike created a rising indignation here at the last meeting of the International Association of Machinists, Local 979. The indignation over the communication was defeated by the roar of Nons. The members of the local denounced the reactionary document, and after the speakers pointed out the heroic struggles of the New York furriers which resulted in the victory of the 40 hour agreement and other achievements. The speakers, many of whom are not even sympathizers of the Communist movement, defended the Communists' role in the furriers struggle. In the meantime the shameful betrayal of President Green & Co. and their shameful attempt to destroy every militancy in the American trade union movement met with general condemnation.

"I Wish We Had Plenty of Them"

"I don't know more about the New York furriers than what I have read in the local (Cleveland) papers," said one of the speakers, "but when one of their editorials describes the brutal attack of the New York police on the workers and when you notice a similar attack by President Green, Woll and Sigman, I say then something is wrong with President Green's attack on the militant leaders of the furriers union.

"Communist O. K."

"Brothers, remarked another machinist. Nobody can accuse me of being a Communist, for I learned a whole lot about them in the last few years. I learned that they are always fighting honestly and bravely for the interests of their fellow workers. I say the furriers' strike was one to prove that the Communists are O. K. They lead the strike to a victory when the A. F. of L. leaders were about to sell it out. I only wish we had many of these terrible Communists in every union, then we would perhaps accomplish something useful."

Almost every speaker denounced practices of President Green and his lackeys. Many of the betrayed struggles were recalled.

Marx-Engels Institute Invades New York in Its Hunt for Labor's Treasure

By J. LOUIS ENGDAHL.

THE Bolshevik Revolution in Russia has brought about a new kind of treasure hunt. It is being carried on by the Marx-Engels Institute at Moscow, U. S. S. R., and reaches into many parts of the world.

The hunt is for the literary treasures left behind by Karl Marx and Friedrich Engels. The writings of Marx and Engels were not appraised at their real worth until the workers came to power in Russia and the Soviet Government, thru special decree, established the Marx-Engels Institute. Research workers, under Communist direction, were assigned the task of unearthing these treasures and bringing them, in some form or other, to Moscow.

The hunt reached to New York City because during the 10-year period, 1852-62, Marx was a frequent contributor to the New York Tribune, edited by Horace Greely. Marx was deeply interested in the Civil War period in the United States, his letter to Abraham Lincoln, the Civil War president, being often quoted to show the attention that he paid to American developments.

The casual reader would conclude that there would be little difficulty in getting a set of the files of the New York Tribune for this period and clipping the articles by Marx from its pages. But it isn't so easy. In the first place, it was discovered that there is only one file of The Tribune for this period, and that is located in the New York library. An effort was made to purchase it. But this was one case where "Soviet Gold" was rejected.

The photographer, therefore, had to be resorted to, in order to make duplicates, or photostats, not of articles that could be easily found, but of whole pages, in duplicate size, because to reduce them would make the reading illegible.

There were other obstacles, however. The Tribune, with real American newspaper technique as one of its liabilities, did not always give Marx credit for his contributions.

Sometimes the articles would be given a date line and run as a news story. At other times the tired editorial writer would take one of the articles sent in by Marx, change the introduction a little, work over the conclusions reached, and make a first rate editorial out of it. Those were days in American journalism when editorials were famous for their length. So when the ship came in with its articles from Marx, who was at that time living in London, it was considered a big day, if not a holiday, for the editorial writer of The Tribune.

It is only by making a photo study of the contents of The Tribune, page by page, with a keen knowledge of the many characteristics of the style of writing used by Marx, that the literary treasure hunter is rewarded with any degree of success. That hunt is not being carried to its final conclusion here in New York. The photostats of thousands of the editorial and news pages of The Tribune were taken in New York and then forwarded to the Marx-Engels Institute in Moscow, where the hunt proceeds, conducted by experts in Marxism.

While in Moscow, I was shown thru the treasure chambers of the Marx-Engels Institute, where these and thousands of other photostats are being kept, in specially prepared vaults and cabinets, more carefully and richly than they treasured than the contents of the safety deposit vaults of New York's great financial institutions.

There are about 150 members of the staff of the Marx-Engels Institute. These include 30 librarians, 50 technicians and 10 scientific workers.

Two facts illustrate the thoroness with which the work proceeds. Here is to be found the marriage license of Karl Marx and Jenny von Westphalen. But here also are 45,000 titles on the Revolution of 1848 in Germany.

Attached to The Institute" is Abraham Deborin, the philosophical writer, all of whose writings on philosophy are based on the materialistic conception of history. He is one of the editors of "Under the Banner of Marxism." He is also one of the vice presidents of "The Institute."

The aim of the department of philosophy, headed by Deborin, is to give out the works of the German idealists, Hegel, Fichte, Schelling and Kant. The Kant section includes more than 700 titles; the Fichte section about 500 titles. Here are also sections devoted to the French materialists, Helvetius, Diderot and Holbach. The department of philosophy is also rich with literature pertaining to Descartes, Spinoza, Bacon, Hobbes, Locke and Leyden.

There is extensive material concerning England, "the classic land of capitalism," where Marx lived for a long time in London, and where his remains now lie buried. This material covers such subjects as the British labor movement in the 18th century, the struggle of Wat Tyler, the movements of the Lollards and the followers of Wycliff, the position of Jack Cade and others who protested against the exploitation of the workers. Every period in the British labor movement is covered with the same thoroness.

The American section is attached to the British division. It deals mostly with the Civil War period and the labor movement generally in this country.

This section will grow with the development of the Communist movement in America. The last request made of me by the comrades at "The Institute" was that two copies of every bit of Communist literature produced in America be sent to the Marx Engels Institute.

Results of the Plenary Session of the Executive Committee of the Communist International Speech by Nikolai Bukharin.

Finally, two further "proposals" were made by the Opposition in connection with the war danger. Both of these proposals are simply ridiculous. One of them was brought forward by Comrade Vuyovitch, with Trotzky's approval, the other by both Vuyovitch and Trotzky, and is repeated in their speeches, proclamations, etc. The first proposal is that under the given circumstances, and in view of the war danger, our orientation should be in the direction of the anarcho-syndicalist workers. The second proposal is that the group around Maslow, Ruth Fischer, should be readmitted into the Comintern and into the German Party.

A few words must first be devoted to the present anarcho-syndicalists. The anarcho-syndicalists count a total of 2%. For the most part these are "leaders" without an army. No great anarcho syndicalist organization exists anywhere, with the exception of the American I. W. W. It is characteristic that all anarcho syndicalist organizations still existing in Europe are evidently opposed to the Soviet Union, their ideology not differing in the very slightest degree from the Menshevist social revolutionary ideology. They hold the standpoint that the Bolsheviki have been guilty of threefold treason against international revolution, that our dictatorship is an anarchy, that our democracy is a fraud, and the proletariat; they negate against the Soviet Union with the most despicable methods, etc. Only the scare the allies to whom Trotzky and Vuyovitch would have us apply, that they may "defend" us. Complete and absolute nonsense!

We have not the slightest leaning towards an "orientation" in the direction of that counter-revolutionary petty bourgeoisie which is doing its utmost, from day to day, to compete with the leaders of the Social Democratic in the choice of the dirtiest weapons to be used against us. It might be expected that these anarcho-syndicalists are not linked up by the masses. This is the fact. In 1911 Trotzky rides accidentally against a few anarcho-syndicalists, and there he stays for a time. But now it is no longer 1911.

Comrades, the idea is perfectly ridiculous, completely nonsensical. And it is especially ridiculous at the present moment, when our chief task is to win over the average worker, especially the European average worker, who, like a terribly mangled lamb in the clutches of the Social Democratic parties and of the Amsterdam International. The attitude of the average worker after the Comintern fell with the head of Zinoviev, and this fact is a problem still confronts us today, more urgently than ever. To create a diversion with respect to the proletarian "mass" and to negotiate behind closed doors with the anarcho-syndicalists of the masses, by a slogan calling for the "reinstatement" of a few counter-revolutionary leaders! That is absurd.

As to Maslow, the proposal with regard to him and his group has aroused extreme indignation among the members of the Executive Committee. You will all recollect that the declaration of repentance made by the Opposition on 6. March last, and expressly stated by Comrade Zinoviev to be "most serious," one point was to assurance that the Opposition entirely gives up every connection with the group expelled from the Comintern, the names of Urbahns, Maslow, and others being given. I need here relate a few details of the position of these excluded members. They have their own newspaper, they have already converted this paper into a weekly, and are taking steps towards issuing it daily; they are taking steps towards the formation of a party of their own. There is no doubt whatever that they are in receipt of help from our Opposition, from whom they receive material about our Party life, even to reports on the sessions of the Political Bureau, and information on occurrences in this Bureau.

Steering their course in accordance with the political wind, they direct their attack at times directly against the Soviet Union itself, whilst at other times they adopt a milder tone towards the Union, and direct their efforts to violent attacks on our Party and the Comintern. On one occasion, for instance, they wrote that Stalin does not differ in the least from Noske (Disturbance). "I do not understand why you are surprised at that, it is nothing new.

Their newspaper, which has become the organ of our "Opposition" at the present time, dishes up every morsel of gossip or slander in circulation against our Party and the Comintern. These good people will presently arrive at a slogan of "Soviets without Communists." They have already published an article or war in which they state that, unless the present leaders of the Comintern change their political and organizatory course radically at the next moment, they will play the same role as the leaders of the Second International at the beginning of the great war. (The King of Communism," No. 123.)

This writes the Maslow pardoned by Hinderburg's Government, the Maslow who disgraced himself at his trial, about the Parties of the Comintern, and that at time when the Chinese Communists are being strangled, when the French Communists are being thrown into prison, when the Italian comrades are perishing in their dungeons, when the German Communists are organizing hundreds of thousands of workers in the struggle against war, when an incredible agitation is being carried on against the Social Fascists, when the entire capitalist world is conspiring together against the Comintern! And these hostile elements who seek to provoke in every dialogue themselves "orthodox Marxists," "Leninists," etc.! are proposed to us as saviours of the German Party.

Our policy in preparing for war, in all that concerns inner party questions, must consist in ensuring the strength and unity of inner relations in the Party, and of steering a definite course towards winning over the broad masses of the Social Democratic workers.

Our Parties are well aware that they will be plunged into situations in which they will be literally at stake if they are to remain true to the Comintern, and to protect with their own bodies the socialist fatherland of the workers, and this fact, and the thought of the imperialists. But instead of demanding that our ranks stand closer together than ever, instead of the "unity" slogan, Maslow negotiates and the winning over of the broad masses, the Opposition proposes that we admit any offal into our Party, including the anarcho-syndicalists, the more than suspicious Maslow, the "disciplined" Ruth Fischer, etc., and meanwhile we may forget the Social Democratic workers for the present. We are not in agreement in any single point with this standpoint; not a single comrade has said a word in favor of these "measures," with the exception of Comrade Vuyovitch, whose fractional interests make him Trotzky's supporter in all these attacks, sallies, and proposals. Not one single member of the Plenum is agreed with the readmission of Maslow and his group, or with the idea of turning our backs on the broad masses and starting on a search for a few idealists to help us to defend the Soviet Union.

QUAKE SHAKES INLAND CHINA

Many towns and cities in the province of Kansu, China, have been completely destroyed and casualties have been placed at 100,000 as the result of a great earthquake, May 23, in the interior, reports of which are just now reaching the coast. The map above shows the position of the province in the interior. At Liangchow 10,000 were reported killed. Other towns were reported completely destroyed by a moving mountain.

Some Early Labor Struggles

By W. J. White.

TO the student of modern unionism and the rise of the trade union, a study of the English union movement is indispensable. It was in England that the application of steam to automotive machinery was first applied. It was the application of the steam engine to machinery and the massing of the new proletarian labor in the factory, which first forced the combination of workers into trades unions, and this first took place in the factories of England. It was that country that this change in the base of production and a like change in the methods of distribution first forced upon the consciousness of the workers that the old methods which had done service in the days of feudalism were no longer fit to serve in the new conditions which had arisen out of these new methods which had come into existence with the introduction of the machine. This does not say that we must look upon those organizations which preceded the modern union slide by without entering into their history. Not by any means, on the contrary the student must give those organizations of labor which had their ure in the days of feudalism and before even that due attention of the most painstaking study. But for the purpose of this article it is enough if we take up and look into the reasons for their existence and the part played by the labor organization which arose after the application of machinery to production.

One of the first things which strikes us in our study of trades unionism is the transfer of the state power from the dominance of the feudal lord of the manor to the rising capitalist class, and the brutal use of this power in helping to keep down and strangle the protest of the workers. This brutality of the capitalist class is put in the pithy words of J. C. Calhoun, "the outstanding champion of the slave owning class in the United States, when he says: "the true solution of the contest of all time between labor and capital is that capital should own the labor of the feudal lord of the manor to the rising capitalist class, and the brutal use of this power in helping to keep down and strangle the protest of the workers. This brutality of the capitalist class is put in the pithy words of J. C. Calhoun, "the outstanding champion of the slave owning class in the United States, when he says: "the true solution of the contest of all time between labor and capital is that capital should own the labor of the feudal lord of the manor to the rising capitalist class, and the brutal use of this power in helping to keep down and strangle the protest of the workers. This brutality of the capitalist class is put in the pithy words of J. C. Calhoun, "the outstanding champion of the slave owning class in the United States, when he says: "the true solution of the contest of all time between labor and capital is that capital should own the labor" and "white or black." The reports of the law courts are filled with cases of workers being brot into court on the charge of conspiracy against their employers. The case of the "Six men of Dorset" is the outstanding one. Here the power of the state was called in by the masters to send into exile for seven years, to the penal colony of Van Diemans Land, agricultural workers who had protested against the reduction of their meagre wages from eleven shillings a week to the miserable sum of seven shillings. For this they were transported into penal slavery for seven years. Another leading case in the history of the trade union movement is the case of the Glasgow Spinners and their conviction by the courts, in which the student can trace the struggle which raged about Eighteen Hundred, for the right to meet and publish and speak for labor and unionism.

Marx in the first volume of Capital gave us one of the most tragic pictures of the struggle of the workers for the shorter day, and the right to existence. Engels' "Condition of the Working Class in 1844" in other book the student can turn to and study with profit on this struggle of the workers to establish themselves, for the protection of his class.

The journeymen tailors, silk weavers, woolen and cotton weavers, and boot weavers are among the first unions which we have any clear cut in the early days of unionism. They first appear in the history thru laws passed by the state, which were directed at combinations to examine into their wages and the hours they made of these "riotous and tumultuous clubs and societies" as these first combinations of workers were called by the new capitalist class. The effort of these and other of these embryonic mass combinations of workers. We find a law against conspiracy, used in the year 1818 applied in the case of a combination of cotton spinners in an attempt to raise wages. Leaders of this effort were sent to prison for twenty six days after effort to force the masters to give up more of the wealth produced by the spinners. In like manner the law of 1745, entitled the "Bill of Pains and Penalties" was applied to journeymen tailors and fustian workers who were held to include within its provisions all combinations of journeymen to keep up wages or reduce hours. The years 1717 and 1725 finds laws passed upon the statute books for the suppression of combinations among the Wood Combers and Weavers who had combined to keep up the rate of their pay. In 1738 we find that even the men and women who allowed workmen to meet in their houses, allowed workmen to meet in their houses, allowed anarcho-syndicalists, the more than suspicious Maslow, the "disciplined" Ruth Fischer, etc., and meanwhile we may forget the Social Democratic workers for the present. We are not in agreement in any single point with this standpoint; not a single comrade has said a word in favor of these "measures," with the exception of Comrade Vuyovitch, whose fractional interests make him Trotzky's supporter in all these attacks, sallies, and proposals. Not one single member of the Plenum is agreed with the readmission of Maslow and his group, or with the idea of turning our backs on the broad masses and starting on a search for a few idealists to help us to defend the Soviet Union.

What's What in Washington

PAN-AMERICAN UNION BEGINS TO FALTER; HATE FOR UNITED STATES IMPERIALISM GROWS

By HARVEY O'CONNOR.

WASHINGTON, (FP)—August 1, 1927—President Coolidge's most embarrassing foreign problem lies in the United States' delicate relations with Latin America. The approaching doom of Sacco and Vanzetti—whether in the electric chair or life imprisonment, the massacre of Ocotal and the extension of the Monroe Doctrine in ever more offensive manner are the three sore spots in Pan-American relations.

So deeply is Coolidge concerned by the growing tensity that he is thinking of attending the Pan-American congress in Havana next spring, marking the first time that an American president has officially visited a Latin American country. It is through the Pan-American Union and its expressed that the United States government and big business hope to extend their influence. While all nations are nominally equal in the Union, the overwhelming bulk of the United States against this score of small, weak Latin American nations make it a convenient instrument of American foreign policy. The Union's headquarters, naturally, are in Washington. Its imposing marble halls are mainly the result of U. S. and State government donations.

"Rate U. S. Capitalism."

The shifting of declamation running through the Latin American press from the Excelsior of Mexico City to the Prensa and Nacion of Buenos Aires, followed by desperate efforts of boycotts and the attempted destruction of United States monuments in Cuba and Argentina are to the quick testimonials to the failure of Kellogg to build up the sound of the Pan-American sentiment. Hopes for.

Pan-Americanism is decried, in the view of open-minded Americans who understand spanish and keep close tab on what happens among the "Hispanos" Instead, Latin Americans speak of "forging to the front with unprecedented Pan-Americanism in opposition too closely related to business, exports and United States gunboats to excite much admiration. The "good will" flight of the American aviators through every country south of the Rio Grande is a point in instance. In every city, according to reports reaching Washington, the expedition was greeted with formal politeness and sullen suspicion. What do they want to sell, was the query on Latin lips. Even the well organized press agents who preceded the flyers and demanded columns of space, failed to light the fires of euthusiasm.

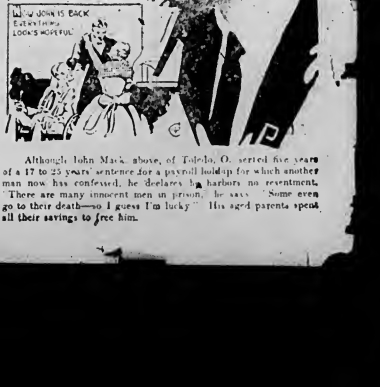
Ties With Europe.

The whole structure of Pan-Americanism rests on geographical proximity of the American nations. But Latin America not only has closer racial, religious, linguistic and cultural ties with southern Europe, but it sure a near southern European ports, by steamer days, as it is to New York. Nevertheless trade continues to grow, and the North American sales, who think only in terms of exports and imports, rub their hands with glee, assuring themselves that good will follow trade. Probably this time not heard of the old Venetian custom who pray in church but the oil wells may dry up so that the American exploiters will leave.

Who will lead the Latin-American movement against "Yankee rule"? No country has yet had the courage to defy Washington and its Pan-American Union. But Washington's own fellow Latin American affairs clearly predict that within 10 years either Mexico or Argentina will have taken the lead in massing the forces of South and Central America around the Indo-latin banner. The murder of Sacco and Vanzetti, the bombing of a few more Nicaraguan villages, the ruthless invasion of more Caribbean nations and their reduction to more colonies, and the Yankees may face Latin America's second war of liberation—this time against American rather than Spanish Imperialism.

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION NOW MOVING TO INAUGURATE WIDE-SCALE PRICE FIXING

WASHINGTON, (FP)—Signs of a price fixing movement in many troubled industries such as textiles, can stabilize prices and eat business profit chaos under reactionary control, is to go hand in hand with the consumers paying the way, for the legalization of the "open price" plan, was the president's message to congress. Hoover, fear that industry may lose its incentive to progress if prices dictate a broad investigation into fixing, paralyzing competition, is preparing the way toward legalized, recommending changes in the law.



The commission is going on its own accord, it declares, but the report to congress is manifestly a plea for the "open price" plan, which approved of price-fixing, would lead to the stagnation of all industry. The law now in force prevents price fixing by making the price lists of which retailers shall sell their goods.

Formerly the trade commission "corrupted" wrongful use and misuse of Federal power, but within the whole last year the commission has past year since the inactionaries gained control, prosecution has practically ceased. In some cases firms have refused to quit price-fixing if no publicity were given their illegal practices.

A Compulsory Trustifying.

Around price-fixing races one of the keenest controversies in the business world. The majority of manufacturers declare it absolutely necessary, with the growing over-expansion of plant facilities, if they are to make any money at all. Left to themselves, manufacturers will indulge in ruinous cutthroat competition, demoralizing industry, they claim. But if allowed through trade associations to lay as such.

SENT TO PRISON BY MISTAKE

Although John Mack, above, of Toledo, O. served five years of a 17 to 25 years' sentence for a payroll holdup for which another man now has confessed, he declares he harbors no resentment.

There are many innocent men in prison, he says. Some even go to their death—so I guess I'm lucky." His aged parents spent all their savings to free him.

Resolution of the Comintern on the American Question

Endorsed by the Presidium of Executive Committee of the Communist International, July 1, 1927.

1. The Struggle Against Imperialism and the War Danger.

THE United States of America, during the last decades, has developed into the mightiest imperialist power. In the technique and system of economy it has outstripped Great Britain, particularly during the war and post-war periods. It is also contesting to an ever-greater degree the leading political role of Great Britain.

The aggressiveness of American imperialism assumes in a number of cases different, tho no less dangerous forms from those of British imperialism.

The task of the Workers (Communist) Party is to form a broad united front and to intensify the struggle against American imperialism. The policy of the United States in China (Nanking), Mexico, Central and South America and American oppression of its colonies, form a basis for mobilizing and uniting all the anti-imperialist forces on a broader scale. Within this broad united front the Party must strive to establish the leading role of the proletarian elements and combat the liberal illusions about the peaceful role of American imperialism, thus creating the prerequisite for the revolutionary struggle.

IN the present stage of the world situation, the preparations for war against the Soviet Union and the imperialist menace to the Chinese revolution constitute the greatest danger for the working class. British imperialism plays a leading role in these war preparations. At the same time the attitude of the United States towards these conflicts (China), the speeches of its official spokesmen against the Soviet Union (Ambassador Herrick (Paris), its loans to Poland, Finland, etc., show that America is not play a passive role.

Despite all its antagonisms with Great Britain, the United States undertakes, to an increasing extent, to back, thru open and covert collaboration, the British war preparations against the Union of Socialist Soviet Republics in order, undoubtedly at the decisive moment to support actively Great Britain's war policy while at the same time it continues to strive for world hegemony.

The absolutely necessary struggle against Great Britain's plans to wage war on the Soviet Union and the imperialist intervention in China must therefore always be linked up by the Workers (Communist) Party with the mobilization of the masses for the most energetic fight against the specific role of American imperialism.

COOLIDGE DRIVEN OUT OF RACE FOR PRESIDENCY IN 1928 ON G. O. P. TICKET

Politician Who Rose to Fame Thru Breaking Policemen's Strike Now Cast Aside

RAPID CITY, S. D., Aug. 2.—Calvin Coolidge will not be a candidate to succeed himself in 1928.

The president in a few words typewritten on sheets of flimsy paper handed to the reporters renounced all claim to the republican party nomination for president and turned loose scores of presidential bees that have been held in check by their owners pending a decision by the canny occupant of the White House.

The words that were sent racing over the wires are: "I do not choose to run for president in 1928."

As soon as the pieces of paper were in the hands of the reporters the president waved them out of his office.

"A perfectly good cowboy suit was wasted on Mr. Coolidge" was the cautious comment of a local man who expected a post office should the president make the White House again.

It Was A Big Story.

There had been no advance information that the president intended to make [illegible] noon, to make the most momentous announcement of his political life. At the regular Tuesday conference, his statement would have to do with the impending failure of the naval conference at Geneva.

Commemorate the Anniversary of the Last World War Guard the Daily Worker Struggle Against a New World War

AUGUST 1 to 6 we have set aside as Anti-War Week, as the Fight Against a New World War Week. We ask our comrades to pay a proletarian tribute, a revolutionary tribute to those who fell in the last world slaughter. No more fitting tribute for this occasion could be devised than a contribution to the GUARD THE DAILY WORKER FUND, to the fund for the protection of the paper, which is dedicated to the fight against a new imperialist blood bath.

Unless this support is forthcoming, the path of the war-mongers will be free for their nefarious work. No voice of opposition will be there to speak plainly and militantly to the workers of America, to warn them of the approaching danger, to rally them for the fight against it. It is the lesson of the last World War has been brought home to you, then you must give clear evidence of that fact, by giving your utmost to the GUARD THE DAILY WORKER FUND. Use your certificate book and get other workers to do the same.

PHILADELPHIA WORKERS TO STRIKE FOR SACCO AND VANZETTI TODAY AT FOUR AND HOLD MASS MEETING

A call for a strike of Philadelphia workers to take place at four o'clock this (Wednesday) afternoon has been issued by the Italian Sacco and Vanzetti conference in collaboration with the International Labor Defense Sacco and Vanzetti conference.

Under the heading "Philadelphia workers must strike at 4 p. m. today for Sacco and Vanzetti" a call has been issued to all affiliated organizations, labor unions, fraternal societies, and so forth and for the sympathizers with the victims of the Massachusetts frame-up to lay down their tools at that hour and join the strike that has been called by the trade union committee. After leaving their shops and factories the workers will go to Broad and Bigler streets where they will be addressed by prominent speakers.

A big labor conference has also been called for Friday evening, August 5th, at Machinists' Temple, 13th and Spring Garden streets. All organizations are asked to send delegates to consider ways and means of taking action to free Sacco and Vanzetti.

Passaic Holds Vanzetti-Sacco Meeting Tonight

PASSAIC, N. J., August 2. — A Sacco-Vanzetti protest meeting will be held here Wednesday evening at Helment Park. It has been arranged by the District Council of the United Textile Workers Union. The speakers will include Anthony Ragmulia and several others.

The Central Labor Council here has unanimously sent a resolution to Gov. Fuller demanding justice for Sacco and Vanzetti.

BOSTON, Aug. 2.—That Bartolomeo Vanzetti was selling eels at Plymouth at the time of the Bridgewater hold-up was substantiated by another important piece of evidence produced by the Sacco-Vanzetti Defense Committee this evening in the form of an American Express Company receipt showing the delivery of a barrel of eels to Vanzetti on December 24, 1919, the day of the crime.

This sensational evidence which was suppressed by Attorney Dahey, who double-crossed Vanzetti, was produced by the Defense Committee as a reply to Governor Fuller's demand for evidence.

Approval For One of Three Alternatives

BOSTON, Mass., Aug. 2.—The Executive Council meets tomorrow noon. State House observers said that if the council meets, receives no communication from the governor and leaves for their homes the doom of the two workers will be sealed. However, if the council is held awaiting the decision, the conclusion would be that the governor had decided either for a further respite, a commutation of sentence or a pardon, as approval by the council of all three alternatives is necessary under the law.

Much speculation was in the air today regarding the hurried and unexpected visit to the State House Monday night of Judge Webster Thayer, who presided over the trial of Sacco and Vanzetti when the two were accused of slaying a South Braintree paymaster and his guard. Judge Thayer was summoned from his summer home at Ogunquit, Me., by Fuller and he came by motor escorted by a state trooper.

Sacco and Vanzetti remained in the Cherry Hill section of state's prison today, not having been transferred to the death cells. Celestino Madeiros, under respite, was scheduled to die on August 10th, the date of the two Sacco-Vanzetti execution.

Posters have been distributed in ten languages, announcing that it is illegal for citizens of Massachusetts to own machine guns.

Current Events

By T. J. O'FLAHERTY.

MR. JOHN H. WALKER, president of the Illinois State Federation of Labor is satisfied with the way labor is moving in that state. In a recent issue of his Weekly News Letter, John, whose eyes are wont to drip on the slightest provocation, whether it be a reflection on his political virtue or some left wing criticism of his reactionary policies, published a report he made to William Green on what happened in the legislature during the last session. It is entitled: "Progress in Legislation".

AMONG the "successes" mentioned by the tearful one are the following: The Women's Right Bill was passed in the senate but failed of passage in the house. The same misfortune befell the Old Age Pension Bill. The Yellow Dog Contract Bill had a can tied to its tail and the canine fled the house before the labor leaders could put a muzzle on it. The One Day Rest in Seven Bill failed of enactment. A bill designed to hamper the sale of prison made goods fell by the wayside. The Firemen's Pension Law Amendment, also supported by the labor leaders was another casualty.

SO far we are only half way down the first column of Mr. Walker's report and his progress is a chapter of successive disasters. In fact in the entire report the only bill that was defeated by the use of the famous non-partisan weapon of the labor fakers was a sterilization bill. It is doubtful however if the labor skates should be given the entire credit for this victory. Illinois is a rather tough state and this would be a dangerous weapon in the hands of a political enemy. We can imagine how the number of eunuchs in the ranks of the republicans would increase should the democrats win. John H. Walker is not the only politician who does not care to qualify for a job as bellboy in a harem.

HOW the unemployment problem can be solved under capitalism is suggested in a part of Mr. Walker's report. "We also endorsed the Gasoline Tax Bill" says John, "that was enacted which will result in a good many thousands of men being put to work making material and hard

DEMONSTRATE AGAINST THE WAR

A mass meeting to protest against the impending imperialist war against the Soviet Union will be held in Union Square Thursday evening, August 4th. Thursday is the thirteenth anniversary of the world war.

"Despite all the bloodshed of the last world war," declares a statement from the Workers (Communist) Party, under whose auspices the meeting is being held, "new preparations are already on the way, on a more elaborate scale than before the great war of 1914, for a conflict with the Soviet Union and for new conflicts between the imperialist powers. At the Geneva conference which is taking place, the American and British nations talked not disarmament but more and greater armaments."

The meeting will not only protest against the increase of armaments in preparation for a general offensive against the Soviet Union, but will protest against the maintenance of American troops in China.

Among the speakers will be J. Louis Engdahl, William F. Dunne, Bertram D. Wolfe, William W. Weinstone, Moissaye J. Olgin, Ben Gold and Rebecca Grecht.

CALL OUT POLICE WHEN MINERS GET SCABS TO STRIKE

AVELLA, Pa., Aug. 2.—Tear gas bombs, guns, "yellow dogs," sheriff's proclamations restricting picketing—all this has awakened this little mining town, where quiet reigned since April 1st, when the mines were shut down.

Last Wednesday, July 28th, the train of the Pittsburgh and W. Va. Railroad stopped at 12.40 in the afternoon on a siding of the Duquesne Coal and Coke Company and unloaded eleven strikebreakers.

Eight guards of the company or as miners call them, "yellow dogs" with machine guns and tear-gas bombs ac-

GREAT STRIKE AT HANKOW AGAINST RULERS' CRUELTY

HANKOW, Aug. 2.—Under orders of the military authorities the Wuhan troops yesterday shot into a demonstration of workers. Thousands of workers had organized a demonstration in front of the Chinese Chamber of Commerce to protest against the suspension of the unemployment delegates. This infuriated the agents of the big capitalists and imperialists so the troops were ordered to shoot into the crowd. The result was that four were killed on the spot and scores wounded. Seven thousand workers have declared a strike as a protest against these shootings.

Million Workers on the Soviet Railroads Have Powerful Trade Union

Alexei Andreyev, general secretary of the Railroad men Union of the Union of Socialist Soviet Republics, gives in these [illegible] columns of THE DAILY WORKER, who [illegible] the Soviet Union, a list of answers to questions concerning the organization of the railroad workers of the U. S. S. R. The answers will be published from day to day on the last page of The DAILY WORKER. The first answers appearing today, answers the question, "How are the railways organized in the Soviet Union?" Tomorrow Secretary Amassow will answer the question, "What part is taken by the Railwaymen's Union in the management of the railroads and in what way is such participation expressed?"

BOSTON TENSE AS SACCO-VANZETTI DOOM HOUR NEARS

International Strikes and Meetings Continue

BOSTON, Aug. 2.—There was a gasping atmosphere in Boston in the last days before Gov. Fuller's decision. With Nicola Sacco hunger-striking to the last, and his friends demonstrating and appealing outside, the famous case was dramatically rushing to its climax.

Sacco and Vanzetti, arrested as two unknown Italian radicals in the red-hunting days of May, 1920, had become internationally famous symbols of American justice within 12 months. And Boston, with the eyes of the world upon it, was uneasily waiting the outcome.

Labor Unanimous.

Never has the labor movement so unanimously believed in the innocence of frame-up victims. The conservative American Federation of Labor denounced their conviction as a "ghastly miscarriage of justice" and demanded a new trial at three national conventions. Trade unions, socialist, communist and I. W. W. organizations continued to make an issue of the case here in America; and abroad there were strikes in South America; immense demonstrations in Latin Europe and appeals from the national labor and radical organizations of Germany, England and other countries.

Supported by Comintern.

And though Sacco and Vanzetti, as anarchists were out of line with the Communist Party the Third International launched a campaign in their behalf, as victims of class persecution.

The Sacco-Vanzetti case really began three months before their arrest when Palmer's Department of Justice sent a certain Stefanieni Ravarino to get the names of the Galleni anarchist group in New England. Pasaic as an extreme radical Ravarino hung about the Boston immigration office that had put out the group's weekly organ and got the names of Sacco and Vanzetti.

Tresca Exposes Spy.

Later in New York, until exposed by Carlo Tresca, he caused the arrest of two other Galleni anarchists, Salsedo and Elia and posted down the fact that America had seized New York in Salsedo's interest. Sacco and Vanzetti were arrested May 5 in Brockton, during a raid on a handbill announcing a "class traitors" meeting on their possession.

They had been murdered; his testimony, pitching 14 stories to death from the window of the Department of Justice rooms at 15 Park Row, N. Y.

Grilled as radicals for 56 hours Sacco and Vanzetti died. This consciousness of lies of their self-deportation enemy of their friends had been deported) was later interpreted by District Atty. Katzmann and Judge Thayer as "consciousness of guilt."

Thayer Biased.

Apparently as an after-thought, 36 hours after their arrest, Sacco and Vanzetti were charged with the charge of murdering a shoe company paymaster and guard at South Braintree, April 15. They were convicted by a prejudiced jurist and a prejudiced sheriff-picked jury July 14, 1921. Vanzetti had similarly been framed on an attempted hold-up charge and given 12 to 15 years.

After the trial the brilliant investigation work of Atty. Fred Moore, financed by the defense committee and father friend of the case, made amazing discoveries. Two state witnesses confessed to perjury; a third was shown to be a twice-time-served criminal and to have testified under a false name. Bribery charges and new defense eye witnesses completed the proof of the prisoners' innocence.

But Judge Thayer denied 86 new trial motions. Twice the state supreme court rejected appeals. The last appeal was based on the confession of Celestino Madeiros that he and the Morelli gang committed the murder. So the case went to Governor Fuller, who finally appointed an advisory commission of three—Prof. Lowell of Harvard; Pres. Stratton of Mass. Institute of Technology, and ex-Probate Judge Grant.

Girl Tried to Rob Bank To Pay Father's Debt

SAGINAW, Mich., Aug. 2.—Thelma Christler, the bob haired bandit, who tried to hold up the Peoples Savings Bank, was sentenced today to from 3 to 15 years in the Detroit house of correction. She pleaded guilty last week. Judge William H. Martin recommended three years.

Miss Christler told the court she attempted the robbery in order to pay off the mortgage on her father's home.

Lying Editor of the Washington Post in Another Dirty Game

WASHINGTON, Aug. 2. (FP).—Edward B. McLean, publisher of the Washington Post, is again mixed up in scandal. Implicated in the corruption of cabinet officials in the Teapot Dome mess, McLean is now accused of corrupting amateur sports by maintaining George Voigt, who is expected to carry off the amateur golf crown this year, unless barred from the national tournament as an outright professional.

An investigation by the U. S. Golf Assn. has uncovered these facts: Voigt resigned from government service in October, 1926 to become McLean's private secretary; he told friends that he "did not intend to do anything but play golf" and that he "did not have to do anything else"; his golf dues and traveling expenses are paid by McLean; McLean's private caddy serves Voigt in national competitions.

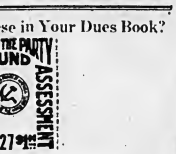
Pacific Labor Protests.

The secretariat of Pacific Labor Unions has just published a press protest against persecutions carried on against the labor and peasant movements on territory under the domination of the Wuhan government and against occupation by troops of the premises of labor organizations.

In order to counteract the widespread denunciation following the exposures of its anti-labor and counter-revolutionary policy the central executive committee of the Kuomintang, a group that has consistently violated during the past few weeks the principles of Sun Yat Sen, has published a sweeping order establishing a censorship over all printed works and has prohibited any adverse criticism of its treacherous policy.



Red Aid Protests.

MOSCOW, Aug. 2.—The International Red Relief Society has published an appeal inviting the masses of workers and farmers and their organizations to protest against outrages committed against the workers and peasants of China by the counter-revolutionaries and asking for the collection of funds to help the victims of the white terror.

Call MacMurray Home

WASHINGTON, August 2. — Minister MacMurray at Pekin has been summoned home by Secretary of State Kellogg to give an accounting of his handling of the situation in China.

DETROIT, Aug. 2.—Commander Richard E. Byrd's flight to the South Pole will be backed by Edsel B. Ford, the decision was announced today after a long conference between Byrd and Henry and Edsel Ford. The younger Ford will contribute an unnamed amount.

"THE ELECTRIC CHAIR IS READY!"

The closing sentence in a Sacco-Vanzetti report from Boston to the Hearst "Daily Mirror" of Monday stated that the "electric chair has been tested and found to be in condition for carrying out the executions on the date set."

Incredible as it may seem, after the world-wide protests against the carrying out of this fiendish conspiracy on the part of the agents of the Massachusetts industrials and the agents of the United States department of justice, all preparations are being made to burn the lives out of these victims just as the nothing at all were being done in their behalf. Just one more week remains until the fateful day. In a few hours we are promised the verdict of Governor Fuller, the millionaire auto magnate and labor-hater.

But we must never for a moment concede that the fate of these two victims of capitalism are in the hands of Fuller. The working class has thus far stayed the hand of the assassin and it is only the organized might of the working class here and in other countries that will finally free them, if they are freed.

The fight here must be extended to all enemies of Sacco and Vanzetti. Workers particularly should let the infamy of Massachusetts be known to everyone, and those reptile sheets of the type of the Hearst publications who brazenly lie when they tell us that "justice has been done," should be exposed for what they are by picket lines in front of every one of their plants in the whole land.

Let the contemptible apologists for murder of workers know the height to which the fury of the working class can arise!

GOV. FULLER TO GIVE SACCO-VANZETTI DECISION TO EXECUTIVE COUNCIL AT A SPECIAL MEETING

working class un-shaken. Nicola Sacco entered the seventeenth day of his hunger strike yesterday in Charlestown prison. According to Warden Hendry, Vanzetti is taking enough nourishment. This is being denied in authoritative quarters.

There is a tense atmosphere here as the hour of the decision rapidly closes in on the two condemned workers. An air of secrecy surrounds the State House where the deliberations are taking place. Reports of strikes and demonstrations thruout the world continue to pour in on the Sacco-Vanzetti Defense Committee.

The Committee yesterday vigorously gave the lie to the report that Vanzetti had been placed in a straight jacket. This was characterized as a low attempt to show that the two workers were malingering.

Dr. Joseph J. McLaughlin, the prison doctor, yesterday examined the framed-up radicals and refused to comment on their condition. Friends and sympathizers fear that the terrific nervous strain together with the horrors and ravages of the hunger strike is rapidly wearing them down.

With eyes of the entire world focused upon him Governor Fuller is spending his time hearing the ministrations of witnesses and visiting his son, Alvan, who is recovering from an operation in a local hospital.

Reports that Vanzetti had been placed in a straight jacket was categorically denied late yesterday by Deputy Warden James L. Hogsett of Charlestown prison.

Police Wound 1 in Lyons Protest.

LYONS, France, Aug. 2.—Shots were fired and many seriously hurt when police tried to interrupt a mass meeting, called by the Communist Party of France to protest the murder of Sacco and Vanzetti yesterday.

Thousands of demonstrators packing the hall stopped all street cars and traffic in the center of the city, the police charged the crowd. Missiles were thrown when the police drew their revolvers and fired upon the mass wounding four. Eight policemen were hurt. The leaders of the meeting were arrested.

More Argentine Meetings.

BUENOS AYRES, Aug. 1.—Three mass meetings were held here yesterday to demand the immediate and unconditional liberation of Sacco and Vanzetti. Speakers addressed thousands of demonstrators who flocked to the big meetings at which Massachusetts justice was characterized as corrupt, and asserted the workers' faith in the innocence of the two prisoners.

Put-burgh Protest.

PITTSBURGH, Pa., Aug. 2.—Labor meeting will be held here under the auspices of the Sacco and Vanzetti Defense Committee of Western Pennsylvania at the Moose Temple Auditorium, 628 Penn Ave., on Saturday afternoon, Aug. 6th, at 2:30 p. m. daylight saving time.

The committee which had planned to hold the meeting in Schenley Park was refused permission by the authorities.

Among the speakers who will address the gathering will be Peter Hanecak, Henry Goff, A. J. Muste, Will Van Essen, H. E. Kelley and Norbert Muscinic, who will speak in Italian.

Kelly Demands Release.

PHILADELPHIA, Pa., Aug. 2.—Declaring that if Christ were to appear on earth today he would be fingerprinted, registered and required to have an identification tag, Joe B. Kelly at a meeting of the delegates from labor and fraternal organizations to the Cambria County Council of the Society for the Protection of the Foreign Born at Moose Hall, introduced a resolution demanding the immediate liberation of Sacco and Vanzetti held for murder by the corrupt Massachusetts courts. The resolution was sent to Governor Fuller.

A resolution opposing the registration of the foreign born in this country was also passed.

The Spanish censorship forbids the publication of news regarding the Sacco-Vanzetti case, according to advices received here.

Amsterdam International Resolution.

BOSTON, Aug. 2. As the case neared the crisis, Gov. Fuller today received more of the communications with which he has been swamped since the fate of Sacco and Vanzetti was placed in his hands.

From France, Robert Underwood Johnson, United States ambassador to Italy in 1920 and 1921, called the governor urging clemency.

Johnson is editor of the Century magazine.

The fourth congress of International Federation Trade Unions, meeting in Paris, cabled that Sacco and Vanzetti should be liberated immediately. The cable message said that the American people will surely "not allow atrocious travesty justice bring on itself reprobation throughout the world."

SAVE SACCO AND VANZETTI AND THE DAILY WORKER, SLOGAN OF CHICAGO OPEN MEETING

By AIDA FLOMENBAUM.

Every time we have attempted to run an open air meeting something has come up, to prevent it. If the speakers were there the platform was missing, if the platform was there the speakers failed to show up.

However, the task was given to us and we decided to make it go. Now the second meeting has taken place with much greater success than ever before. How we did it? Here is the recipe:

We started the open air meeting two weeks ago on the corner of Wilkins and Interstate Avenues without even one speaker and without a platform on the place. As Branch Org. I was there and had reported the meeting to the Police headquarters, so that if the meeting took place we should not be disturbed, by our protecters of the law. Within a short time some of those guys were there, however. I found myself in a predicament as there was not one speaker present, no platform and was getting late.

As I was about to get discouraged, I noticed two comrades bringing the platform, but was soon told that they were to run this meeting under the auspices of the Women's Council. This did not stop me from forming a United Front with them, and drafting a comrade as he passed by to act as chairman, we started the meeting.

After introducing the meeting under the auspices of the Workers Communist Party, Our comrades from the audience volunteered to speak, though not prepared. But as members of the Communist Party, being "Always Ready," we attracted a crowd big enough to draw the rest of Wilkins and Interstate Avenues.

The first topic was Sacco and Vanzetti, who by this time are deeply rooted in the hearts and minds of every class conscious worker. The crowd was vitally interested to hear of the contemptible steps taken by the yellow socialists, who attempted to destroy the Sacco and Vanzetti demonstration, for their petty selfish ends, not considering the lifes of the two innocent workers.

The premier recently celebrated his sixty-third birthday.

Stephenson Wire to Subordinate Shows Watson Implicated

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind., Aug. 2.—D. C. Stephenson, former ruler of Indiana political affairs, who fell to a convict's cell, stepped to the front in behalf of Edward A. Rumely, one time owner of the New York Daily Mail, convicted for making a false return under the alien property act, according to a copy of a telegram purported to have been sent by Stephenson, and released for publication today.

Had Real Power.

The telegram was brought forward by persons interested in probing alleged political corruption in Indiana as evidence that Stephenson's power was not mythical.

Senator James Watson testified before the Senator James A. Reed slush fund committee that he had practically no dealings with Stephenson.

Out to Watson at once through your friends in Indiana and have Watson see the president in behalf of Dr. Edward A. Rumely who was prosecuted just after the war to terminally for trumped-up charge of violating the alien property law but in fact as a result of the deepest and most selfish bitterness of Wilson and Palmer against the republican party. Rumely is a native born American born in Indiana and was Roosevelt's closest friend and a thorough patriot. Have Watson and Ralston the late senator see the president tomorrow. Senator Samuel M. Ralston of Indiana must not fail to see that these get down the line to the limit on the job. Were me in care of Borglum division Borglum, famous sculptor at Stone-hurst that this has been done and give me result of your work. After all only results count. D. C. Stephenson."

"Palmer" was used by the A. Mitchell Palmer, former alien property custodian during President Wilson's administration.

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind., Aug. 2.—Governor Ed Jackson, the chief suspect of D. C. Stephenson, was called yesterday on the return from Mexico where he had gone for the purpose of hearing the Stephenson's many accusations.

There was no reply from the governor to Stephenson's statement that Jackson had sanctioned a certain explanation of evidence said to have been submitted by "Steve" when he appeared before the Marion County Grand Jury Saturday.

Jury Sends Documents.

With precedence that action would come from the grand jury in September, that body today took up the wearisome, albeit interesting, recital of Stephenson's alleged records of his transactions with the politically great of Hoosierdom.

There are thousands of pages of recorded testimony and exact papers and documents to be read and evaluated by the jurors before the Marion County criminal court is ready to resume its session in September after vacation.

Steve Talked.

What Stephenson's testimony Saturday added to the investigation is an unknown quantity. The former ruler of politics is believed to have talked circumspectly to the jurors for five hours.

It is certain the special prosecutor will endeavor to thwart the statute of limitations, which might prevent criminal prosecution for many of Stephenson's former playmates. The prosecutors believe they can prove attempts to suborn evidence have been used on existing evidence which would nullify the statute that made political crimes after 10 years.

Politics Professor Intimates U. S. May Set Up a Mussolini

WILLIAMSTOWN, Mass., Aug. 2.—What Napoleon did in France Mussolini seems to be doing in Italy, establishing an autocracy, Prof. Henry R. Spencer, of Ohio State University, asserted here today before the Institute of Politics.

Long continued political apathy and indifference to public affairs in America in time might produce a Mussolini, Spencer said, and he then began to cautiously praise the work of such tyrants.

Benito of course, in Spencer's opinion has ruled too long, but he created by this that some such strong arm methods might be all right in "preserve order" in U. S.

MINERS PARADE IN PROTEST FOR SACCO-VANZETTI

Cappellini Tries to Sabotage Work

PITTSTON, Pa., Be Mail.:- More than three thousand miners paraded in a driving rain thru the streets of Pittston Sunday in a protest against the execution of Sacco and Vanzetti. Hundreds of colorful and striking banners, signs, together with two big bands made of the affair a striking demonstration of the solidarity of the miners with Sacco and Vanzetti.

In the morning, over five hundred delegates, representing more than fifty local unions of the United Mine Workers of America and eighty auxiliaries, lodges, etc. assembled in the State Armory in the second conference of the Anthracite Sacco and Vanzetti Conference.

Fuller Evades Committee.

A committee, after transacting some business of reports of the Washington trip to Boston to interview Governor Fuller. The report stated that the committee failed to see Governor Fuller, he being out of town at the time, but succeeded in having a session with Mr. Johnson the Governor's Secretary.

The conference, adopted a motion unanimously to endorse the work started, and to call a mass meeting. Another motion was adopted which was telegraphed to Governor Fuller. The conference also sent to Sacco and Vanzetti a telegram of greetings.

Anthony Ramaglino, representing the New York Socialist Vanzetti Defense Committee addressed the conference. His speech pointed out the necessity of immediate and drastic action by the working class of the United States if Sacco and Vanzetti are to be saved. While Ramaglino was speaking, Cappellini, district president of the Miners' Union unexpectedly entered the hall.

A motion was made that the views of the various aspects of the case this conference elect a committee of three to confer with Ben Rinaldo Cappellini for the purpose of having a general strike of the district miners called as a protest against the execution.

A supplementary motion was made that in the meantime, this conference investigated by and affiliated with the Labor Party, a strike be called for wednesday August 10th.

Cappellini Tries Sabotage.

Cappellini immediately rose and spoke against the motion vigorously. His contention was that he, as president, was in no way authorized to call strikes. A heated way, he suggested that the matter be left to the various locals for their decision. However, spread so rapidly that Cappellini and his adherents were forced to withdraw their opposition and demanded strike, strike.

Forced to Retreat.

Cappellini then retreated to the every last local on strike, then decided at last day, but just stay home that was all the right to do as an Advertising Agency to stay home. Whereupon Cappellini rose and began to strike at this point between two factions of the conference, and for the preservation of unity of the conference and the work itself, the united delegates Group Leaders amended motion in addition "to refer to the Executive Committee for ratification." Several attempts by Cappellini himself, thumping on a table, singled out an individual in the audience and attempted to throw the conference in an uproar. Only for the persuasion of the Chairman and the Executive Committee, seated at the platform, was the disruptive element avoided.

Cappellini's Disgusting Speech.

In his speech at the demonstration in the Park, Cappellini stated to the disgust of those assembled "what is the use of criticizing Fuller, I salvage, Massachusetts, etc., we must beg them, plead with them, go, get down on our knees to them." Enthusiasm is answer stated Pres. "I declare, because how we workers? bodies rankle I have no ax to grind, no one want to beg, we are a class that need only to on our knees, we must fight. The entire park cheered.

The Park Demonstration Parade was 25 cars long, 3 bands and many other city officials joined the parade in automobiles. The Mayor's proclamation declaring the day a holiday was also read. The parade ended with a mass meeting at the park meeting.

The Resolution of the Comintern on the American Question

Endorsed by the Presidium of the Executive Committee of the Communist International, July 1, 1927

IN this sense the demonstrations organized by the Party in connection with events in China in front of the British Embassy and Consulates were right and a proper move.

But the writer of some of the editorials in The DAILY WORKER (May 7 and 8) deviated from this line of action by minimizing the predatory role of American imperialism in China and by representing it one-sidedly only as a tool of British imperialism.

THE Workers (Communist) Party has put the question of the recognition of the Soviet Union more energetically in the trade unions and in this way also fight against the pro-imperialist policies of the labor bureaucracy.

IN its struggle against American imperialism, the Workers (Communist) Party must not overlook the question of the war and post-war debts of the capitalist states of Europe to the United States. Without getting into the leading strings of the petty-bourgeois politicians and without allotting these questions first place, the Party must actively support the international revolutionary struggles against the whole system of imperialist "peace" treaties, the Dawes Plan, and the financial policies of the imperialists from all of which the question of our debts is inseparable.

The attitude of the Workers (Communist) Party can only be for the cancellation of war debts; naturally not for the cancellation of the inter-allied debts, but of all debts of the last imperialist world war. However, it is not the task of the Workers (Communist) Party to carry on a special, separate struggle under this slogan, but it must combine this question with its general struggle against American imperialism.

All these questions must be utilized by the Party to rally the broad masses in defense of the Soviet Union and the Chinese revolution and to sever the masses from the imperialist ideology of the bourgeoisie and the labor bureaucracy. At the same time the Party must understand that in view of its numerical weakness it can not act as a center of attraction for the broad masses only when it has complete unity.

2. The Development of the Revolutionary Movement in America.

THE peculiar situation in the United States creates greater difficulties for the development of the revolutionary labor movement than in any other industrial country. A great rise is not to be expected in the nearest future. However, strikes and mass struggles of a predominantly economic character are occurring.

These struggles are frequently fought with great persistence and bitterness and greatly contribute to the radicalization of broad sections of workers. These struggles (the miners' strikes, the strike in the needle trades, Passaic) have a breach in the class collaboration policy of the trade union bureaucrats.

These class conflicts give our Party increased opportunities to attract by active participation and leadership, increasing sections of the workers and create gradually a basis for a Communist mass Party.

AMERICAN imperialism is still in a position to provide for a large section of the working class a comparatively high standard of living. In comparison with the position of the workers in European capitalist countries, the American working class as a whole still occupies a privileged position. What Engels wrote to Marx in 1858 about the bourgeoisification of the British proletariat may be applied to a certain extent even today to the American working class.

> "The English proletariat is actually becoming more and more bourgeois, so much so that it appears that this most bourgeois of all nations evidently wants to bring things about to the point where it will have a bourgeois aristocracy and bourgeois proletariat alongside of the bourgeoisie. Of course this is to a certain extent natural on the part of a nation exploiting the whole world."

This is ONE of the most important reasons for the backwardness of the American labor movement.

A considerable stratum of skilled and privileged workers has developed in the U. S. A. on the basis of its powerful imperialism with gigantic surplus profits. In no other country is the labor aristocracy as numerous as in the U. S. A. At the same time, in no other country is the gulf so great as in the United States between the skilled organized native workers who receive high wages and enjoy political rights and the mass of unskilled unorganized foreign-born workers who have no political rights.

NOT only by means of high wages, and a high standard of living, but also thru a cunning system of privileges and favoritism, (purchase of shares, etc.) imperialism has been able to bribe a considerable section of the skilled workers and thus to draw them to its side.

Together with the most venal and corrupt trade union bureaucracy of the world which has become an integral part of the capitalist apparatus of oppression, the labor aristocracy is still playing a predominating role in the official labor movement. The result of this is the numerical impoverishment of very considerable sections of the whole working class, suppression in trade unio class consciousness and in millions of workers following the capitalist parties.

ALTHO with the rise of this section of skilled workers American imperialism has developed to its highest degree, the development of the class struggle is still in not powerful enough to overthrow the capitalist working class, for its attempts in the economic struggle are subject to the great limitations of the present-day world conditions.

The United States [illegible] Europe formerly was, the most important factor in the whole world. Today we have to reckon with the existence of the Soviet Union. In a number of big capitalist countries in Europe the proletarian revolution draws near.

The struggle of the oppressed peoples from the imperialist yoke is developing in Asia. In Latin America [illegible] American imperialism is increasing. The rivalry among the imperialist powers for the possessions of capital, capital, for spheres of influence, markets, sources of raw material and for the domination of strategical positions is becoming ever more sharp, thereby the antagonisms among them increase continually.

Along with a whole series of other important factors these are the main reasons why American imperialism cannot succeed in corrupting the labor aristocracy for decades as was possible in Great Britain. American capitalism is still on the upward grade of development. Notwithstanding its growing power American imperialism as one of the most important component parts of world capitalism is drawn more and more into the antagonisms and crisis of the latter because of its close connection with the capitalist world economy.

"Altho American capitalism is still playing to a certain extent a stabilizing role within world capitalism, it is nevertheless making imperialist antagonisms more acute. The time is approaching when the crises of world capitalism will also extend to the United States of America, will lower the standard of living of the privileged sections of the working class as a whole, and will thus lay the foundation for a revolutionary mass movement.

We see already in spite of the corruption of a numerically limited section of the working class thru a petty-bourgeois standard of living, simultaneously the application of a system of intensive exploitation of the mass of unskilled and semi-skilled, of the foreign born and Negro workers. In America, too, there are millions of workers living in slums, tenements and miserable hovels.

In these districts under the direct control of the trusts in the coal and steel centres and in the oil districts, the workers are exposed to the oppression and terror of a brutal system of industrial slavery. In no country in the world are workers so rapidly used up as in the United States.

EVEN if the wages of American workers are higher than in European capital countries, the Party must realize that the reduction of wages in America to the level of other capitalist countries is not the premise for the development of mass movement. In view of the peculiar historical development of America a relatively small reduction in the standard of living of the American working class can be the signal for big class struggles.

This is well-known to the employers and their allies—the trade union bureaucrats. They therefore try to bribe larger sections of the working class thru the application of special methods, thru the development of a special American system for deceiving the workers, and thereby tie them up with the capitalist system and make them interested in its continuance. They try to destroy the solidarity of the workers thru promoting deep divisions in the camp of the working class and thus depriving the latter of its fighting capacity. Under the deceptive slogan "high-er strategy of labor" the trade union leaders and the leading bourgeois economists have developed out of their political, economic and financial collaboration of a general reformist system.

They are the advocates of increased production and are the agents of the capitalist rationalization process in the factories. They try to make the working class believe that by investing their savings in labor banks and thru purchasing stocks the workers can gain influence control over, or even ownership of capitalist industry.

This special form of American reformism openly denies the class struggle and continually subordinates the interests of the working class to those of the employers and their allies—the trade union bureaucrats. Thru spreading dangerous illusions among the workers the class ideology and organization of the latter are weakened. Hitherto the capitalists and the trade union bureaucrats have succeeded in keeping away the mass of the American proletariat from independent political action. Thereby the trade union leaders have been able to increase their power over large sections of the organized workers and to bind them with stronger ties to the capitalist system.

The Workers (Communist) Party must ruthlessly expose this so-called "higher strategy of labor" as a deception of the working class and carry on an energetic struggle against this bourgeoisification.

For this reason the Party should pay the maximum attention to all the manifestations of the ideological corruption of the working class and particularly to those which made their appearance recently; it must study them in order to be able to launch the most effective struggle against them. This is all the more important because a number of other capitalist countries are adopting along with the introduction of American technical methods definite methods of corruption of sections of the working class (welfare schemes, company unions, etc.). In addition to this the bureaucracy of the Amsterdam International is attempting by drawing in the conservative A. F. of L. to drive the entire trade union movement still further to the Right.

IN addition to a broad ideological counter-campaign the Party must adopt a number of effective measures for bringing every-increasing sections of workers into the most intense opposition to the capitalists and the trade union bureaucrats and for making the proletariat adopt an independent class policy. As much measures should be considered.

Increased struggles for the establishment of a political mass-party of the working class, independent of all capitalist parties, of a "Labor Party". Strengthening of the ranks of the Workers (Communist) Party. In order to accomplish the formation of a Labor Party by no means only but also organizationally, the Party should form local and state committees composed of Left Wing and progressive trade unionists. Such committees should be won for this work as soon as broad enough basis has been created, the Party must make the initiative in the calling of a National Labor Party which should work out a platform for a Labor Party, then the calling of a national convention for the Labor Party, or a referendum, a United Front Party. These are existing basic facts which must be utilized. If this mass basis is not attained, then the Workers (Communist) Party must be a candidate after the elections campaign. Thereupon local, state and national elections campaign. The Party must concentrate great attention on these campaigns. These have a growing importance for awakening of the workers to independent political action and for linking up the Party more closely to the masses.

THE Party must carry on the struggle against the reactionary trade union bureaucrats, for the transformation of the unions into militant organizations and for the widening of their basis thru the organization of the unorganized masses. The economic struggles of the workers must be developed, extended and intensified by the Party, in order to increase the class solidarity of the masses.

The Party must oppose the reactionary government as an executive organ of the imperialist trust and finance capital, as an enemy of the working class who in every struggle supports the bourgeoisie with all the means at his disposal and as an instrument for the oppression of colonial peoples and for fomenting new wars.

In order to expose the anti-labor character of the institutions of trade union capitalism (labor banks, trade union insurance corporations, etc.) to undermine the confidence of the workers in these institutions and to free the labor movement from their disintegrating effects, the Party must also put onward other specific proposals in accordance with the concrete circumstances. To this category of proposals belong: struggle for social legislation administered by the unions. This struggle must be carried on with the understanding that these unions are by-products of the revolutionary struggle for social legislation is not, in itself, an effective weapon against bourgeois-ization.

At the same time, the Party must build a counter-action of a powerful genuine working class co-operative movement which must be closely connected with the class struggle of the proletarian movement. All measures must be taken in order to eliminate the influence of the reformist labor bureaucracy and to place [illegible] the hands of Communists and other [illegible] workers.

THE freezing of the trade unions on trade union capitalism and the gradual [illegible] of the trade unions from the basis [illegible] an important premise for the development of the trade unions into fighting organizations. The Party must develop concrete methods of [illegible] in order to develop effective resistance against the [illegible] up of the trade unions and labor [illegible]. Whenever it appears evident that the mobilization of the masses for resistance to trade union [illegible] in the form of labor banks can be [illegible] demanding the transformation of the [illegible] into co-operative labor banks under the [illegible] control of and direction by the workers [illegible] to push forward such proposals, relating them with other concrete demands in their agitation and move effectively counteracting, thereby, the disintegrating of the reactionary trade union [illegible]. But the Party must certainly not allow this to be carried away by illusions in regard to the possibility of such a transformation of the labor banks, which may be possible only in a few individual cases. It would be a mistake for the Party to put the questions in the foreground of its work.

The Party must also [illegible] expose labor banks which pretend [illegible] co-operative banks, but which are in reality only bound up with the big capitalist banks. Where the possibility exists and where it seems advisable, and after making the economic basis sound by negotiations thereby secure, co-operative banks controlled by the workers themselves can be established in order to use the means at the disposal of the workers for strengthening the material basis of the labor movement. Under no circumstances can labor banks raised in this manner be used for anti-proletarian aims, [illegible] must rather be used for building up of a powerful workers' co-operative movement, and to [illegible] the interests of the working class, as a principle, granting loans to the Soviet Union.

Declaration of the Political Committee on "The American Question"

RESOLUTION ADOPTED BY THE PRESIDIUM OF THE EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE OF THE COMMUNIST INTERNATIONAL

THE Political Committee declares its complete acceptance of the resolution of the E. C. C. I. on the present situation in our Party. We propose to execute this decision without reservation. We feel confident that the entire Party membership will have the same attitude towards the decision of the Communist International.

THE Political Committee does not consider this decision from the point of view of any group. We view this decision solely from the viewpoint of the Party. The Political Committee does not hold the decision of the Communist International to be a victory of any group over any other group or combination of groups. The Political Committee welcomes this decision precisely because it considers the decision as a hundred per cent victory for the Party and as against the idea of the hegemony of any special group or collection of groups.

WE ask the membership to consider the C. I. decision only in this light. We call upon the membership not to approach the interpretation or application of this decision in any way at all in the spirit of victor over vanquished.

THE resolution of the E. C. C. I. goes a long way towards clarifying the Party's position and eliminating disagreement on such basic questions as the struggle against American imperialism and the war danger, our fundamental trade union problems, the united front tactics, bourgeoisification, as well as the attitude of the Communist International towards the various groupings in our Party.

THE Political Committee asks every member of the Party to study carefully the resolution of the Executive Committee of the Comintern.

THE Political Committee greets the organization recommendations of the Communist International, especially the provisions for the holding of the convention, because we are of the opinion that these measures help to stabilize the Party and make it possible for the Convention to take effective steps to abolish factionalism, to unify the Party and to establish a broad collective leadership representative of all sections of the country and inclusive of a number of additional proletarian elements.

THE Politcal Committee accepts and agrees with the criticism of its past inner line made by the Communist International when it said:

> "The majority of the Party Executive did not sufficiently understand how to create such a condition of affairs as to bring about an amalgamation with the forces which are today in opposition. . . It is clear that the Majority of the Political Committee followed a too narrow course within the Party and themselves essentially contributed to the continued existence of fraction walls."

THE Political Committee feels that in accepting this and in correcting itself in this respect, it further strengthens itself for achieving the task of leading the Party to complete unity and mass work.

AT the same time the Political Committee is certain that the comrades of the Opposition will wholeheartedly accept and agree with the criticism made of them by the Communist International when it said:

> "The Opposition Groups must cease their factional methods."

WE are sure that the comrades of the opposition will, as the Comintern says:

> "Endeavor by their attitude to facilitate unity with the Majority of the Political Committee before and at the Party Convention."

THE Political Committee draws the attention of the Party to the agreement arrived at by the representatives of the existing Party groupings for the unification of our Party. We point out the great help to the Party in the line laid down in the following sections of this agreement which indicate the trend to the unification of the Party:

> "The first and most important prerequisite for the merging of all the factions is the coming nearer and the unification of the two main historical currents in the Party which, until now have stood most sharply against each other; the Majority of the Polburoau and the Group of Comrade Foster. We pledge ourselves to convince the entire Party of the need of such a step and to avoid any actions which would hinder this development.
> "At the same time we will make every effort in order to bring about a complete merger with the Weinstone-Cannon group also. This group likewise must work with all its power for the accomplishment of unity between the Majority of the Polcom and the group of Comrade Foster, with the aim to merge itself also with the other groups. Against the Cannon-Weinstone group there should be no struggle carried on any more than against the other groups. We are of the opinion that the leading forces of all three groups can work together as they contain in their ranks complementary elements."

THE Central Executive Committee considers it of great help and very fortunate for the Party that today there is the basis for any dispute for the Party over the interpretation of the decision of the Comintern. All disputes or struggles in our ranks over interpreting the Comintern decision are unnecessary in view of the following supplementary declaration of the American Sub-Commission of the Presidium of the Communist International regarding the line it has been following towards our Party:

> "The following paragraph was adopted by the American Sub-Commission of the Presidium with the purpose to be embodied into the agreement of the American comrades as a statement on the policy followed by the Executive Committee of the Communist International toward the different groups in the American Party:
> "The Comintern recognizes that in many political questions the Ruthenberg Group followed a more correct line in the past than the Foster Group. Because of this the Comintern has generally been supporting politically the Ruthenberg Group. On the other hand the Comintern had to protect organizationally the Foster Group from the Ruthenberg Group. Because the Executive had the opinion that the leading group of the Majority of the Polcom had not sufficiently understood how to estimate the full significance of the trade union forces in the Party and that Comrade Foster at that time was more correct on many questions of the trade union tactics, the line of the Comintern has been on the whole for the political support of the Ruthenberg Group and for bringing Foster nearer to the general political line of the Ruthenberg Group, at the same time, however, following the course towards the correction of the trade union line of the Ruthenberg Group on the line of Foster thru closest co-operation in the Party leadership."

COMRADES, the time for factionalism and group struggle in our Party is over. Already in the American Commission, the representatives of the various groups agreed that:

> "the unity of the Workers (Communist) Party is now more than ever an imperative necessity. The international situation, the ever-increasing war danger, the increasing attacks of the government and the reactionary trade union bureaucracy demand the consolidation of all the forces of the Party for the fulfillment of the great tasks which are before the Party.
> "The unity of the Party can be achieved only thru the liquidation of the existing groups and factions, the cessation of the factional struggle and the amalgamation of the Party into one unified whole. We pledge ourselves to work in this direction with all our power and without any reservations."

ON the basis of the C. I. decision and with the support of the members of all the former groupings which have outlived their usefulness, we propose to unify the Party. The enemies of our Party cannot take heart at our previous differences. As Communists we can, until a final decision is arrived at by the highest Party authority, differ with each other and engage in vigorous political discussion without in the slightest impairing our Party's spirit or capacity for facing and fighting the common enemy.

UNTIL the Convention the Party will engage in a discussion. The Polcom desires and guarantees a discussion in a Communist, in a comradely manner, of the various problems confronting our Party. Personal recriminations, insults, attacks, rumors, gossip, a factional spirit and a group attitude are all out of place and impermissible in this discussion. We must all discuss as members of one world revolutionary proletarian Party in a constructive spirit, in an effort to improve the capacity of all of us as Communist fighters and not in the least to undermine the effectiveness of any Party member regardless of his or her past group allignments.

THE Presidium of the E. C. C. I. has declared.

> "The Presidium recognizes that despite great objective difficulties the Party has recently made important progress in many fields of activities.
> "In the trade union field the Party has achieved quite a number of successes expressed in the increasing influence of the Left Wing in important unions (the Miners' Union and Needle Trades) and in initiating and leading big strikes. The increasing influence of the Party and of the Left Wing has called forth an offensive of the corrupt trade union bureaucracy as a result of which these are made far-reaching demands on the tactical adroitness of the Workers (Communist) Party."

COMRADES, we have many difficult tasks and problems before us. Great responsibility rests upon all of us. The Communist International has correctly said that:

> "The Party must understand that in view of its numerical weakness it can act as a center of attraction for the broad masses only when it has complete unity."

* * *

THE Communist International has thru its resolution, the various cabled declarations, and its supplementary decision made it much easier for the Polcom to be able to lead the Party towards complete unification. What is now most necessary is the full support of the entire membership for the unification of the Party. The surest road to the ending of all factionalism, to the liquidation of all existing groups, to the establishment of a broad collective leadership, to the further and complete unification of our Party, is to be found in the reserved support of the decisions and line of the Communist International, in fully supporting the Polcom under whose leadership the Party has made great headway in consolidating its ranks and in mass work.

Forward to a unified Communist Party!

Let us redouble our efforts in all our Party campaigns!

Forward to a mass Communist Party in the United States under the leadership of the Communist International!

3. Trade Union Work.

IN the trade union field the Party has achieved quite a number of successes expressed in the increasing influence of the Left Wing in important unions (the miners' union and needle trades) and in initiating and leading big strikes. The increasing influence of the Party and of the Left Wing has called forth an offensive of the corrupt trade union bureaucracy as a result of which there are made far-reaching demands on the inclinel aibroitness of the Workers (Communist) Party.
